WEDNESDAY.—Court of Chancery (Ireland) Bill.—The ATTORNEY GENERAL for IRELAND moved that the House should on Thursday go into committee, for the purpose of considering what course ought to be taken with reference to this Bill, in consequence of a division having been unexpectedly taken at the morning sitting on Tuesday, when the Bill was in committee, which led to the Chairman leaving the chair without reporting progress.—Mr LOWE opposed the motion, and said that, whenever a motion that the Chairman should leave the chair was adopted, it was always understood that the Bill was lost.—Mr BUTT supported, and Mr WHITESIDE opposed the motion.—The SPEAKER cited several precedents in favour of the motion. The Bill was in the same position as if the House had been counted out upon the order of the day, and it was quite optional to renew it. The motion was then agreed to.—On the order for going into committee on the Joint Stock Companies (Voting Papers) Bill, Mr. CRAUFURD moved that the Bill be committed that day three months: but, after a reply from Mr. GRIFFITH, he withdrew this motion, and the House went into committee upon the Bill. During the debate on the first clause, Mr. PEACOCKE moved that the Chairman leave the chair. On a division, this motion was carried by 76 to 49. The House then went again into committee upon the Weights and Measures (Metric System) Bill, taking up the discussion at the new clauses, including the substituted schedule of tables of values of the denominations of weights and measures on the metric system, expressed by means of the legalised denominations, the new clauses being framed in concurrence with the Government. The clauses and schedule were agreed to, after considerable discussion.—Sir J. HAY moved the second reading of the Bank of England Notes (Scotland) Bill. He explained that its object was to make Bank of England notes a legal tender in Scotland, where there was no legal tender other than gold, and pointed out the great commercial conveniences that would be the result of the measure.—Mr. FINLAY moved that the Bill be read a second time that day three months.—Mr. K. HODGSON, Governor of the Bank of England, suggested that, as the proposition involved wider questions of much importance, Sir J. Hay would do well not to press his measure.—Sir T. COLEBROOKE, Sir A. AGNEW, Mr. DALGLISH, and Mr. HANKEY, also stated objections to the Bill.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said that the opinion of the House was clearly not favourable to the Bill. The question could not be considered apart from the establishment of branch Banks of England in Scotland. An objection lying at the root of it was that it belonged to a state of things entirely different and remote from the existing state of things regarding the circulation of the three countries, and legislation upon so difficult a subject required to be carefully digested and matured. After some further discussion Sir J. HAY withdrew the Bill, expressing a hope that the Government would next Session bring in a general Bill on the subject. On the Order for going into Committee upon the Jersey Court Bill, Mr. LOCKE explained that its object was to reform the constitution and practice of the royal court in that dependency.—Sir G. GREY said that the States of Jersey had expressed their readiness to introduce the necessary reforms without the intervention of Parliament, and recommended that the Bill should be withdrawn to give them an opportunity of so doing.—Mr. PAULL moved as an amendment that the States of Jersey be heard by their counsel, and be allowed to adduce evidence at the bar in opposition to the Bill.—On the motion of Mr. AYRTON the debate was adjourned. The Superannuation (Union Officers) Bill, the Pilotage Order Confirmation Bill, the Pier and Harbour Orders Confirmation Bill, and the Countess of Elgin's Annuity Bill were read a third time and passed.

THURSDAY.—The Conference.—There was a very numerous attendance of members, in anticipation of hearing a statement from Lord Palmerston, who on entering the House shortly before half-past 4 o'clock, was loudly cheered.—Mr. DISRAELI inquired whether the Government had any communication to make to the House respecting the meeting of the Conference on Wednesday.—Lord PALMERSTON said the question was a very natural one, and that he was well aware that the great anxiety felt by the House and the country was such as to entitle them to some communication on the subject from her Majesty's Government. The Conference met on the previous afternoon after the Levée, and adjourned until Saturday, when it would meet at an earlier hour. The probability was that it would be the last and final meeting, and it would become his duty, and that of his noble friend at the head of the Foreign Office, to lay on the table all the papers relating to the proceedings of the Conference (including, he hoped, those of Saturday), and to accompany them by a statement connected with the transactions to which they related.—Mr. WARD HUNT asked whether the Conference would meet on Saturday for the purpose of deliberating further, or merely to go through formalities.—Lord PALMERSTON said he had already stated that in his opinion the meeting of Saturday would probably be final. It was, however, impossible for him to tell until the meeting was over what would take place, but on Monday next he would state all he knew.—Mr. DISRAELI concluded that the Government would place the papers in the hands of members on Tuesday next.—Lord PALMERSTON replied that his impression was that the papers would be distributed to members the first thing on Tuesday morning.—Mr. CRAWFORD then moved the second reading of the Weighing of Corn (Port of London) Bill. He urged that the corporation were entitled by prescription, ancient charter, and usage to levy certain fees on the weighing of all the grain that came into the port of London, and that, as the measure essentially affected the public interest, it ought to be treated as a public and not as a private bill.—Mr. AYRTON moved, as an amendment, "That, inasmuch as the Bill sought to enlarge and alter the powers of the Corporation of the City of London to levy a rate or duty, and to alter existing rates and duties, on grain and seeds imported into the port of London for the use and benefit of the Corporation, the House was of opinion that the Bill ought not to be proceeded with until the standing orders relating to private Bills be duly complied with.—Colonel W. PATTEN asked the Speaker to decide whether the Bill ought to proceed as a public or private one.—The SPEAKER said there were many precedents for treating it as a public Bill, but that he thought it ought to be referred to a select committee.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said the Government were determined to treat the Bill on its merits only.—Alderman ROSE defended the corporation.—After some debate, Mr. AYRTON withdrew his amendment, and the Bill was read a second time and referred to a select committee.—The adjourned debate on Sir HUGH CAIRNS' motion, objecting to certain assistance afforded under the rules of the Board of National Education in Ireland to convent and monastic schools, was resumed by the O'CONNOR DON, who spoke at some length against the motion.—Mr. BLACK supported the motion.—Mr. HENNESSY moved, as an amendment, to omit the words relating to convent and monastic schools from the resolution, in order to make it general in its terms.—Mr. BLAKE seconded the amendment.—Sir R. PEEL opposed both the motion and the amendment, which were, he said, attacks on the National system.—After some remarks from Mr. G. HARDY, Mr. MAGUIRE, Mr. BUTT, and Mr. LEFROY, the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said that the history of the national system of education in Ireland was that of a series of modifications, the object of which was to conciliate, support, and make the system as universally acceptable as possible, and he denied that any exceptional favour had been shown to convent schools. The same favour had been offered to other schools, and accepted by the Presbyterians; and if it had been refused by the Episcopalians, they had themselves only to blame.—After a reply from Sir H. CAIRNS, and some observations from the ATTORNEY-GENERAL for IRELAND and Mr. WHITESIDE, the House divided, when the amendment was negatived by 112 to 8. A division was then taken on the original motion, which was also negatived by 91 to 59.

FRIDAY.—Naval Reserve.—In answer to Mr. HANKEY, Lord C. PAGET said that in future the privilege of carrying the blue ensign would be allowed to merchant vessels commanded and partly manned by officers and men of the Royal Naval Reserve. Excise on Malt.—On the order for going into Committee of Supply, Mr. MORRITT moved a resolution that in the event of any modification of the indirect taxation, the excise on malt required consideration.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER agreed to the propriety of the resolution in the abstract, but said it would be unadvisable to pledge the House to any particular course of action in dealing with the remission of a specific impost.—Lord J. MANNERS supported the motion.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

DESTRUCTION OF THE ALABAMA.—A naval action took place on Sunday morning off Cherbourg between the Confederate cruiser Alabama and the Federal corvette Kearsarge. The Alabama had arrived at Cherbourg during the week from a two years' cruise, and obtained permission from the French authorities to repair in dock. As soon as her arrival was known the Kearsarge was despatched to the French coast for the purpose of preventing her putting to sea again. In spite, however, of the bad condition of the Alabama, and the superior weight of metal of the Kearsage, Captain Semmes, her commander, determined to accept the challenge, but he was not aware that the Kearsarge was plated with chain cables over her outside planking. Having therefore obtained permission to take in coal, he left the harbour, accompanied by the English steam yacht Deerhound, having previously sent on shore an iron chest containing specie, 60 chronometers, and other valuables. The French plated ship of war Couronne followed them out of harbour and stopped when the vessels were a league off the coast, her object being to see that there was no violation of the law of nations by any fight taking place within the legal distance from land. The Alabama had not steamed far before she encountered the Kearsarge, and the engagement began at 10 minutes after 11. The crew of the Kearsarge consisted of 150 men, that of the Alabama consisted of 120; and the Kearsarge carried two 100-pounders, the Alabama carrying no guns of that calibre. The Alabama commenced firing with her starboard battery, the distance between the contending vessels being about one mile. The Kearsarge immediately replied with her starboard guns; a very sharp, spirited firing was then kept up, shot sometimes being varied by shells. In manœuvring both vessels made seven complete circles at a distance of from a quarter to half a mile. Shortly after the action commenced a shot from the Kearsarge killed three men on board the Alabama, cutting them to pieces, and a second shot wounded three more men and killed another, while a third shot carried away the blade of the Alabama's fan and part of the rudder on her deck, disabling a gun, and causing much damage. Below and forward her compartments were all carried away, and the fire-room was filled with water. The Alabama fought under sail, first using her starboard battery and afterwards her port battery. She continued the engagement until the muzzles of her guns were under water, and one part of her deck was covered with dead and wounded. At this time she had received at least from 15 to 20 shots in her hull alone, and had seven or eight killed and 10 or 11 wounded, and was besides rapidly filling with water. Before giving up the action, she endeavoured to reach the French shore, distant about 9 miles, and hoisted what sail she had left—but it was of no avail; the water was filling the ship so rapidly as already to cause her to heel over to one side, and was putting out the fires of the engines. She therefore ceased fighting and lowered her boats, in which the dead and wounded were placed. Shortly afterwards she settled slowly by the stern and sank, the officers and crew jumping into the sea, when the Kearsarge's boats rowed up, and with the assistance of a French pilot boat, succeeded in picking up the remaining survivors of the Alabama, who are said to number about 60 men. The officer in command of the boats inquired for Semmes, and was told that he was drowned, whereas he had already been picked up by the yacht Deerhound, which had lowered her two boats, and with the assistance of the Alabama's whale boat and dingy, succeeded in saving about 40 men, including Captain Semmes and 13 officers, whom she has since landed at Southampton. The Kearsarge returned to Cherbourg apparently much disabled, her sides being torn showing the chain-plating. The Alabama's loss, as at present ascertained, in killed and wounded, is from 30 to 40 men, including Mr. Llewelyn surgeon, Mr. Robinson the carpenter, and about man drowned, six men killed, and one officer 16 men wounded. Captain Semmes received a wound from a shell in the right hand, and suffered much from being a long time in the water. When he came on board the Deerhound they had nothing on their drawers and shirts, having been stripped by and one of them insisted on seeing his captain, who then lying in Mr. Lancaster's cabin in a very exhausted state, as he had been intrusted by Captain Semmes with the ship's papers, and would give them up to one else. The men were all very anxious about the captain, and were rejoiced to find that he had been saved. Great pluck was shown on both sides during the action. On board the Alabama all the hands were let loose, and arrangements had been made for sinking her rather than that she should be captured. As far as is known, not a relic of the Alabama is in possession of her rival. When she was sinking Captain Semmes dropped his own sword into the sea to prevent the possibility of its getting into their hands, and the gunner made a hole in one of the Alabama's boats and sank her for the same reason. Before leaving the Deerhound Captain Semmes presented to Mr. Lancaster's son one of his officer's swords and a pistol in remembrance of the occurrence and the kind treatment he and his men had received on board the yacht. The men stated that the best practice generally on board the Alabama during the action was shown by the gunners who had been trained on board the Excellent in Portsmouth Harbour. The spectacle presented during the combat is described by those who witnessed it from the Deerhound as magnificent, and thus the extraordinary career of the Alabama has come to a grand and appropriate termination. The presence of the Deerhound on the scene was a providential circumstance, as in all probability the men saved by her would otherwise have been drowned, and a lamentable addition would thus have been made to the number of lives lost on the occasion. Great excitement was caused in Southampton by the arrival of the survivors. On Monday afternoon Captain Semmes on proceeding up the town was completely hemmed in by crowds of people, who collected around his carriage and vociferously cheered him along the streets. A great banquet to Captain Semmes and his officers, in honour of their bravery, is already spoken of by some of the leading citizens. Mr. Mason, the Confederate agent, Captain Bullock, and the Rev. M. Tremlett arrived from London during the night and had an interview with Captain Semmes, who left Southampton on Tuesday for a country residence to get a few days' repose and quiet, being somewhat exhausted from his wound and exposure in the water.

EXPERIMENTS AT SHOEBURYNESS.—On Friday last but one of the most important series of experiments which have been conducted at Shoebury by the members of the Iron-plate Committee was made, in the presence of the Lords of the Admiralty and one of the largest assemblages of naval and military officers and scientific gentlemen that have ever yet attended any of these trials. The target, which was 20 feet by 9 feet, was constructed after the pattern of the Lord Warden, which is building at Chatham, and represented the ordinary broadside of a wooden ship armour-plated, with the addition of an iron skin outside the frame timbers. These frame timbers were of English oak 12 inches thick, strengthened by connecting diagonal iron ties or bands 6 inches wide by 1¼ inch thick. Outside this was the inner planking, 8 inches thick, and then a complete casing of wrought iron, 1½ inch thick. Outside this casing again was 9 inches of oak, which was again protected by rolled armour plates 4½ inches thick by 20 feet long and 4 feet wide. Thus the total thickness of the target was 35½ inches, of which 6 inches were iron and 29½ inches oak. In addition to this mass there were three oak deck beams averaging 15 inches by 15 inches square, and a massive iron knee to each beam, weighing nearly 4 cwt. The armour-plate bolts were 2½ inches in diameter, and the beams which represented the upper and lower deck, and which were 4 inches thick, and laid longitudinally along the back of the target, gave additional stiffness to the whole. There were two guns in position opposite the target, all made on Sir William Armstrong's coil principle, and rifled on the shunt plan, which threw steel shot from 100 lb. to 300 lb. weight, with charges varying from 25 lb. to 50 lb. of powder. One of the first tried was a 40-pr. Frederick's light 7-inch gun, which sent the shot completely through the outside armour-plate, and made its effects more or less seriously manifest on the interior backing. The heavy 9.22-inch gun of Sir William Armstrong, loaded with 44 lb. of powder, sent a 250 lb. steel shot against the target with a velocity of 1460 feet a second, and not only went clean through, but went on through part of the hill beyond and fell nearly a mile out to sea. The force which it made of the back of the target was complete. At the part it struck, huge ragged splinters were scattered far and wide, and one of the massive iron knees was broken off and whirled away 30 yards.

striking a block of granite in its passage, and shivering a cloud of fragments out of it. What such a "knee" would have done traversing the crowded 'tween decks of a man-of-war it is almost fearful to contemplate. The Somerset 9·22-inch rifled gun, which only weighs 6½ tons, fired with 20 lb. charge, sent a steel shell of 170 lb. through both outer and inner plates and the intervening oak, where it burst, and so shattered the interior backing as to make it evident that all the pumping resources of a steam-frigate could scarcely keep down such a leak, and that two would send her to the bottom in 10 minutes. It failed, however, to get right through the target, though the hole which it made afterwards afforded a striking illustration of the importance of getting a shell through the armour of these iron-clads. Another 170 lb. steel shell, with a 7 lb. bursting charge, was fired, struck the hole made by the previous shell, passed through the armour-plate and lodged in the oak firmly, bursting and blowing its charge forward like a gun. It is difficult to describe accurately the tremendous destruction which this small charge produced. It shattered the back of the target to splinters, drove one of the armour bolts deep into the beam supporting the target, wrenched off and blew away to some distance one of the massive knees, and covered the ground far and near with fragments of the oak, each heavy enough and hurled with sufficient force to have cut a man in two. Anything more terrible than the effect of such a shell on the crew of a ship it would be difficult to conceive. Another shot fired from Sir William Armstrong's 10½-inch 300 pounder, with a 45 lb. charge, went through the lower part of the target with the same ease and destructive effect that the previous 220 lb. shot had passed through the upper. Some experiments were also tried with the chilled cast-iron shot, invented by Captain Palliser, of the 18th Hussars. These shot are cast in cold iron moulds instead of hot sand ones, by which, without adding a fraction to the cost of casting, but, on the contrary, reducing it by about 1*d.* per shot, the outside of the metal is chilled into the hardness of steel, and obtains with a cast projectile which costs about 2*s.* a result almost equal to that of a steel shot which costs 50*s.* The shot tried on this occasion were only 100-pounders from the Frederick gun with a 20 lb. charge, but in every case they went clear through the 4½-inch armour plate and deep into the backing beyond, when they broke up into minute fragments of from four to eight ounces weight, so that in fact the projectile carried in itself almost the penetrative powers of a steel shot, and the explosive fragments of the most powerful shell. After these experiments the target was in such a state of ruin that there was no place left sufficiently sound on which to try the effect of another projectile. The armour-plates, which were manufactured by the Millwall Company, deservedly attracted the highest praise. Though pierced in all directions there was not the slightest sign of a crack to be found in any part.

The Public Health. — The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths in London in the week that ended Saturday, June 18, were 1296. The average number for the corresponding week in 10 years, 1854-63, corrected for increase of population, was 1173. The present return is therefore 123 above the average. During the week the births of 912 boys and 864 girls, in all 1776 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1856.

Provincial.

Derby.—It appears that the discoveries recently said to have been made respecting the will of Mr. George Nuttall, of this town, are not to be made the subject of fresh law proceedings on the part of Mr. Else. There have already been three trials, an appeal to the Lords Justices, and another to the House of Lords. Application was recently made to the Master of the Rolls to settle the costs to be paid by the plaintiffs, when his Honour directed the costs of the second and third trials to be costs in the cause, and made no order as to the costs of the first trial or of the appeals.

Manchester.—At the monthly meeting of the Central Executive Committee on Monday, the balance in the bank was reported to be 137,447*l.*, including 83,732*l.* received from the Bridgewater House Fund. Mr. Farnall's report showed a decrease of 9406 in the numbers relieved during the month in the 27 Unions of the cotton districts. A lengthy discussion took place on a motion by Mr. Hugh Mason, seconded by the Mayor of Manchester, for requesting powers under the Public Works Act for an additional loan of at least 500,000*l.* in anticipation of next winter's distress. Sir J. K. Shuttleworth said that the money not paid already by the Loan Commissioners was certain to be expended in respect of contracts already entered into; that many places which had obtained loans would be glad to enlarge them; that other places which had not obtained them would be glad to have them, and that the whole of the money so far allowed by Parliament was appropriated. The motion was carried unanimously.

Wakefield.—The boiler attached to a colliery engine near this town exploded on Saturday morning, killing four persons, wounding a number of others, and destroying and damaging a great amount of property.

York.—The following address from the working classes of this city was presented to Mr. Gladstone on Friday, by a deputation represented by Mr. Westhead, M.P., and Alderman Leeman:—

"Honoured Sir.—We, the working men of the city of York in public meeting assembled, desire to express to you our appreciation of your masterly and courageous speech, delivered in the House of Commons on the 11th of May last, in defence of the working classes, and in advocacy of their right to a fair share of representation in the Parliament of this country. We read your speech with admiration and a deep feeling of gratitude. It is a rare thing for a Minister of the Crown to speak with so much pride and generous warmth of our order. From the time when you first revised the tariff, and, standing by the side of Sir Robert Peel, by your eloquence assisted him to break down the ramparts of Protection, and give cheap bread to the labouring poor, you have, by many acts of statesmanship, been winning the hearts and affections of the people of this nation. Your great financial scheme of 1860 is still fresh in our memory. The treaty of commerce with France, and the abolition of the taxes on knowledge, with both of which measures your name is honourably and conspicuously associated, are producing blessings and benefits which are inestimable. We have marked the manifestations of your sympathy with the down-trodden and oppressed of every clime. You have advanced the cause of freedom in foreign lands by the withering power and unflinching courage with which you have from time to time assailed and exposed the misdeeds and cruelties of continental tyrants. To the provident operative you have, by your 'Post Office Savings Bank Bill,' given security for his small savings; and your Government Annuities Bill of this session is a measure which will stimulate the people to greater thrift and forethought, and inspire them with more independence. These acts, together with your speeches on the last-named measure, and on Mr. Baines's Borough Franchise Bill, make up a life that commands our lasting gratitude. We believe that when you say it is for the interests of the country that the question of Parliamentary Reform should be speedily entertained and settled, that you will strive to accomplish a settlement that will be satisfactory to the people. We believe this because we think you incapable of deceiving. We have marked the integrity and rectitude—the deep sincerity—which guide your life. We wish to sustain you in your noble efforts to obtain for us political recognition. Hitherto we have been, and we now are, aliens in the land of our birth. We have no political existence. Against the injustice of our position we have petitioned and protested. We have shown by argument and conduct our fitness for the exercise of the Parliamentary franchise. But we have been stigmatised as a 'vile mob,' as 'brutally depraved,' that 'would take bribes,' and 'overbear the other classes of society.' This has been said by members of that House which the lustre of your intellect adorns. Where is our violence? Where our disorder? In what have we manifested a desire not to submit to the law? We are Englishmen; we love our country; we regard her honour, and should be as ready in the day of danger to shed our blood in her defence as the highest in the land. You, respected sir, believe this. You have declared it, and have spoken words that have sunk deep into the hearts of every working man in every corner of the land. We thank you from our inmost souls. We look to you as a powerful and consistent advocate of our cause, and may God long preserve your life. That you may continue to be the sound and impartial statesman, the friend of the poor, seeking simple justice to all, is the fervent wish and desire of the working men of this ancient city."

To this address the Chancellor of the Exchequer replied as follows, in a letter addressed to Mr. Westhead, M.P., and Alderman Leeman:—

"My dear Sirs,—I have to acknowledge with sincere gratitude the receipt of the address from the working-men of York which you have been so good as to place in my hands. The terms and spirit of that address supply me with a fresh proof of a truth which has long been impressed upon my mind—namely, that in this country, while the errors and shortcomings of a public man are regarded with every indulgence, his well-intended efforts to render service to the State will never fail to receive an appreciation, which in some instances, like that now before me, goes far beyond his deserts. I hope that the thanks I now cordially return to those whom you represent will be taken as addressed to all who have expressed, or who might be inclined to express, particularly with regard to the subject of the franchise, sentiments corresponding with theirs.—I remain, my dear sirs, very faithfully yours, W. E. Gladstone."

Execution of the Ratho Murderer. — George Bryce, convicted at the recent trial at Edinburgh of the murder of a young woman named Jane Seaton, was executed on Tuesday morning in the presence of from 15,000 to 20,000 spectators. Efforts were made to obtain a commutation of the sentence, on the ground of his low mental organisation, but Sir G. Grey intimated, as was fully expected, that he saw no grounds on which to interfere with the course of justice. During the latter portion of his confinement, he showed great penitence and made a full confession of his guilt. He mounted the scaffold with a firm step and died without a struggle.

Obituary.

The Earl Poulett died on the 20th inst. at Hinton St. George, the family seat in Somersetshire, in his 81st year. The Right Hon. John Poulett, Earl Poulett, Viscount Hinton of Hinton St. George, Somerset, and Baron Poulett of Hinton in the peerage of England, was the eldest son of the fourth earl, by the daughter and heir of Admiral Sir George Pocock, K.C.B. He was born in 1783, and succeeded on the death of his father in 1819. He married in 1820, the daughter of the late Mr. Henry Berkeley Portman, by whom he had a family of three sons and a daughter, all of whom are dead, the last surviving of the sons, Viscount Hinton, having died in 1857. The deceased peer is succeeded in the title and estates by his nephew, Captain William Henry Poulett, born in 1827, son of the late Vice-Admiral Hon. George Poulett. The late earl was colonel of the 1st Somerset Militia from 1819 to 1852.

The Hon. Frederick Craven, only brother of Earl Craven, died on the 20th inst. at his residence in Park Street, after a very short illness. He was the youngest of the three sons of the first Earl Craven, by Miss Louisa Brunton, the actress, and was born in 1812.

Mr. Smith O'Brien died on the 18th inst., at Bangor, in his 61st year. He was born in 1803, and was the second son of Sir Edward O'Brien, fourth baronet, of Dromoland, in the county of Clare, by the eldest daughter and co-heiress of Mr. William Smith, of Cahirmoyle, Limerick. His elder brother (better known as Sir Lucius O'Brien, long the Conservative M.P. for Clare,) succeeded his father as fifth baronet in 1837, and became 13th Baron Inchiquin in 1855, on the death of his kinsman, the Marquis of Thomond. Mr. Smith O'Brien, after an education at Harrow, and Trinity College, Cambridge, entered Parliament in 1826 as the Tory M.P. for Ennis, and opposed Mr. O'Connell at the famous Clare election. He was member for Limerick from 1835 to 1849, and during that period he became notorious, first as a prisoner of the coal-hole of the House of Commons; next as the leader of the Irish rebels of 1848: next for his flight and capture in Widow Welsh's cabbage-garden; and, finally, for his trial on a charge of high treason and his sentence to death. His Majesty was advised to commute the death penalty, but Mr. O'Brien refused the boon, which, however, the Government compelled him to accept. He was sent to Bermuda, and refused to join Mitchell in forfeiting his word and escaping. He was ultimately pardoned (1856), and has latterly been living in comparative obscurity. Mr. O'Brien married, about 1836, the daughter of Mr. Joseph Gabbett, of Limerick, by whom he had a large family. His estates, which were transferred to his family before his conviction, did not come back to him, his eldest son having come into possession of Cahirmoyle, giving his father an annual income from the estate.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

Monday, June 20.

We have a larger supply of Beasts and a slow trade, consequently on the average prices are scarcely as good. The number of Sheep is about the same as on Monday last, but the demand is smaller. Some choice qualities are making nearly as much as on that day, but other kinds are lower. Trade is dull for Lambs and Calves. From Germany and Holland there are 1280 Beasts, 6020 Sheep, and 284 Calves; from Spain, 180 Beasts; from Scotland, 710; from Ireland, 20; and 2190 from Norfolk and Suffolk.

Thursday, June 23.

The number of Beasts is considerably smaller than on Thursday last, yet there is a fair supply. The weather being favourable there is a demand at Monday's quotations. We have a good supply of Sheep; the trade is rather more active than on Monday last, but it is very difficult to obtain any higher prices. Trade is dull for Lambs and Calves, and prices on the average are lower. From Germany and Holland there are 540 Beasts, 3190 Sheep, and 663 Calves; and 120 Beasts from Spain. Milch Cows, 60.

Messrs. Pattenden & Smith report a fair amount of business doing in 1863's at steady prices. Plantation accounts are not so favourable; cold nights retard the progress of the bine.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, June 20.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was short, and was sold at an advance of 1s. per qr. The market was moderately attended, and foreign Wheat was taken in retail at our recent quotations. Barley and Peas were firm at last week's rates. Beans bring rather more money. Oats meet a fair inquiry at an advance of 6d. per qr. on the prices of this day sen'night. Flour was unaltered in value.

FRIDAY, June 24.

The weather on the 19th and 20th instant was fine, but we have since had showers daily. The Wheat plant is reported as generally coming into ear and looking well, but less promising than last year on the majority of the light land. Hay making is pretty general around London, but the crop in many cases is disappointing. An improved tone in the Wheat trade, stimulated by the uncertain aspect of politics, has manifested itself throughout the kingdom during the week, and an advance of about 1s. per qr. upon the previous current rates has been realised. The quotations for Spring Corn have been also fully supported, with rather an upward tendency in those of Oats, Beans, and Peas. Flour has been in improved request, and in Liverpool is quoted 6d. per qr. dearer. Since Friday last 3 grain-laden vessels have been reported off the coast. Paris, June 23.—Although a few of the country markets are dearer, generally speaking they have been quiet, with only a moderate business doing. Prices have not altered much one way or the other. Millers buy for present wants only. Flour has declined 1f. per sack, but the six marks and Paris manufactured have not altered much; the quotation for the former is 36s. 6d. per 280 lbs. The present stock is estimated at 15,250 cwts. The arrivals of English and foreign Wheat, of foreign Flour and Oats this week have been moderate, of English Oats and foreign Barley large. The attendance at this morning's market was small. English Wheat was held for an advance at 2s. to 3s. per qr., which checked business, and on the sales effected an improvement of 1s. per qr. was realised on both English and foreign, but business was not extensive. Barley, Beans, and Peas bring extreme rates of Monday, and Oats are 6d. per qr. dearer. For Flour there was a good inquiry at rather over late rates.

News of the Week.

IN the House of Lords on Monday, Earl RUSSELL announced that the Conference terminated on Saturday without result, and laid upon the table the protocols and papers relating to it. After describing at great length the events which had led to the assembling of the Conference, and the transactions at its various sittings, his lordship said that no pledge had ever been given to Denmark that this country would render her material aid; and as France and Russia both declined to take any active part on behalf of Denmark, Her Majesty's Government, looking to the probable results of such an interference ALD to the state of affairs in Italy and America, did not consider that the honour of England required her to take part in the present war. They considered it, however, to be their duty still to preserve a neutral attitude, although in saying this he did not mean to imply that contingencies might not arise to render a different policy necessary. The Earl of DERBY said that the Conference had terminated just as he had anticipated, and that it would shortly be the duty of Parliament and the country to decide whether Ministers had preserved inviolate the honour of England, and whether the difficulties which had arisen were not in great measure owing to their weak and vacillating policy. On Tuesday Lord TAUNTON moved the second reading of the Brokers Bonds and Rents Bill. The motion was opposed by Lord KINGSDOWN and Lord CHELMSFORD, and negatived without a division. On Thursday the Marquis of CLANRICARDE moved the second reading of the Oyster Fishery (England and Scotland) Bill. The motion was opposed by the Duke of RICHMOND and Lord STANLEY, and was ultimately withdrawn. The Government Annuities Bill was read a second time. The Earl of DONOUGHMORE moved a resolution censuring the manner in which the LORD-LIEUTENANT of IRELAND had exercised the power of remitting the whole or a portion of the sentences of persons convicted of agrarian outrages. Earl GRANVILLE and Lord CHELMSFORD opposed the motion, and the resolution was withdrawn.

In the Commons on Friday Mr. MORRITT moved that in case of a modification of the indirect taxation, the excise on malt required consideration. The motion was opposed by Government, and negatived on a division by 166 to 118. The Inland Revenue (Stamp Duties) Bill, and the Chimney-sweepers Regulation Bill passed through committee. On the motion for going into committee on the Court of Chancery (Ireland) Bill, Mr. LONGFIELD moved that it be referred to a select committee. After some discussion the motion was withdrawn, when Mr. WHITESIDE moved as an amendment that the committee be deferred for three months. On a division the amendment was negatived by 51 to 49. Mr. VANCE then moved the adjournment of the debate. On a division the motion was negatived by 56 to 51. Mr. COLLINS moved the adjournment of the House. On a division the motion was negatived by 56 to 53. The adjournment of the debate was then moved by Mr. LYGON. Lord PALMERSTON assented, and the debate was accordingly adjourned. On Monday Lord PALMERSTON laid on the table the protocols and papers relating to the Conference, and described the events which led to the invasion of the Duchies by the German Powers, and the subsequent efforts of the neutral Powers to bring about an arrangement between Germany and Denmark. He said that Her Majesty's Government felt great sympathy for Denmark, although she was originally in the wrong, but as France and Russia both declined to take active measures in her support, they did not feel it to be the duty of England to take part in the war. If, however, the struggle were transferred from the mainland to the islands, if Copenhagen were subjected to an assault, or the KING OF DENMARK were made prisoner of war, their decision might be a subject for re-consideration. Mr. DISRAELI said that the Conference met without a basis, and had separated without a result, and he would take the earliest opportunity of asking the opinion of the House on the policy of the Government. The House then went into Committee of Supply on the remaining Civil Service Estimates, and agreed to several of the votes. On Tuesday Mr. DISRAELI gave notice that on Monday he will move an address to HER MAJESTY, expressing the regret of the House that, while the course pursued by her Majesty's Government has failed to maintain their avowed policy of upholding the integrity and independence of Denmark, it has lowered the just influence of this country in the councils of Europe and thereby diminished the securities for peace. Mr. DOULTON called attention to the gradual diminution of open spaces in and around London, and moved that it was the duty of Government to provide for the preservation of such spaces within the limits of stated in the Enclosure Act of 1845. The motion was opposed by Mr. PEEL and Mr. COWPER, and supported by Mr. LOCKE, Sir W. FRASER, and Mr. TORRENS; and was carried against the Government, on a division, by 79 to 40. Mr. P. WYNDHAM moved the discontinuance of the annual grant voted by the House for Queen's Plates, on the ground that it no longer encourages the breed of good horses. General PEEL and Lord PALMERSTON expressed their disbelief in the alleged deterioration of the breed of horses, and after some discussion the motion was withdrawn. The House was shortly afterwards counted out. On Wednesday Mr. KINGLAKE gave notice that on Monday evening he will move, as an amendment to Mr. DISRAELI's motion, the substitution of words expressing the satisfaction of the House that HER MAJESTY has been advised to abstain from armed interference in the war between Denmark and the German Powers. Mr. HENNESSY moved the second reading of the Poor Law (Ireland) Acts Amendment Bill. Lord NAAS moved that the Bill be read a second time that day three months. On a division, the amendment was carried by 201 to 24; so the Bill was lost. The Tests Abolition (Oxford) Bill passed through Committee. The House then went into Committee upon the Street Music (Metropolis) Bill, when a long discussion took place on the first clause. After four divisions the hour for adjournment arrived, and the CHAIRMAN was ordered to report progress. On Thursday Mr. A. SMITH moved that the new School of Naval Architecture ought to be established in immediate connection with one of the chief naval arsenals, and not at South Kensington. Sir J. PAKINGTON and Lord C. PAGET opposed the motion, which was withdrawn. In answer to Mr. TREHERNE and Sir J. PAXTON, Sir G. GREY said that he did not regard the distress among the ribbon weavers at Coventry as a result of the French Treaty, or believe that it was within the power of legislation to remove it. Her Majesty's Government would be only too glad to see the same freedom of import existing in France and other countries that we had permitted those countries to enjoy here. The House then went into a Committee of Supply upon the remaining Civil Service Estimates, and after a long discussion agreed to the vote for public education in Great Britain. On the vote for the Department of Science and Art, a motion was made to reduce the amount of 97,582*l.* by 15,000*l.*, which was negatived by 131 to 73, and the vote was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN was then ordered to report progress. The House proceeded to consider the Lords' amendments of the Penal Servitude Acts Amendment Bill, when Mr. HUNT moved to disagree to so much of those amendments as dispenses with the necessity of male licence-holders reporting themselves monthly to the police. Sir G. GREY opposed the motion. On a division it was carried against the Government by 129 to 84.

The war in the Danish Duchies recommenced on Sunday. The Prussians have already occupied the island of Alsen, and are erecting batteries on the coast of Jutland with a view of invading the Danish island of Fuhnen. The allied Powers have avowed their intention to occupy Jutland as a pledge, and to collect the taxes in order to indemnify themselves for war expenses.

From the United States we learn that General GRANT has abandoned the line of the Chickahominy, and moved the whole of his army to the south side of the James River, without opposition. General BALDY SMITH subsequently marched against Petersburg, and captured one of the Confederate works, two miles from the city, with 13 cannon and 400 prisoners. General HANCOCK then joined him in an attack on the outer defences of the city, and after two days fighting succeeded in dislodging the Confederates, capturing 450 prisoners and 4 guns. On the 18th the remainder of General GRANT's army took part in a general assault on the inner line of works, but were repulsed with heavy loss. Two subsequent attacks were made on the same day with the same results. The latest news states that General GRANT is entrenched a mile and a half from the city, and that his loss on the 18th was from 6000 to 8000 in killed and wounded. General LEE's whole army is supposed to be at Petersburg.

COURT MOURNING.—The Gazette of last evening contains an order from the Lord Chamberlain's Office, for the Court to go into mourning for three weeks, from Tuesday next the 5th inst., for the late King of Wurtemberg.

THE CONFERENCE met again on Saturday. All the members were present. It sat about three hours, and then broke up, not to meet again. The protocols and papers were laid upon the tables of both Houses of Parliament on Monday evening. They constitute a history of the proceedings of that body from the first meeting on the 25th of April. The first business before the Plenipotentiaries was the consideration of the armistice, which was not definitively arranged until the third meeting on May 9. This being disposed of, it remained for Austria and Prussia to explain their objects. This led to a preliminary discussion respecting the Treaty of 1852, and it soon became evident that there was a divergency of opinion on the subject existing between all the members of the Conference. The discovery of this fact showed the hopelessness of the Conference, but, nevertheless, her Majesty's Government persevered, and passed on to the next consideration—the bases of pacification which Austria and Prussia were prepared to propose. These were stated to be—"The complete political independence of the Duchies and their close connection by means of common institutions." This being declined by Denmark, the German Powers, in the sitting of May 28th, went a step further, and demanded the entire and unqualified separation of the Duchies from Denmark and their union into a single state. This was rejected by the Danish representative at once, and did not meet with much approval from the other Plenipotentiaries. Earl Russell then proposed that Holstein, Lauenberg, and Schleswig, south of a line drawn more to the north than the mouth of the Schlei, and the line of the Dannewerke, should be ceded to Germany, and the rest of the Danish territory declared free from all German influence and claims. This plan was accepted by the neutral Powers, and, after a reference, by the representative of Denmark. In the meantime the armistice, which was about to expire, was renewed, after which Austria and Prussia declared that they would only consent to the line of demarcation being drawn from Apenrade to Tondern. After further unsuccessful attempts to bring the parties to an agreement, England proposed that the question should be regarded as settled, so far as both the lines were concerned, and that the disposal of the intermediate space should become the subject of the arbitration of a friendly Power. On June 22d the decisive meeting took place, at which the acceptance or rejection by the belligerents of this last possible proposal was to be announced. The German Powers expressed a refusal so put as to seem to indicate an acceptance of arbitration; the refusal of Denmark was clear and precise. As a last effort the representative of France recommended that the populations of the districts the possession of which was in dispute should be allowed to vote and decide for themselves whether they would be considered as Germans or Danes. The representative of Denmark at once rejected the proposal, and this put an end to the debate and extinguished the last hope of peace being established by means of the Conference. The final meeting on Saturday was merely of a formal character, for the signing of the protocol.

THE CABINET.—A Cabinet Council was held on Saturday at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury, in Downing Street.

CONSERVATIVE MEETING.—On Tuesday afternoon a meeting of the Opposition, to consider the policy of her Majesty's Government in reference to the Danish-German question, was held at the residence of the Marquis of Salisbury, in Arlington Street. The meeting was attended by 231 members of the House of Commons, including Mr. Disraeli, General Peel, Lord John Manners, Mr. Walpole, and the principal members of the Derby Administration, and several of the Independent Irish party who occupy seats below the gangway, the only peer present being the Earl of Derby who took the chair on the occasion. The following is an abstract of the proceedings:—

The Earl of Derby first addressed the meeting. He commenced by stating that during the last two or three Sessions several attacks had been made in Parliament upon the Established Church, but that, owing to the firm front opposed to them, they had been discontinued, and he might say were now abandoned. He would not, he said, trouble them by referring to the 800 pages of papers on the Denmark question which had been laid before Parliament, or with the 161 pages of protocols and papers which had been issued that morning, but would content himself with reviewing in a very few words the course of proceeding which had been adopted by the noble earl the Secretary for Foreign Affairs and by the noble lord at the head of her Majesty's Government with regard to Denmark. Among the most remarkable of the statements which had been made by her Majesty's Government to Parliament during the discussions which had taken place on the Danish question was that in certain contingencies Denmark would not be allowed to enter upon the contest with Germany alone. It appeared, however, that as matters progressed the ground was shifted, and it was stated that in the event of certain contingencies—the Federal execution, for instance—action might be taken. The execution, however, did take place, and next there was the invasion of Schleswig. It was then intimated that Fredericia was to be regarded as a sacred spot. It was, however, taken possession of by the German forces, and finally a portion of Jutland also, yet nothing whatever was done to induce Denmark to believe that the promises held out to her would not be realised. He would not attempt to say that England ought or ought not to have interfered by force of arms; but what he did say was that Her Majesty's Government having conveyed its hope to Denmark that in the event of certain things occurring, England would stand by her side, the natural inference was that Denmark had been misled by those representations, and that she now had reason to complain that she found herself deserted by those by whom she had been given reason to hope that she would receive material assistance. He did not mean it to be understood, nor did he wish to convey, that his view was that England ought to interfere by force of arms; but that had not been the tone taken by Her Majesty's Government. Lord Palmerston, in his recent declaration in the House of Commons, had still maintained the same tone as that which had led Denmark to believe that she would receive support from England, that she would not be allowed to stand alone in the struggle; because he said that in the event of Copenhagen being bombarded, or the King taken a prisoner of war, it might become necessary to consider the matter, or to recommend a change of policy. But from the experience of the past there was no reason to believe that the noble lord might not, in view of these events having actually taken place, allege that some fresh contingency should yet arise before he could act. He contended that this vacillating and inconsistent policy was discreditable to the Government, and was calculated to lower the country immeasurably, to sink its renown, and lessen its influence in the eyes of Europe. He was not himself inclined to the counsels which must result in England's active interference in the affairs of Denmark should take place; but it was to be supposed that the Government who conveyed the idea that they were disposed to lend them military aid should have considered the consequences before they made such a declaration. In the part which he and those who acted with him thought they should take, it was considered right to deal with the Danish question by itself, and not to mix it up with the German question, or with the unhappy internecine strife which was now raging at the other side of the Atlantic. The Danish question should be dealt with by itself, and the resolution which he was now about to submit for the consideration of the meeting would simply be confined to an expression of opinion upon the course of conduct and the policy which had been pursued by her Majesty's Government. The Government had appeared desirous to leave it to the House to express an opinion, and they had endeavoured to impose the duty of electing that opinion upon the Opposition; but he was happy to say that neither Mr. Disraeli nor himself had fallen into that trap. While he did not desire to convey to them that he entertained a positive certainty that the resolution would carry with it a majority of the House of Commons, yet he solemnly and sincerely believed that it would carry with it the approving voice of the country. Whether it carried with it the voice of the House of Commons or not, he and the 16 friends who had carefully considered the resolution with him, and who had honoured him with their confidence on that occasion, felt it to be their bounden duty to elicit the opinion of the House of Commons on the acts of the Administration. His lordship then read to the meeting the resolution of which Mr. Disraeli subsequently gave notice in the House of Commons. It was received with loud and repeated cheering by the meeting.—Mr. Kerr next addressed the meeting. He said his feeling was that the resolution should embody an expression in favour of armed interference on behalf of Denmark. This observation was received with marks of disapprobation, and the Earl of Derby said that he must respectfully differ from the hon gentleman, because, if his suggestion were adopted, and embodied in the resolution, the Opposition, in the event of their coming into power, would be bound to carry on warlike operations in favour of Denmark, and to this they were not prepared to bind themselves.—An hon. Member, representing a northern county, said he believed that the feeling in his part of the country was entirely in favour of peace. He reminded the meeting that the constituencies of the country would narrowly watch the conduct of their representatives. From all he was able to learn, he believed that, whatever the country might think of the policy of her Majesty's Government in reference to the language held by them towards Denmark, it was decidedly in favour of maintaining a peaceful attitude. He apprehended, after the statement made in the House of Commons by Lord Palmerston, that if a resolution such as that now submitted to the meeting were carried against him in the House, it would be regarded as a demonstration in favour of war, and to this he was entirely opposed.—The Earl of Derby explained that in his opinion the resolution was not drawn so as to convey any such impression. This statement was received with expressions of approbation, and appeared to be acquiesced in generally by the meeting.—Lord H. Lennox said that he was not about to trouble the meeting at any length with opinions of his own, and had only to express his general concurrence in what had fallen from the noble Earl. He was anxious to know on what day it was proposed to move the resolution.—Mr. Disraeli said that his first intention was to give notice of the motion that evening for Thursday, and on Thursday to submit it to the House if that day should prove convenient to the Government. On further reflection, however, he thought that perhaps Thursday would be too early a day. He believed that Lord Palmerston was prepared to give every facility for proceeding with the debate, and under these circumstances he thought the more judicious course would be to give notice that evening in the House of Commons, and to move the resolution on Monday evening.—Sir J. Walsh said that he was adverse to an Opposition which would indulge in merely party views, but in the resolution proposed by Lord Derby he entirely concurred. He was expressing his opinions on the subject at considerable length, when there was a general movement in the direction of the door.—Mr. Kerr subsequently endeavoured to address the meeting, but was left with a very limited audience.

THE CHANNEL SQUADRON.—Admiral Dacres' squadron still remains at Spithead, awaiting orders from the Admiralty, but is expected to proceed shortly to the Downs. The Research and Enterprise, iron-cased frigates, the Wolverine, 21, Fawn, 17, Dauntless, and Salamis have been ordered to the Downs, where they will await the arrival of the squadron.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—Sir Hedworth Williamson, Bart., was elected for North Durham on Tuesday in the room of the late Lord A. Vane Tempest, without opposition. There is a vacancy for East Gloucestershire, caused by the death of Sir C. W. Codrington. The Hon. Edward Dutton, eldest son of Lord Sherborne, is announced as a candidate for the vacant seat on Conservative principles. Mr. J. H. Gurney has announced the resignation of his seat for King's Lynn, on account of failing health. Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton is a candidate for the vacant seat in the Liberal interest. Sir E. Filmer will retire from the representation of West Kent at the close of the present Parliament. Mr. F. Hart Dyke, a son of Sir P. Dyke, will be a candidate for the vacant seat. Lord Pevensey has announced his intention to retire from the representation of East Sussex, on the ground of his precarious health, and the heavy expenses attending a contested election in Sussex. Mr. Walter Wyndham Burrell, of Ockendon House, Cuckfield, son of the late Sir Charles Burrell, is mentioned as his successor in the Conservative interest. Mr. Russell Gurney, Recorder of London, will become a candidate for Southampton at the next general election in the Conservative interest. Mr. William Barrow Simonds, of Abbott's Barton, will offer himself as a candidate for Winchester at the next general election in the Conservative interest. Mr. Hobson, chairman of the local board of guardians, and Mr. D. L. Lewis have announced themselves as candidates for Youghal; the former in the Conservative, the latter in the Liberal interest. Mr. Brett, Q.C., will be a candidate for Rochdale at the next general election in the Conservative interest.

CONVOCATION.—In the Upper House on Friday no business was transacted except the reception of the resolutions of the Lower House on the subject of the Synodical judgment on "Essays and Reviews." In the Lower House the Dean of Westminster opposed the adoption of the judgment in a speech of great length, in which he contended that the judgment was "ambiguous, indiscriminating, unfair, and therefore iniquitous." After some discussion the House divided, when the resolution concurring in the judgment was carried by 39 to 19. The Prolocutor and a deputation then took up the resolution to the Upper House with a protest against the decision, signed by the Dean of Westminster, the Dean of Christ Church, Canon Selwyn, Canon Blakesley, Archdeacon Moore, Archdeacon Hale, and other members. Convocation was then prorogued till the 18th August, after the Lord Primate had given his benediction, as usual, in Latin.

CONSECRATION OF BISHOPS.—On Wednesday, in the cathedral church of Canterbury, the Rev. Dr. Jeune, late Dean of Lincoln, was consecrated to the Bishopric of Peterborough; the Rev. Charles Henry Bromby, M.A., late Principal of the Training College, Cheltenham, to the Bishopric of Tasmania; and the Rev. Samuel Crowther, a negro, to the Bishopric of the Niger territory. The ceremony was performed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, assisted by the Bishops of Lincoln, Winchester, Gloucester, and Bristol.

THE REVENUE.—The Revenue returns for the year and quarter ended the 30th June show a decrease of 690,902*l.* on the year, and a decrease of 216,004*l.* on the quarter. The Year's account shows an increase in the Excise of 1,992,000*l.*; Stamps, 327,000*l.*; Taxes, 77,000*l.*; Post Office, 70,000*l.*; Crown Lands, 5000*l.*; Miscellaneous, 195,098*l*; and a decrease in the Customs of 1,279,000*l.*; Property Tax, 2,078 000*l.* The quarter's account shows an increase in the Excise of 459,000*l.*; Stamps, 145,000*l.*; Taxes, 42,000*l.*; Post Office, 10,000*l.*; Crown Lands, 500*l.*; and a decrease in the Customs of 411,000*l.*; Property Tax, 449,000*l.*; Miscellaneous, 12,501*l.* The total revenue of the year was 69,992,959*l.*, and that of the quarter, 18,274,200*l.*

BRITISH MUSEUM.—The Queen has appointed the Dean of Windsor to succeed Dr. Cureton as Crown Trustee of the British Museum.

OFFICIAL APPOINTMENT.—Colonel Romilly has been appointed a special commissioner of income tax, in the room of Mr. Pressly, C.B., resigned.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Moniteur of Sunday evening announces that the Conference has closed without any result. It says:—

"Yesterday's sitting of the London Conference passed off very quietly. The belligerents read declarations in which they explained the present position of affairs according to the views of their respective Governments. Earl Russell reviewed the labours of the Conference, and expressed a hope, in which the neutral Powers concurred, that, whatever might be the issue of the conflict, the independence of the Danish monarchy would be preserved."

The Paris papers notice the Ministerial statements made in the British Parliament on Monday in reference to the Danish question, in terms by no means complimentary to this country:—The Constitutionnel of Wednesday, in an article signed by M. Limayrac, points out the difference existing between the present resolution of Earl Russell and Lord Palmerston and their former policy, whereby passions were aroused which were to remain unsatisfied, and threats made which were to be followed by no results. It then says:

"Public opinion in Europe will hardly be able to understand these contradictions, and will find that they weaken the authority and influence of the English Government, and that if the negociations have failed, it was perhaps owing to the reason that these contradictions had been foreseen. The British Cabinet does not intend to go to war to protect the continental possessions of Denmark, and thus leaves the German Powers to act within those limits. It is only in the event of war being transferred to the Danish islands, of Copenhagen being attacked, or King Christian being made prisoner, that England would depart from her reserve, and reconsider the matter. These declarations made are precise, but are they prudent also? Do they not give too wide a field to one of the two belligerent parties, which now knows how far it can go without provoking the intervention of England, and is it not even told in positive terms that it may not go farther?"

The France, in an article on the same subject, says:—

"The statements made to Parliament have one advantage—they dispel all doubts and make precise the policy of the British Cabinet. We now know what they mean to do—or rather not to do. But what effect will these panic declarations produce on Parliament and on public opinion throughout England? What effect will they have in Germany and on the belligerents? We shall soon know. The extent and nature of the hostilities will speedily show what Austria and Prussia think of the conditional threats of the British Government. It is possible that its pacific attitude may render these Powers the more ardent in war, that they are more certain of the isolation of Denmark."

The Pays says—

"England appears to have laboured to unite passions, to smother resentment, and to strengthen conflicting pretensions. She is reaping what she has sown. At Copenhagen spite and distrust. At Berlin and Vienna hatred and contempt. It is now her shame to see that her promises henceforth will not be regarded more seriously than her threats."

The Patrie, in an article headed, "Save the cash-box," charges England with being actuated by purely sordid motives, and predicts for her the fate of Venice and Holland, and also other countries which place their material welfare far above considerations dictated by honour and duty. The Opinion Nationale, in an article on the "desertion of Denmark," says:—

"So Denmark is about to be crushed. Lord Palmerston has told us that Russia and France refused to take active measures to protect it. Russia we can understand—but France! Are the Danes less entitled to her interest than the Christians in Syria and Cochin China? The sum total of Lord Palmerston's statement amounts to this: England will not go to war. By and bye, there is no saying—contingencies might arise which would induce the noble lord to depart from his inaction; for instance, if Copenhagen were taken, and King Christian a prisoner. This sentence, equally odious and ridiculous, was actually uttered in the House of Commons. On the part of England this is nothing short of treachery. It is England who by her advice has reduced Denmark to its present extremity. Between the abject cowardice of the British Cabinet and the brutal insolence of M. de Bismarck we are at a loss to choose. Thus, once for all, it stands recorded that in 1864 force rules supreme in Europe, and that right cannot boast one single champion. History will judge and appreciate such an epoch and such a situation."

Count Commingès Guitant has been appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of France at the Court of Brussels; Count Reculot at the Court of Lisbon, Viscount Meloizes-Fresnoy at the Court of Munich, and the Marquis of Cadore at the Court of Baden. Captain Winslow, of the Kearsarge, has addressed a letter to M. Bonfils, the Confederate agent at Cherbourg, demanding the delivery of the men belonging to the Alabama who were saved by the French pilot boats. The following is a copy of his letter and the reply:—

"U.S.S.S. Kearsarge, Cherbourg, June 21.

"Monsieur,—Certain pilot boats which I allowed—through humanity—to save several prisoners after the sinking of the Alabama, have taken them to Cherbourg. These officers and men are, nevertheless, subject to the obligations imposed by the laws of war; they are my prisoners, and I demand that they should surrender on board the Kearsarge. In the event of their attempting to release themselves from the obligation, through the means that have been employed, should a similar case arise they have no mercy to expect.—I am, &c.,

"To M. Bonfils. "JOHN A. WINSLOW, Captain."

"Sir,—I have received your letter, dated June 21. The object of your claim is wholly beyond my control, and I would point out that your demand should have been addressed not to me but to the French Government, under whose shelter the unfortunate men you refer to have found a refuge. I am not aware of any law of war which prohibits a soldier making his escape from the field of battle after a reverse, even after he has been captured, and I cannot see why a sailor should be debarred of the privilege of swimming away from his enemy. I must decline acting as your intermediary with certain persons, whose names you do not even mention, and whom, nevertheless, you consider to be your prisoners. Neither can I understand how the authorities of the United States can claim to detain prisoners within the territory of the French empire.

"To Captain John A. Winslow. "I am, &c., BONFILS."

M. Béhic, Minister of Commerce and Agriculture, has addressed a circular to the Chambers of Commerce, calling their attention to the practice of some houses which ship wine to England of making use of bottles which, from the thickness of the glass, or from the manner in which the bottom runs up into the inside, do not contain so much as they ought by from 10 to 20 per cent. The Minister urges on the Chambers the necessity of calling the attention of wine merchants to such practices, which have given rise to numerous complaints, and cannot fail, if persisted in, to do much injury to commerce. General Gomez, who defended in arms the rights of Charles V. to the throne of Spain, has just died at Bordeaux. The insurance offices interested in the case of La Pommerais have decided on paying in full to the two children of Mdme. de Pauw the amount of the insurances effected on her life. The two young girls will therefore receive between them the sum of 550,000f.

ALGERIA.—Official despatches from Algeria represent the news as daily becoming more decisive. General Deligny has penetrated to the centre of the rebellion in the south of the province of Oran, and similar successes have been achieved in the Tell. All the tribes of the Flittas, who were still in a state of revolt, have been driven into their last refuges, and have surrendered unconditionally. 4000 prisoners are retained as a guarantee for their submission. General Martimprey was to embark on the 29th ult., at Mortagenem, to return to Algiers.

DENMARK.—The Rigsraad was opened at Copenhagen on Saturday by Bishop Monrad, the President of the Council, who read the following Royal message:—

"We, Christian IX., send to the Rigsraad our royal salutation. The critical situation of the country and the extraordinary expenses which the war has already entailed, and which its continuation may yet further require, have imposed upon us the necessity of convoking the Rigsraad, in order that you may approve of the steps which our Government has taken, and that you may give your consent to the measures intended to create the resources which are indispensable. It is not we who have provoked war; our conscience tells us that we have done all that was in our power to avoid it. We have been attacked by a superior enemy, under the pretext that we have not observed the arrangements of 1851 and 1852. Before the commencement of hostilities our adversaries refused to accept a conference to consult in a friendly way with the other signatories of the London treaty, and it was not until they had seized the greater part of the peninsula that they consented to its meeting, but declaring even then that they did not regard themselves as bound by the transactions of 1851 and 1852. During the short time that our reign has lasted, we have learnt by bitter experience how little the clearest rights now weigh in the political balance of Europe, and how a King and his people may be abandoned to themselves in the most unequal contest. Therefore it is that when England, supported by all the neutral Powers which sat in the conference of London, demanded of us to renounce altogether the portion of territory belonging to the Danish monarchy situated to the south of the Schlei and Dannewerke, we resigned ourselves to submission to a sacrifice which was so grievous to us. This sacrifice has not been accepted by the German Powers. We cannot sacrifice more. To the exhortations which have been made to us we have responded by a negative, in the firm conviction that our refusal is that also of the Danish people. May God change the dispositions of the Powers that hold the destiny of Europe in their hands! May He at least grant the sympathy of one amongst them be transformed into efficacious co-operation! Hereupon we assure the Rigsraad of our Royal favour."

In the sitting of the Folkething (Lower House of the Rigsraad) on the same day, the President of the Council, in reply to a question on the Conference, said:—

"The Danish Plenipotentiaries were instructed to accept the line of demarcation of the Schlei, and to agree to a fortnight's prolongation of the armistice should England firmly adhere to that line. Earl Russell promised that neither would he propose himself nor support the proposal of any other Plenipotentiary which would be less favourable for Denmark, unless Denmark herself should consent to such new proposals. Earl Russell, nevertheless, proposed, in the sitting of the Conference of the 18th inst., that the question should be submitted to arbitration, although Denmark did not consent to this proposal. I cannot explain how this proposal was consistent with Earl Russell's promise."

THE DANISH DUCHIES.—Prince Albert of Prussia arrived at the head-quarters of the army in the Duchies on Sunday, in consequence of a telegram sent by the King from Carlsbad. His Royal Highness was the bearer of an order to Marshal von Wrangel to recommence hostilities at once. In accordance with this order the Prussians opened fire from four batteries upon the fortifications of Alsen on Sunday, and began to concentrate their forces in Jutland, in the neighbourhood of Kölding. On Wednesday at daybreak 11 battalions of the Prussian army crossed the Alsen Sound, and captured the Island of Alsen, after some fighting. The passage of the main body of the Prussians was effected in 120 boats, conveying 3000 men at a time. The troops landed between Schwabeck and the most southerly point of Satrupholz. Notwithstanding the sharp fire of the Danes, their strand batteries were taken. They lost several guns, and retreated after stubbornly contesting each position. At 2 P.M. the Prussians had already reached Vollerup and Ulkeböl. 2400 Danes, including 100 officers, were taken prisoners. Colonel Kaufmann was severely wounded. The Danish loss was severe. The Prussian loss was three officers killed and 17 wounded, with 300 men killed and wounded. Some street fighting took place in Sonderborg, in which the Prussian loss was small. The attack of the Danish iron-clad Rolf Krake was twice repulsed by the Prussian batteries, and she was set on fire; but it is said that one of the Prussian pontoons was destroyed by her. Two large Danish ships of war have been severely handled by the Prussian batteries at Apenrade. Within five minutes one of them received 10 shots in her broadside, while the other lost her foremost. The coast of Kölding is kept in a state of constant alarm by Danish gunboats. The Prussians are now erecting batteries on the Jutland coast, opposite Middlefart, in the Island of Fünen. It is announced that Austria and Prussia intend to occupy the whole of Jutland, and to keep it as a pledge. They will collect the taxes in Jutland and employ the proceeds to meet the military expenses. On Thursday three Danish ships-of-war entered Dantzic under a flag of truce, and announced the renewal of the blockade, twenty days being allowed to neutral vessels to leave the port. The Austro-Prussian squadron, which has been lying for some time at Cuxhaven, has proceeded to Bremerhafen, where a Prussian iron-clad corvette, the Pedro, arrived on Tuesday under Portuguese colours. According to intelligence received at Heligoland on Monday an engagement between the German and Danish fleets will probably take place in those waters within a few days. The English frigate Wolverine and some despatch-boats are stationed at Heligoland. At a banquet given in his honour at Heide on the 23d ult. the Duke of Augustenburg said:—

"I rejoice to be the first German Prince of Schleswig-Holstein, and shall in future adopt no separate interests. The Prince and the people are ready to make any sacrifice to their liberators which may contribute to the welfare of Germany."

The General Committee of the Associations for Schleswig-Holstein at Altona have voted an address to the Duke of Augustenburg, assuring him, in view of the claims of the Grand Duke of Oldenburg, of the unchangeable fidelity and devotion of the people of Schleswig and Holstein.

FRANKFORT.—A telegram from Vienna states that the German Sovereigns at Carlsbad have come to an understanding upon the Dano-German question. According to this understanding Prussia, with the concurrence of Austria, will propose at the Federal Diet that the German Confederation shall declare war against Denmark. It is asserted that a motion will shortly be brought forward at the Federal Diet that Schleswig and Holstein united should be placed under the joint administration of the great German Powers until the question of the succession shall have been decided, and the respective claims of the Princes of Augustenburg and Oldenburg been examined. This is said to be the subject of the present arrangement between Prussia and Austria, and on this they are stated to be perfectly unanimous.

WURTEMBURG.—The King of Wurtemburg died at Rosenstein Castle at 5 o'clock on Saturday morning. His Majesty was born in 1781, and was the oldest sovereign in Europe. The new King has issued a proclamation of a cordial nature to the people. His Majesty solemnly declares that he will maintain the constitution. He alludes to the last autograph will of his deceased father, dated 1844, in which his late Majesty stated that he had devoted his life to the furtherance of the unity, independence, and the glory of Germany. He also desired that he might be buried at sunrise in the cemetery of Rothenberg; that his funeral might be simple, and that his body might be followed by only three carriages besides the escort.

SAXONY.—At the sitting of the Upper Chamber on Tuesday Chamberlain Zehmen moved that the Government be requested to use its influence with the Federal Diet that the entire Confederation should take part in the continuation of the war against Denmark, and that the war should be declared a Federal war. The Chamber referred the motion to a committee. In the sitting of Thursday, the motion came on for discussion, when the Chamber decided unanimously on requesting the Government to use its influence with the Federal Diet to induce that body to take part in the continuance of the war, and to settle the question of right to the succession in the Duchies as speedily as possible. Herr von Falkenstein, the Minister for Public Education, stated that instructions in this sense had already been forwarded to the Saxon representative at the Diet. He declared further that the active participation of the Diet in the war and the recognition of the Duke of Augustenburg appeared certain. The Ministerial Provinzial Correspondenz of Thursday, says:—

"At Carlsbad Austria and Prussia have come to decisive arrangements respecting the immediate objects of the campaign, and have agreed to the necessary steps for the ultimate solution of the question of the Duchies. The government and taxation of Jutland will be taken in hand by Prussia and Austria Preparations will be made for crossing into Funen. Schleswig-Holstein is to be placed under the common administration of Commissioners appointed by the German Powers. In the succession question, which has become doubtful, Prussia will wisely consult her own interests and those of Germany."

PRUSSIA.—The treaties for the renewal of the Zollverein, as proposed by Prussia, were signed on Tuesday by the representatives of Prussia, Saxony, Baden, Electoral Hesse, Thuringen, Brunswick, and Frankfort. The negotiations with Oldenburg are still going on.

AUSTRIA.—A despatch from Vienna states that the Allied Powers have sent a Circular Note to their respective representatives abroad, declaring that they no longer consider themselves bound by the concessions made by them at the Conference, since peace has not been re-established. It is also said that the German Plenipotentiaries have reserved for themselves the right of replying to the incomplete and one-sided summary of the proceedings of the last sitting of the Conference. A semi-official statement published on Wednesday declares the assertion of Earl Russell that Austria will confine herself to the occupation of Schleswig and Holstein to be erroneous. Austria has moreover declared that she will henceforth fulfil her duty as a German Power without regard to her own special interests. On Thursday the 23d the Emperor of Austria drove to Schlackenwerth on a visit to the ex-Grand Duke of Tuscany. His Majesty subsequently received Count von Bismark, and dined with the King of Prussia. The Emperor conferred the Grand Cross of the Order of St. Stephen upon Count von Bismark. The town was brilliantly illuminated in the evening. On Friday evening the Emperor left for Prague. The King of Prussia remained with the Emperor up to the time of his departure. General Von Roon arrived at Carlsbad in the evening. Count Rechberg left Carlsbad on the same day.

RUSSIA.—The semi-official Deutsche Peterburger Zeitung of Thursday, in a leading article favourable to Germany, says:—

"It would be inconsistent on the part of England to wage war against Germany, as she took no active steps when the German Powers rejected the Treaty of London of 1852, and subsequently occupied Schleswig and Jutland. England ought, logically, to advise Denmark to yield to Germany."

The Gazette de Cologne publishes the following summary of Russian propositions which have been the subject of negociations at Kissingen and Carlsbad. Russia, Prussia, and Austria bind themselves by a convention to act together on all the European questions of the present time; to declare the Polish question an internal not an international question, and mutually to guarantee to each other their existing frontiers. The ratifications of this convention are to be exchanged shortly. The Minister of Finance has submitted to the Council of State a project for the formation of a Russian Crédit Foncier and Industrial Bank. The establishment of these institutions will be undertaken by the first London houses, among which are the International Financial Society and the London Crédit Foncier. The Bank of Meiningen will also concur in the object. A disaster has occurred to interrupt the great fair of Nijni Novgorod. On the 4th ult. a fire broke out, which destroyed all the wooden erections for the business of the fair. The theatres, the shows, 30 restaurants, 50 hotels, public houses, and baths—in fact, almost the entire town has fallen a prey to the conflagration.

POLAND.—The Austrian Government, on the application of the Swiss Federal Council, has released General Langiewicz, who had been confined as a prisoner in the fortress of Jozefstadt. The Federal Government has given an assurance that the General will not return to Poland. Mdlle. Pustovoloff, the companion in arms of General Langiewicz, is about to be married to a lithographer at Vienna, a Pole by birth.

ITALY.—In the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on Friday, the Minister of Finance announced that the concessionaires of the Crédit Foncier had withdrawn their proposition, in consequence of which the Ministry would withdraw their Bill authorising the concession. At the same time the Minister declared that a fresh Bill would be brought in, which, instead of granting an exclusive concession, should throw the project open to public competition. The Minister for Foreign Affairs, in reply to a question, declared that to protect Italian interests in Peru the Government had determined to hasten the departure of an Italian Minister to Lima. They also intended sending some vessels to the Pacific. In the sitting of Wednesday the Minister of Finance stated that he had been able partly to carry out his finance programme, although he had been in part unsuccessful. Respecting the deficits for 1864 and 1865, he would be able to provide for them by the sale of Crown lands to the value of 200 million lire, and by the sale of the State railways, without having recourse to a loan. He showed that he had effected reductions in the Budget of expenditure to the amount of 40 million lire, and that after the vote upon the new Constitutional law had been taken the reductions would reach 100 million lire. The revenue derived from the income-tax was regularly increasing. The Government and the nation could not accept the policy proposed by Signor Sarraco. The Government was likewise far from adopting the programme of the party of action, viz.—disarmament. The Ministerial programme was still that announced by the Cabinet on coming into office—viz., to hold themselves ready to take advantage of political events in Europe in order to bring about the realisation of the destinies of Italy. Signor Sarraco protested against the interpretation given by the Minister to his political programme, and declared that he had no intention of proposing a policy of disarmament. The Pope officiated in St. Peter's on Wednesday on the occasion of his Fête. He afterwards renewed the protest against the invasions and usurpations of the Papal provinces on the part of Piedmont, already put forth in his allocutions of 1859 and 1860, and in the address to the Catholic Bishops. The Congregation of the Index at Rome has condemned 13 works, among which are Les Misérables by Victor Hugo, and some romances of De Balzac and Soulié.

TURKEY.—The English Government has given biscuits to the value of 5000*l.* to the Circassians, and offered to the Porte to facilitate a special loan for the purchase of objects to be distributed among them. Immense suffering and mortality continue among the immigrants.

THE PRINCIPALITIES.—The Conference of Ambassadors has sanctioned the reported arrangement between the Porte and Prince Couza relative to a change in the constitution of the Principalities. Prince Couza has returned to Bucharest. Prince Soutzos, the ex-Hospodar of Moldavia, is dead.

TUNIS.—Advices from Tunis to the 12th ult. state that the emigration panic still continued, but that the Bey, who was beginning to realise the state of things, had dismissed his Minister, Caid Nissim. It was hoped the Casnadar would also be dismissed, as such a measure would contribute to the suppression of the rebellion. Tranquillity was restored in Sousse after some scenes of violence. The French inhabitants with their consul sought refuge on board their ships. The English consul remained in the town.

MOROCCO.—Despatches from Tangiers announce that a decree has been promulgated granting entire free trade to Europeans in Morocco. This measure has been taken in consequence of the reiterated remonstrances of France and other European Powers.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—The Cape mail arrived on Tuesday with news from the Colony to the 22d of March. Sir Philip Wodehouse opened the Cape Parliament on the 27th of April, for the first time at Graham's Town. The previous attempts of the Government to raise an adequate revenue having proved ineffectual, additional public burdens had become necessary. The expenditure of 1863 was 191,613*l.* in excess of the receipts. Some of the public works must be suspended, and a new Loan Bill introduced. Among the other new measures will be a Bill for the construction and maintenance of the main roads of the colony, the re-introduction of the Succession Duties Bill, a Bill for the sale of Crown lands, the increase of the Customs Duties, Bills for the better administration of justice, and the registry of deeds, for the amendment of the Lands Beacon Act, for checking cattle stealing, issuing new certificates to the Fingoes, and preventing squatting. The Imperial Government has authorised the establishment at British Kaffraria of a defensive force of irregular horse to act as the police. A part of the country beyond the Kei is to be occupied. The head-quarters of the military is for the present to be established at Graham's Town; the Lieutenant-General commanding there to be Lieutenant-Governor of the colony. The Narcissus, flagship of Sir Baldwin Walker, was expected to leave for England on the 26th of May. The Orestes had brought down to Simon's Bay Mr. Allington, Dr. Waghorn, and the remainder of the Church Mission from the Zambesi

PERSIA.—Advices from Persia state that the Shah had resolved upon despatching 20,000 men against the Turcomans in Astrabad.

UNITED STATES.—General Grant has again changed the whole plan of his operations. He has moved his entire army to the south side of the James River, and has effected a junction with General Butler. The movement commenced on the night of the 12th ult. General Baldy Smith's corps embarked at White House for Bermuda Hundred; the remainder of the troops marched to Charles City, Wilcox Landing on the James River. The army crossed the James River on the 14th at Powhattan Point. The Confederates made no attempt to harass the movement. On the night of the 14th Gen. Baldy Smith with 15,000 men advanced towards Petersburg, and opened an attack on the 15th. Fighting continued throughout the day, but with no decided advantage to Smith until the evening, when he carried a strong Confederate work two miles from the city, capturing 13 cannon and 400 prisoners. On the 16th and 17th the remainder of Grant's army joined Baldy Smith and Hancock, and dislodged the Confederates from the greater portion of their outer defences, capturing 450 prisoners and four cannon. At 4 A.M. on the 18th an assault by the entire Federal forces upon the Confederates' inner line was repulsed with heavy loss. A second and third attack at noon and 4 P.M. met with similar results. No further attempt to carry the works has been made. General Grant reports on the 19th that he is intrenched one mile and a half from the city. The Federal loss on the 17th and 18th is admitted to be 8000, but is believed to have been much greater; Hancock's corps alone lost 4200. The Confederate line forms a semi-circle in front of Petersburg, the flank resting on the Appomatox. General Lee's whole army is supposed to be at Petersburg. Confederate despatches report the defeat of General Sheridan at Gordonsville on the 12th by Generals Fitzhugh Lee and Hampton, with the loss of 500 prisoners, and leaving his dead and wounded on the field. Sheridan has since officially announced his return north of the North Anna River. He says that he achieved some unimportant success on the Virginia Central Railway, but admits his defeat at Gordonsville, with the loss of 505 killed and wounded. Much anxiety exists for the safety of Hunter, in consequence of Sheridan's failure to reinforce him. It is reported that Generals Breckinridge and Pickett have left Richmond to attack Hunter, who is reported by Richmond papers to have been repulsed in an attack upon Lynchburg on the 18th. Gen. Morgan has retired from Kentucky with the spoils of his recent raid. General Sherman has been ordered not to risk a general engagement outside of his entrenchments, and General Forrest is marching to attack his rear. The Federal expedition under Sturgis, which left Memphis to check Gen. Forrest's movements, has been defeated by Forrest, at Guntown, Tennessee, with loss of the artillery and many prisoners. General Sturgis was killed. The death of Bishop Polk is reported. Five Federal Generals, prisoners at Charleston, having been placed under fire during the renewal of the bombardment, the Secretary of War has ordered five Confederate prisoners of equal rank to be exposed to the Confederate fire among the Federals. The Senate by a majority of three has refused to repeal the commutation clause in the Conscription Act. The House of Representatives on the 13th ult. repealed the Fugitive Slave Law by a vote of 84 against 58. A joint resolution, which originated in the Senate, for the constitutional abolition of slavery failed to receive the necessary two-thirds vote in the House of Representatives on the 15th; 94 members voted for, and 65 against it. The House of Representatives has passed a bill forbidding time bargains in gold and exchange, and forbidding their negociation in public places. The tenders for the new 6 per cent. loan for 70,000,000 dollars amounted to 90 000,000 dollars. The Government accepted 41,000,000 at an average of 4¼ per cent. premium. It is reported that the balance of the loan will be offered by the Government at 4 per cent. premium. It is rumoured that Secretary Chase has received and will accept an offer of a loan from Germany. Gold rose on the 17th to 245. The whole markets are in confusion. The steamers Isabel, Pevensey, and Donegal have been captured. President Lincoln, on his visit to Philadelphia, made a speech in which he stated that Grant was in a position from which he could never be dislodged until Richmond was taken. Mr. Vallandigham has left Canada and returned to Ohio. On the 15th he made a speech at a Democratic convention in Hamilton, in which he declared that he would hereafter defend his liberty with his life, unless deprived of it by due process of law. He subsequently proceeded to his residence at Dayton.

THE PACIFIC.—Intelligence from Cape Haytien states that there are 22 Spanish vessels of war and transports in the Bay of Monte Christo. The news of the Spanish hostilities against Peru has created great excitement in Chili. Meetings have been held, at which resolutions demanding that the Government should energetically support Peru were passed. Subsequent advices report that Chili and Bolivia have joined Peru against Spain, and that the Chilian squadron has been ordered to the Peruvian waters. The mob in Panama has insulted the French Consul, who has demanded, in the name of his Government, redress from the President of Panama.

MEXICO.—The Emperor and Empress of Mexico landed at Vera Cruz on the 28th of May, and immediately started for the capital. On the 22d ult, Commandant Courcy defeated the united bands of Sandaval and Cadanina at Valparaiso, 30 miles from St. Zacatecas. The Mexicans had 120 killed, and lost in addition to 300 prisoners, five guns, an entire park of artillery, and 200 horses.

CUBA.—Advices from the Havannah state that the inhabitants have bought an iron-clad frigate to reinforce the Spanish squadron in Peru,

HOUSE OF LORDS.

FRIDAY.—Royal Academy.—The Earl STANHOPE called attention to the present position of the Royal Academy, and asked what further steps the Government intended taking in reference to it. He cited the recommendations of the report of the Commissioners, to some of which the Academicians had objected, and contended that no site for a new building for the Academy ought to be given by the Crown till an understanding should be made as to an amendment of the rules.—Lord ST. LEONARD'S thought some of the disputed points were on matters on which the House could give no opinion; but after the decision of the House of Commons, it was certain the National Gallery must be retained in the present building. The Government ought not to impose any terms on the Academy which it was not disposed to accept.—Lord TAUNTON said, if the Academy was to be continually interfered with by the authority of the Government and Parliament, because it indirectly received some assistance from public money, it would be better for the institution and art itself if the Academy refused the assistance and relied wholly on its own resources.—Lord HOUGHTON approved the general conduct of the Academy, and thought it well deserved the patronage of the Government.—The Duke of RUTLAND hoped that in the erection of a new picture gallery some attention would be given to its architectural effect.—Lord HARDINGE believed the Academy had a moral, if not a legal claim to some accommodation at the public expense. But, on the other hand, it was right the Government should exact some conditions from the Academy in return.—Lord OVERSTONE was of opinion that the less the Government had to do with the Academy the better it would be for both. The institution should be left to its own energies.—Earl GRANVILLE said that the report of the commissioners had been referred to the Academy, which had, in reply, presented an address to her Majesty, who had left the question to the consideration of the Government. The House of Commons had rejected the proposal to leave the Academy in Trafalgar Square with enlarged space, and to that decision the Government bowed. Nothing, he thought, would be more unwise than for the Government to take upon itself the regulation of the Fine Arts; but, without going that length, it might usefully insist upon certain regulations calculated to popularise the Academy, and make it more efficient for public purposes in return for the facilities which it received. Government had not had time to consider these details, and he could not give a pledge as to any particular course they might take. In answer to Lord RAVENSWORTH, Lord STANLEY of ALDERLEY ascribed the imperfect working of the Act for the Suppression of Nuisances caused by Noxious Vapours from certain manufactories to the short time the law had been in operation.

MONDAY.—The Conference.—Earl RUSSELL laid on the table the protocols of the Conference. In doing so he said that he followed the course pursued by Lord Liverpool in 1823, when, after the failure of the previous negotiations, France entered upon the invasion of Spain. Against this invasion the English Government protested, though determined not to make it the ground of hostilities with France. The various questions to which the documents he produced referred were very intricate, almost too complicated to excite much public attention. They had long been regarded with indifference, but within the last two years events had brought them to a crisis. Having described the events which had followed the death of the late King of Denmark, and the efforts made by her Majesty's Government, first to prevent hostilities, secondly to obtain an armistice, and thirdly to bring about a Conference between the belligerents and the neutral Powers, his lordship said that at the last meeting of the Conference the Austrian Plenipotentiary made a declaration that it was not intended to carry on hostilities for the purpose of obtaining territory beyond the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein; but her Majesty's Government could not accept that declaration as one upon which they could implicitly reply, after the numerous breaches of faith which the German Powers had already committed. He did not consider that our honour in any way required us to take part in the war, and at no time had a pledge been given that we intended to give material aid to Denmark. France and Russia had both declined taking any part in the war, and if we were to do so alone our mercantile marine would be exposed to great depredations; and unless we were to furnish extensive military assistance, our interference would be in vain. In considering the question we had to bear in mind the position and influence of this country, with all its complicated and multiplied connections in every part of the world. The civil war in America might cease, and our relations with that country, which now possessed an enormous army, and a powerful navy, might at any time be liable to a rupture. Under these circumstances the Government considered it to be their duty still to preserve a neutral attitude, although he did not mean to imply that contingencies might not arise to render a different policy necessary.—The Earl of DERBY, while deprecating premature discussion on the subject, remarked that the Conference had terminated just as he had anticipated. From the time it commenced its sittings it had been a doomed assembly, and it was hopeless to suppose that the slightest good would ever result from its deliberations. The Government now appeared to be earnestly desirous to maintain the peace of Europe, whereas their policy had hitherto been utterly inconsistent with that object. It would be the duty of Parliament and the country shortly to decide whether Ministers had preserved inviolate the honour of England, and whether the Continental difficulties which had arisen were not in great part owing to their weak and vacillating policy.—Earl GRANVILLE said that whenever the discussion took place, he hoped it would not be partial and incomplete.—Lord BROUGHAM regretted that the opportunity of settling the frontier had been lost. The Superannuation (Union Officers) Bill, the Civil Courts (Ireland) Bill, the Servants' Hiring (Scotland) Bill, and the Coventry Free Grammar School Bill were read a second time. The Army Prize Bill and the Countess of Elgin and Kincardine Bill passed through committee. The Beerhouses (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.

TUESDAY.—Brokers' Bonds and Rents Bill.—Lord TAUNTON moved the second reading of this Bill.—Lord KINGSDOWN and Lord CHELMSFORD strongly opposed the measure, as it would deprive the Corporation of London of an income it had possessed for centuries; and Lord REDESDALE described it as a private Bill that repealed a public Act. The motion was negatived without a division.—Lord BROUGHAM called attention to the effect of the Aberdeen Act of 1845 for the suppression of the Brazilian Slave Trade. That measure had completely succeeded in its object, the slave traffic had ceased to exist, and there was no reason to apprehend its revival. He suggested that the Act, which was very severe in its enactments, and intended as a temporary measure only, might be safely repealed.—Earl RUSSELL admitted that the slave trade in Brazil had been abolished by a law of the empire itself; but he did not ascribe that abolition wholly to a change of policy on the part of the Brazilian Government. The Aberdeen Act had rendered the traffic unprofitable, but it was not expedient to repeal the law, as it was possible that, by a change of parties in Brazil, the slave trade might be revived.—Lord HOUGHTON thought the Brazilian Government did not merit the praise it had received. It had abandoned the slave trade from self-interest, but had always refused to take any steps towards emancipation. The Valuation of Rateable Property (Ireland) Bill, the Cathedral Minor Corporation Bill, and the Pier and Harbour Orders Confirmation Bill were read a second time. The County Constabulary Superannuation Bill was passed through committee.—The Army Prize (Share and Deceased) Bill and the Coventry Free Grammar School Bill were read a third time and passed.

THURSDAY.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE moved the second reading of the Oystery Fishery (England and Scotland) Bill, and explained that its object was to provide for the further preservation of the oyster fisheries, which of late years, owing to the want of protection, had very much fallen off in their productiveness.—The Duke of RICHMOND opposed the Bill, on the ground that a commission was now engaged inquiring into the subject.—Lord STANLEY of ALDERLEY, on behalf of the Government, expressed a hope that the Bill would not be pressed further at present.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE then withdrew the Bill.—The Government Annuities Bill was read a second time. The Servants Hiring (Scotland) Bill was withdrawn. The Coventry Free Grammar School Bill was read a third time and passed.—Agrarian Outrages in Ireland.—The Earl of DONOUGHMORE moved a resolution to the effect that, considering the extent to which agrarian outrages prevailed in certain counties in Ireland, and to the difficulties which existed in obtaining convictions for offences of this description, the power of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland to remit the whole or a part of the sentences passed upon persons convicted of such crimes should be exercised with greater care and circumspection. He complained that the Lord Lieutenant had ordered the release of certain prisoners under sentence for an agrarian offence in the county of Westmeath, upon grounds which appeared to be insufficient.—Earl GRANVILLE opposed the motion, considering that it interfered with the royal prerogative, and ought not to be agreed to unless it was conclusively established that the Lord Lieutenant had been influenced by corrupt motives. As to the cases referred to by the noble earl, there was no doubt that Lord Carlisle had acted to the best of his judgment, and had very fairly exercised the royal prerogative. He trusted that the motion would not be pressed to a division.—The Earl of LEITRIM urged Lord Donoughmore to persist in his motion, and to take the sense of the House upon it.—Lord CHELMSFORD considered that no case had been made out to justify what was tantamount to a vote of censure on the Irish Viceroy. The motion was ultimately withdrawn.

FRIDAY.—Japan.—Earl GREY moved a series of resolutions to the effect that the relations between this country and Japan are in a highly unsatisfactory state; that fresh collisions must sooner or later lead to war, possibly resulting in the destruction of the Japanese Government, and spreading anarchy throughout the country; that the treaty with Japan should be carried out and modified, so as to place the future intercourse of the two nations on a better footing; and that an address be presented to her Majesty, praying her to seriously take these matters into consideration.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY.—Naval Flags.—Lord C. PAGET stated that in future there would be but three ensigns—the white for the royal navy, the blue for the naval reserve, and the red for the mercantile marine. The distinction of the three squadrons—red, white, and blue—was abolished, and the flag officers of the navy would now be simply admiral, vice-admiral, and rear-admiral. Excise on Malt.—On the order for going into Committee of Supply, Mr. MORRITT moved a resolution that in the event of any modification of the indirect taxation, the excise on malt required consideration.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER agreed to the propriety of the resolution in the abstract, but said it would be unadvisable to pledge the House to any particular course of action in dealing with the remission of a specific impost.—Lord J. MANNERS supported the motion.—Mr. NEATE opposed it on the ground that the owners and occupiers of land, by reason of their immunities from taxation, and the comparative lightness of their burdens, were not entitled to priority of consideration in any review of taxation.—Mr. NEWDEGATE briefly supported the resolution, which was negatived on a division by 136 to 118.—Mr. D. SEYMOUR called attention to the system pursued of removing paupers and persons under sentence of Banishment from Jersey to the seaports of England.—Sir G. GREY said he had received a report on the subject from the Lieutenant-Governor of Jersey, which he would lay upon the table.—In answer to Mr. MAGUIRE, the ATTORNEY-GENERAL for IRELAND said that a Bill was in preparation for regulating and reforming the Irish Court of Admiralty. The House then went into Committee of Supply pro formâ, and afterwards into Committee on the Inland Revenue (Stamp Duties) Bill, when on the motion of the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER a clause was added for the payment of taxes in Scotland by means of Post-Office orders. The House then went into Committee on the Chimney Sweepers Regulation Bill, the clauses of which were agreed to. The Cranbourne Street Bill was read a second time. The Weighing of Grain (Port of London) Bill passed through Committee. On the order for going into committee on the Court of Chancery (Ireland) Bill, Mr. LONGFIELD moved that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee. He contended at some length that a Bill like this, containing 192 clauses, was a job designed to increase patronage, and could only be properly dealt with in a Select Committee.—Colonel DUNNE seconded the motion.—Mr. W. HUNT recommended the Government to withdraw the Bill, as it was quite impossible that it could pass this session.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL for IRELAND defended the Bill, and expressed a hope that the House would not be deterred from carrying out in Ireland those legal reforms which had already been of so much advantage in England.—Mr. LONGFIELD, at the suggestion of Mr Whiteside, withdrew his motion, when Mr. WHITESIDE moved as an amendment that the committee be postponed for three months. The House having divided, the amendment was negatived by 51 to 49.—Mr. VANCE then moved the adjournment of the debate.—Sir G. GREY said if the House would go into committee pro formâ, the Attorney-General for Ireland would then consider what course he would adopt in reference to the Bill. The Opposition declining to agree to the suggestion, the House again divided, when the motion to adjourn the debate was negatived by 56 to 51.—Mr. COLLINS next moved the adjournment of the House, and said he thought that, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, the Opposition would be justified in occupying the whole night in dividing the House. On a division the motion was again rejected by 56 to 53.—Mr. LYGON then moved the adjournment of the debate, and Lord PALMERSTON consenting, it was agreed to.

MONDAY.—The Conference.—Lord PALMERSTON, in a crowded house, brought up the protocols and papers of the Conference, and said that in conformity with his promise he proposed to make a short statement on a subject which had evoked the feelings, the aspirations, and, he might add, the anxieties of the whole country. The sympathy which the British nation felt for the cause of Denmark would do her honour in all time He did not, however, rise to excite that sympathy or to profit by it, but to state that the Conference having come to an end, the papers which he laid upon the table would at once be printed and placed in the hands of members. He then proceeded to give an outline of the circumstances which had led to the Treaty of 1852, and to the subsequent events down to the invasion of Schleswig. Up to that occurrence, he said, all the parties to the Treaty of 1852, not excepting Prussia, had acknowledged the importance of maintaining the independence of the kingdom of Denmark. The Conference, which assembled on 25th April, proposed an armistice, and hostilities were suspended for a month. During that period the neutral Powers —namely, France, Russia, Great Britain, and Sweden, exerted themselves to the utmost to bring about an arrangement by which peace might be restored. Ultimately the line of the Schlei was proposed as the boundary, and was reluctantly accepted by Denmark. To this, however, Germany would not agree, although for obvious reasons she was quite ready to agree to an armistice of not less than two months. Earl Russell, as the organ of the neutral Powers, then endeavoured to have the matter in dispute referred to arbitration, and the answer of the German Powers was that they would have no objection to a reference to a friendly Power, and that they would accept the proposal provided they were allowed to reserve their decision as to whether they should accept or reject whatever line of demarcation might be fixed upon by the arbitrator. As this was tantamount to a refusal of the arbitration, it would have been more frank and candid if Germany had declined the proposition altogether. The Danes declined the arbitration, stating that they had already made a great sacrifice by accepting the line of the Schlei, and that further north they would not go. The Ambassador of France then made a last effort at an adjustment of the differences between the belligerents by proposing that an appeal should be made to the inhabitants of the intermediate district to ascertain their relative nationality and what were their wishes in respect to government by Denmark or by Germany. The neutral Powers agreed to this suggestion, but it was negatived by Denmark. The labours of the Conference having thus been brought to a close, it became the duty of the Government to consider what course they ought to adopt. They felt that, although originally in the wrong, Denmark had been ill-used; that in her case might had overwhelmed right; and that the whole sympathy of the British nation had been aroused in her favour. Under these circumstances they would have been glad to have recommended the Sovereign to take part with Denmark in the approaching struggle. Remembering, however, that Denmark had orginally been in the wrong; that she had rejected a proposal which might have led to the restoration of peace; that France and Russia, for reasons which no doubt were satisfactory to themselves, were indisposed to give any material support to Denmark; and seeing that the whole brunt of any effort to dislodge the Germans from Schleswig and Holstein would fall upon England alone, her Majesty's Ministers did not consider it was consistent with their duty to advise the Queen to undertake such an enterprise. He did not say that if the war were to assume a different character — if the independence of Denmark were at stake—if Copenhagen were subjected to the horrors of an assault, and if the King were made a prisoner of war, it might not become the duty of the Government to reconsider the matter and submit their policy for the approval of Parliament.—Mr. DISRAELI wished to remind the House of the exact position in which it stood in reference to the matter. The House had not yet incurred any responsibility whatever on the subject. The Conference had not been called by desire of the neutral Powers, but by one of them only, and that one Great Britain. It had met without hope to separate without hope; it met without a basis, and it came to a termination without any result. The time, however, had now arrived when the House should give some opinion, and he considered it would forfeit all claim to the respect of the country if it evaded that responsibility. He therefore gave notice that on the earliest possible day he would invite the House to give its judgment on the foreign policy of the Government. He would have contented himself with this announcement had it not been for the closing observations of the noble lord at the head of the Government. He confessed he heard those words with astonishment. Was the House to understand that it was the islands of Denmark only that were necessary for the independence of the kingdom? If so, how came it that her Majesty's Government had declared that the possession by Denmark of the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein was necessary for the balance of power and the maintenance of public law in Europe? For his own part, he could only look upon the words of the noble lord as a continuation of the senseless and spiritless menaces which had impaired the just influence of the country in the councils of Europe and had diminished the most effective means of obtaining peace. Such language was altogether unworthy of a great Minister. Far better and more dignified would it be to hold the language and the policy enunciated by Messrs. Cobden and Bright, for they would not have threatened any one. They would not have told Denmark that if she were attacked she would not be alone. They would not have exasperated Germany, and lured on Denmark by delusive counsels and fallacious hopes. Annuity to the King of Greece.—On the order for going into committee of supply, Mr. AYRTON moved a resolution to the effect that the grant to the King of Greece of an annuity of 4000*l.* out of moneys belonging to the Consolidated Fund, by treaty not made subject to the sanction of Parliament, was an exercise of the prerogative of the Crown that amounted to a violation of the privileges of the House of Commons. — The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER stated that the grant was made under the conditions of a treaty, and was justified both by precedent and by the peculiar circumstances of the case. The resolution was withdrawn. Courts of Law. — Mr. M. SMITH directed attention to the buildings and sheds used for the superior courts of law and equity, and the inadequate accommodation afforded by them for the judges, the bar, the jurors, and witnesses, and complained of the delay of the Government in introducing their promised measure for providing new courts of justice.—Mr. MALINS and Mr. A. MILLS bore testimony to the disgraceful condition of the present courts, and urged on the Government the necessity of immediate action. — The ATTORNEY-GENERAL said that difficulties had been interposed which, much against the will of the Lord Chancellor, had been the occasion of the delay; but it was intended shortly to introduce a measure on the subject, which he was not without hope Parliament might be induced to agree to even in the present session. The Troops in Canada.—Mr. ADDERLEY brought under notice the inexpediency of having detachments of British troops stationed in exposed parts on the Canadian frontier unless adequately supported by Canadian forces.—Mr. CARDWELL concurred in many of Mr Adderley's observations. He stated the changes made in Canada, especially with reference to the militia, the training of officers, and the preliminary arrangements for the organisation of a good defensive native force.—Lord R. CECIL remarked on the danger to which Canada was exposed.—Mr. C. FORTESCUE stated that preparations had been made and were making to meet future danger.—Colonel DUNNE called attention to the subject of Recruiting for the Army, and to the unwillingness of men to enlist, which created a difficulty in keeping up the numbers of the troops — The Marquis of HARTINGTON said that the number of men recruited had been sufficient to meet the wants of the year, and he therefore thought it unnecessary to discuss the reasons which prevented men from enlisting, for there was no present want of men. The House went into Committee of Supply, when several votes on account of the Civil Service Estimates were agreed to. The report of the Inland Revenue Stamp Duties Bill was brought up and agreed to. The Chimney Sweepers Regulation Bill was read a third time and passed. In committee on the Greek Loan Bill, Colonel DUNNE moved a clause providing that pensions and compensations payable to British subjects and others employed in the Ionian service when under British protection, and guaranteed by treaty, should be regularly paid.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER opposed the motion, on the ground that the Bill was intended to carry into effect the engagements of the Sovereign, and that the proviso ought to be the subject of a separate Bill. After some debate the motion was withdrawn, and the Bill passed through committee.

TUESDAY.—At the morning sitting the Thames Conservancy Bill, the Lunacy (Scotland) Bill, and the Administration of Trusts (Scotland) Bill passed through Committee. The Danish Question.—On the resumption of business at six o'clock, Mr. DISRAELI gave notice that, if convenient to her Majesty's Government, he would, on Monday next, move an address to the Crown thanking her Majesty for directing the correspondence on Denmark and Germany to be laid on the table; assuring her Majesty that the House had heard with deep concern that the sitting of the Conference had been brought to an ineffectual termination; and expressing to her Majesty its deep regret that, while the course pursued by the Government had failed to maintain their avowed policy of upholding the integrity and independence of Denmark, it had lowered the just influence of this country in the councils of Europe, and thereby diminished the securities of peace. (The notice was received with loud cheers from the Opposition benches) — Mr. KINGLAKE immediately announced, amid counter cheers from the Ministerialists, that he intended to move an amendment, the words of which he would give on the next day.—Mr. DOULTON called attention to the gradual diminution of Open Spaces in and around the Metropolis, and moved that it was the duty of the Government to provide for the preservation of such open spaces within the limits assigned by the Inclosure Act of 1845.—Mr. F. PEEL denied that there had been any considerable diminution of open spaces around London, as during the last 20 years only 1500 acres had been enclosed. The Government were not prepared to undertake the duty of raising the money that would be required to preserve such places by the compensation of lords of manors and other owners. The motion was supported by Mr. LOCKE, Sir W. FRASER, and Mr. TORRENS.—Mr. COWPER said that if the resolution were agreed to it would be mere waste paper, and suggested that the better course would be appoint a select committee to inquire into the subject, and ascertain to what extent the difficulties surrounding it might be overcome. On a division, the motion was carried against the Government by 79 to 40. The Queen's Plates.—Mr. P. WYNDHAM proposed that as the annual grant of sums of money voted for Queen's Plates no longer encouraged the breed of good horses, the object for which it was originally given, it should for the future be discontinued. He contended that the condition on which the money had been originally given was not merely to produce the best racing animal but the best breed of horse for general purposes, and that by the present system the Queen's Plates were monopolised by a few horses only.—Mr. NEWDEGATE thought the Government might do good service by withholding the public money unless subscriptions to double or treble the amount were forthcoming, so that a larger inducement might be extended to retain horses in the country which might become the sires of animals with more strength, speed, and power of endurance.—General PEEL denied that the breed of horses had degenerated; on the contrary, he believed that we had better horses now than ever we had. He would not do away with the Queen's Plates, because they held forth a certain encouragement to keep good animals in the country.—Sir R. PEEL could say from his own experience that the breed of horses had not deteriorated. He was free, however, to admit that it might be desirable to reconsider the conditions as to weights and distances upon which horses now ran for Queen's Plates.—Mr. GREGORY thought the Queen's Plates ought to be continued, but suggested that three of the Irish Plates should be taken from the Curragh to some of the provincial towns.—Mr. MERRY attributed the evil of which Mr. Wyndham complained to the large exportation of high-class mares. He feared, however that it would be impossible, under our present system of free-trade, to prevent the exportation —Lord PALMERSTON said that the best proof that the breed of horses had not deteriorated was to be found in the fact that foreigners were constantly coming to England and Ireland to purchase good animals. The question would, however, be referred to the Master of the Horse to consider whether it might not be desirable to reconsider the subject of weights and distances. The motion was then withdrawn. The select committee on the Weighing of Grain (Port of London) Bill was nominated. Leave was given to introduce certain Bills. On the order for resuming the adjourned debate on going into committee on the Election Petitions Bill, Sir F. GOLDSMID opposed the Bill, and was stating his objections when the House was counted out.

WEDNESDAY.—The Vote of Censure.—Mr. KINGLAKE gave notice that in lieu of the last paragraph of the address to be proposed by Mr. Disraeli on Monday, he would move to substitute, by way of amendment, the words following:—"To express the satisfaction with which we have learnt that at this conjuncture her Majesty has been advised to abstain from armed interference in the war now going on between Denmark and the German Powers."—Mr. FENNESSY moved the second reading of the Poor-Law (Ireland) Acts Amendment Bill, the object of which was to extend the system of out-door relief to Ireland, and to assimilate the law of that country to that of England in this and other respects.—Lord NAAS opposed the Bill, on the ground that it would inflict injustice on the ratepayers, and that in a few years the Poor law would be unworkable. He moved as an amendment that the Bill be read a second time that day three months —Sir R. PEEL also opposed the Bill, and on a division the second reading was negatived by 201 to 24. The Tests Abolition (Oxford) Bill passed through committee.—Mr. SELWYN, however, gave notice that the third reading would be opposed. Street Music Metropolis Bill —The House then went into Committee on Mr. Bass's Bill for the suppression of the street music nuisance.—Mr. HANKEY asked whether the peripatetic melodrama known as "Punch" was to be put down by the Bill.—Mr. BASS replied that he looked upon "Punch" as a national institution, and did not propose to interfere with it.—Mr. AYRTON defended the German and Italian musicians, and contended that street music was an attraction to London servants, which ought not to be discouraged —Sir J. PAKINGTON was quite willing to agree to any measure that would authorise the occupier of any house to remove any street musician that was annoying him.—Sir G. GREY supported the Bill, and put the case of a music-master who was giving lessons to his pupils, and who would be unable to continue his avocations if a German band or a barrel-organ were at work beneath his window The present Bill was a reasonable amendment of a defective and he would support it.—Mr. BASS, in supporting said that the late Mr. Thackeray had been driven to to house by bands and organ grinders, and that Mr had been forced out of London altogether. H affection and respect for scullery maids and nursery he could not consent to be worried out of his life they might be indulged with organ-grinding.—Sir J. warned the House against penal legislation. He annoyed like others by street music, but he thought rolling of carriages through the streets all night greater impediment to rest and comfort.—Mr. C said that the public highway was meant to accommodate public traffic The inconvenience occasioned by the carriages could not be compared to the setting up stands in the street, the playing of brass bands, the knocking at hall doors to levy black present law was defective, because the definition of nuisance was too vague and the remedy inoperative. Mr. HANKEY denounced the measure as a tyrannical object of which was to gratify the rich at the expense poor.—Mr. CLAY said that the Bill was not intended suppress street music, but to send it from places where not wanted to other places where it might be tolerated. AYRTON moved as an amendment to omit the words a house," and to substitute the words "in front of a Mr. BASS opposed the amendment, on the ground that be tantamount to the rejection of the measure altogether. On a division the amendment was negatived amid cheers, by 201 to 87. — Mr. BENTINCK moved an amendment, to give the magistrate discretion to order an on conviction to be imprisoned for any time not than three days.—Mr. CRAWFORD asked Mr. Bentinck what he proposed to do with the monkeys of grinders during the incarceration of their owners monkeys could not, he supposed, be sent to the workhouse. Mr. BENTINCK replied that he thought the monkeys ought to be supported at the expense of the metropolitan members. On a division the amendment was carried by 121 to 111. AYRTON moved that the proviso empowering a constable take a street musician into custody without warrant be omitted. On a division the motion was rejected by 111 to —Sir G. GREY then moved the insertion of words to the effect that no constable should be allowed to take a vagrant musician into custody unless the nuisance had been committed within his view.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL supported the motion, on a division it was rejected by 118 to 84.—The hour of adjournment having now arrived, the CHAIRMAN reported progress. The House having resumed, the Weights and Measures (Metric System) Bill was read a third time and passed. The Settled Estates Act Amendment Bill was also read a third time and passed.

THURSDAY.—Mr. A. SMITH moved a resolution to the effect that the new School of Naval Architecture ought to be established in immediate connection with one of the chief naval arsenals, where the students might have, together with scientific lectures of a high order, the benefit of regular, progressive, and continuous instruction in every branch of practical shipbuilding; and further, that the South Kensington establishments and museums are altogether wanting in the educational staff and means of practical application indispensable for such school.—Sir J. PAKINGTON thought that the plan now in operation was a good one, and calculated to promote the study of the science to which it was directed.—Mr. C. PAGET explained that the dockyards lacked the means of furnishing the theoretical knowledge of naval architecture which was necessary to the school; and that it was to supply this want that part of the instruction to the students was given at South Kensington. The motion was withdrawn. Coventry Ribbon Trade.—Mr. TREHERNE called attention to the injury which the ribbon trade of Coventry had suffered, and was still suffering, from the operation of the commercial treaty with France; and asked the Government whether they would use their influence with the French Government to obtain the same free admission into France of English ribbons as was accorded by that treaty, on the principle of free trade to French manufactures of a similar description in this country. —Sir J. PAXTON thought the retention of a duty on the import of ribbons into France was a defect in the commercial treaty with that country, and urged upon the Government the necessity of making representations to the Emperor of the French with the view of inducing him to remit the import duty.—Mr. M. GIBSON did not consider the distress at Coventry to be a result of the French treaty, or that it was within the power of legislation to remove it. Her Majesty's Government would be only too glad to see the same free trade in import existing in France and other countries which was allowed in England.—Mr. NEWDEGATE said that the depression of trade consequent upon the new commercial arrangements had been such as to drive between 11,000 and 12,000 persons from the district.—The House then went into Committee of Supply on the Civil Service Estimates.—Mr. H. BRUCE moved the balance of the vote for National Education: and entered into a variety of statistics in explanation of the distribution of the grants, the number of schools in operation, the pupils attending them, and the general effect produced by the new revised code.—A long discussion ensued, in the course of which Mr. ADDERLEY, Lord R CECIL, Mr. HALFIELD, Sir S. NORTHCOTE, Sir J. PAKINGTON, Lord H. VANE, Sir BOWYER, Mr. LOWE, Mr. LYGON, and Mr. PUGH took part in the "conscience clauses" were subjected to critical examination. Ultimately the vote was agreed to without a division. The vote of 97,582*l.* for the Science and Art Department led to an animated debate, in the course of which the South Kensington Museum was severely criticised by Mr. GREGORY, Mr. AYRTON, Mr. MAGUIRE, Mr. C. BENTINCK, Sir G BOWYER, and others. Mr. AYRTON condemned the recent burlesque performances at the Horticultural Gardens, and Sir G. BOWYER said that he never entered the Museum without feeling that he was in a receptacle for stolen goods.—Mr. A. SMITH moved the rejection of the vote by 15,000*l.* for new buildings, but, on a division, the motion was negatived by 181 to 73. The House having resumed, on consideration of the Lords' amendments to the Penal Servitude Acts Amendment Bill, Mr WARD HUNT moved to disagree to so much of the amendments as dispensed with the necessity of the male holders of tickets of leave reporting themselves monthly to the police —Sir G. GREY opposed the motion, and contended that there was no necessity for monthly reports, and that they would interfere materially with the endeavours of convicts to obtain a honest livelihood.—Sir H. SEYMOUR supported the motion, on the ground that the system of monthly reports had already been tried with the best results in Ireland. On a division the motion of Mr. HUNT was carried against the Government by 129 to 84. The other amendments were agreed to with amendments. The Exchequer Loan Bill was read a third time and passed, after an explanatory statement from the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER in reply to Colonel DUNNE, and a short discussion on a proposal to recommit the Bill.

FRIDAY. — Hudson's Bay Company. — Mr. A. MILLS called attention to the present condition of the territories claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company; and moved an address for copies of all correspondence which had taken place between the Imperial and Canadian Governments respecting the western boundaries of Canada.—Mr. CARDWELL explained the nature of the transactions which had taken place, and agreed to lay the papers on the table. The motion was withdrawn.—Mr. BLAKE called attention to the necessity of amending the law relating to the administration of Lunatic Asylums in Ireland, and of making better provision for the care of imbeciles in each workhouse. [Left sitting].

ELECTION OF SHERIFFS.—Friday being Midsummer Day the Liverymen assembled in Guildhall for the election of Sheriffs for London and Middlesex. It was understood that Aldermen Dakin and Besley would be elected without opposition, but in addition to the aldermen Messrs. Ellis, Croskey, and Gunn were put in nomination, and the two first were elected by a show of hands. A poll was demanded, which at the close on Friday showed a large majority for the aldermen. Messrs. Ellis and Gunn have since withdrawn from the contest, but the poll has nevertheless continued until yesterday afternoon, when Aldermen Dakin and Besley were declared to be elected by a large majority.

THE CASE OF MR. BEWICKE.—The select committee of the House of Commons have reported that, in their opinion, Mr. Bewicke is not entitled to any compensation out of the public purse. They are of opinion that, in order to lay any ground for a claim for such compensation, it was incumbent on Mr. Bewicke to prove that there had been a miscarriage of justice in his case, through the default of the persons charged with the administration of the law; and, after careful inquiry, they were satisfied that there was no such default. They are unable to accede to the proposition that persons who have been convicted in due course of law by evidence subsequently proved to be false are entitled to compensation out of the public purse; but, even if they could have acceded to such proposition, there are circumstances in Mr. Bewicke's case that would have taken it out of such general rule; Mr. Bewicke's own conduct, as admitted by himself, having furnished material evidence in support of the accusation against him, independently of other facts deposed to by witnesses of unimpeachable character. In the peculiar circumstances of the case they suggest for the favourable consideration of the Crown, whether the full value of his goods and chattels at the time of the forfeiture should not be restored to him, minus the net produce of the sale by auction, already voluntarily paid over to Mr. Bewicke by the commissioners.

METROPOLITAN POLICE COURTS.—Mr. Hall, the chief magistrate of Bow Street, is about to retire from that office, which he has held for the last 25 years. Mr. Henry, who has been his colleague in Bow Street for a considerable time, is to succeed him as chief magistrate; and Mr. Flowers, Recorder of Stamford, will succeed to the vacancy thus created.

ABOLITION OF TURNPIKES.—On Thursday, at noon, the new Act came into operation, and London was relieved from no less than 81 turnpike gates and bars all through the northern districts of the metropolis. The removal of these toll bars has opened 51 miles of road, and it is expected that the abolition of those on the Surrey side will soon follow.

THE SUBWAYS IN THE STREETS.—At one of the last meetings of the Metropolitan Board of Works it was resolved to withdraw the bill introduced into Parliament by the Board for giving them compulsory powers to place the pipes of gas and water companies and the wires of telegraph companies in subways. It appeared that the bill had been opposed by many powerful companies, and the Committee of the House of Commons had withdrawn the clause giving the Board power to place the pipes of gas companies in the subways, though it was well known that the streets were continually broken up by gas companies, and that these companies would effect a great saving by putting their pipes in subways. As, therefore, the Committee of the House of Commons had determined that the Board should not have the power in reference to gas companies, the Board resolved to withdraw the bill, and wait until the public were aware of the great value of subways.

BEDDINGTON HOUSE.—This celebrated mansion, the ancient seat of the Carews in Beddington Park, near Croydon, is about to become the Asylum for Female Orphans. At a special general court on Monday it was resolved, on the recommendation of a committee, to purchase Beddington House, with about 22 acres of the Park, of which above eight acres may be re-sold, leaving ample space for the purposes of the asylum. The purchase money is 15,000*l*., and the building can be put into thorough repair and converted into an appropriate asylum for about 6000*l*.

SUSPECTED MURDER AT ANERLEY.—An itinerant vendor of butter, eggs, &c., well known in Penge and its vicinity, was discovered dead in a field near the Anerley station a few days since. She was lying on her back, with her clothes over her head, in a pool of blood, which had flown from various wounds inflicted on her head and person. A short iron bar with which the blows are supposed to have been inflicted was found near the spot. Two navvies, with whom she was seen drinking at Penge two days previously, were apprehended on suspicion of having perpetrated the deed, and after several examinations were committed by the magistrate for trial. The coroner's jury also at the adjourned inquest on Tuesday returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against them.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Report states that the deaths registered in London in the week that ended Saturday, June 25, were 1262. The average number in the corresponding week of the 10 years, 1854–63, corrected for increase of population, was 1165. The present return is therefore 97 above the average. During the week the births of 973 boys and 224 girls, in all 1897 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854–63 the average number was 1901.

COWES.—Her Majesty has recently added 160 acres to her property at Osborne by the purchase of two farms for 5400*l*.

LIVERPOOL.—A shocking case of murder and suicide occurred in this town on Tuesday week. A woman called Hendron, the wife of a dock labourer, had been given to habits of intemperance for some time past, and had latterly shown symptoms of insanity. On the night in question she went to bed with her husband and two children, and while they were asleep she cut the throats of the children, and afterwards committed suicide by cutting her own throat. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict that the deceased woman cut her own throat and the throats of her children during a fit of temporary insanity. One of the children is likely to recover.

SALISBURY.—The Cathedral Restoration Fund has reached the sum of about 12,000*l*. It is estimated by Mr. Scott, the architect, that between 35,000*l*. and 40,000*l*. will be required. The whole of the Bishop of Salisbury's expenses in the suit against Dr. Rowland Williams, vicar of Broad Chalks, have been raised, so that no further subscriptions are needed.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Seven more of the crew of the late Confederate cruiser Alabama who were rescued from drowning by French pilot boats, arrived at this port on Friday from Havre. This makes a total of nearly 50 who have arrived at this port. Among them are the following officers:—Captain R. Semmes, Lieut. J. M. Kell, Lieut. Sinclair, Lieut. Howell (Marines), Mr. J. Bullock, master (a brother of Captain Bullock); Messrs. Maffitt and Anderson, midshipmen; Messrs. James Evans, George T. Fulham, Muliner, and Schröeder, master's assistants; Mr. O'Brien, engineer; Mr. W. B. Smith, captain's clerk.—On Monday, at a meeting of the students at Charing Cross Hospital, held in the lecture theatre of the institution, a committee was appointed to take steps to erect a memorial to the late Mr. David Herbert Llewellyn, surgeon of the Alabama, and formerly a student and silver medallist of the school.

THREATENING LETTERS IN WESTMEATH.—A few days since Mr. Morris, agent of Colonel Fulke Greville, M.P. for Westmeath, a supporter of tenant right, issued an order to the tenants on the Delvin estate, against cutting "turf," or peat, in Caddagh Bog. In consequence of this Mr. Morris received a threatening letter, telling him to expect a "doase of lead" if he did not "reprimand" the order. Colonel Greville has since published an address to his tenants, in which he says:—

"I cannot parley with assassins, nor can I suffer the life of one who has served me faithfully to be placed in jeopardy without taking the strongest measures to afford him that protection which unfortunately the laws of the land are inadequate to give. Therefore I give notice that if a hair of his head is touched, I am resolved to evict every family on the townland of Caddagh, and to level their houses with the ground."

Railways.

THE EGHAM ACCIDENT.—The coroner's inquest at Egham was resumed on Friday, when it appeared that the second guard of the second train had absconded, and the authorities were consequently unable to produce him before the jury. Colonel Yolland, the Government inspector, gave evidence, and stated his opinion that the system of running trains adopted by the railway company was dangerous. The jury returned a verdict of Manslaughter against Lee and Trainer, the driver and fireman of the second train, with a strong censure on the management of the line. The two men were admitted to bail in 100*l*. each, with two sureties of the same amount. The adjourned inquest on Mr. Esau Trigg, who died in the Westminster Hospital, was concluded on Monday. The evidence related only to the cause of death, as the scientific part of the subject was discussed at Egham. The jury, therefore, merely returned a verdict that deceased met his death from collision. It is stated that among the most serious sufferers from the recent railway accident at Egham is John C. Heenan, the Benicia Boy. It appears that when the first alarm was given he jumped on the platform as the train was moving, and falling heavily, injured his spine so severely that he has suffered from a continuous succession of fits ever since.

Obituary.

MRS WIGRAM, wife of the Bishop of Rochester, died on the 27th ult. at Mark Hall, Essex, after a very sudden attack of rheumatic fever, which proved fatal in the course of a few days. Mrs. Wigram belonged to the Arkwright family, and was on a visit to her relatives at the time of her death.

SIR CHRISTOPHER WILLIAM CODRINGTON, M.P. for East Gloucestershire, died on the 24th ult., at Dodington, in that county, from an attack of bronchitis, in his 60th year. He was son of the late Sir Bethell Codrington, by the sister of the second Lord Proby, and nephew of Sir Edward Codrington. The baronetcy has been in dispute, and, according to the rules of the Herald's College, has been sustained in the elder branch of the family, Sir William Raimond Codrington being acknowledged as the legitimate heir. The deceased member was elected for East Gloucester in 1834 on the death of Sir W. Guise, and has sat for that division ever since. He was born in 1805, and was educated at Christ Church, Oxford. He married, in 1836, Lady Georgina Charlotte Anne, second daughter of the late Duke of Beaufort by his first wife.

GENERAL SIR ROBERT GARDINER, G.C.B., K.C.H., colonel commandant of the B. Brigade, Royal Horse Artillery, died on Sunday last at his residence at Claremont, in his 83d year. He was born in 1781, joined the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, in 1795, and obtained his commission in the Royal Artillery in 1797. In the same year he was present at the blockade of Gibraltar by the French and Spanish fleets, and in 1798 served under Sir Charles Stuart, at the capture of Minorca. In 1805 he served under Lord Cathcart in the north of Germany, and subsequently became aide-de-camp to Sir John Moore in Sicily and Portugal, and was present at the retreat from Corunna. He next served in the Walcheren expedition, and in 1810 proceeded to the Peninsula, and was present in the battles and sieges of Barossa, Badajos, Salamanca, Madrid, Burgos, Roleia, Vimiera, Morales, Vittoria, Pyrenees, Orthes, Tarbes, and Toulouse. In 1815 he was present with the Hussars at Quatre Bras and Waterloo, and at the occupation of Paris. For these services he was created a Knight Commander of the Bath. In 1816, on the marriage of the Princess Charlotte to Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg, he was selected for the post of principal Equerry. In 1831, on his Royal Highness accepting the throne of Belgium, Sir Robert continued to reside at Melbourne, on the Claremont estate. He was military Aide-de-Camp to George IV., William IV., and to her Majesty until he attained General's rank in 1841. In 1848 he was appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Gibraltar, and his public service terminated with that appointment in 1855. He had become Colonel-Commandant of the 4th Battalion Royal Artillery in 1853, and was advanced to the Grand Cross of the Bath in 1855. In April, 1864, he was appointed Colonel-Commandant of the B. Brigade, Royal Horse Artillery. He received the order of the Guelph for his services in Hanover, the Russian Order of St. Anne for Waterloo, and the Spanish Grand Cross of Carlos III. He held a distinguished service pension, and had the gold medal and clasps for Barossa, Salamanca, Vittoria, Orthes, and Toulouse; the silver war medals for Roleia, Vimiera, and Corunna, and the Waterloo medal and clasp. He married, in 1816, the eldest daughter of Lieut.-General Sir John Macleod, of which marriage two children survive—Colonel Lynedoch Gardiner, and a daughter married to Major Frend.

MAJOR-GENERAL VIGORS died on the 21st ult., at Paris, after a short illness. He was the fourth son of the late Nicholas Aylward Vigors, Esq., of Old Leighlin and Erindale, Carlow. He served throughout the campaigns of 1838 and 1839 in Affghanistan. He commanded the two flank companies of the 13th Light Infantry, which formed a part of the force under Sir Robert Sale, sent in pursuit of the ruler of Candahar, passed the rapid Helmond with 18 men on a small raft, and landed close to the fort of Giriskh, which was found just vacated by the enemy. He commanded the left flank company of the 13th, with the forlorn hope, under Colonel Dennie, at the storm and capture of the Fort of Ghuznee, and was present at the capture of Cabul. He afterwards commanded the St. Helena Regiment, and for some time acted as Governor of St. Helena. He had received a medal and a good service pension for his services.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, June 27.

The number of Beasts is considerably smaller than on Monday last, and a large proportion of middling quality; consequently choicer kinds have advanced in price, and a fair clearance of all descriptions is effected. Sheep are not quite so plentiful; prices are rather better on the average, although trade is not very brisk. Lambs and Calves are selling about the same as on Thursday. From Germany and Holland there are 1270 Beasts, 4490 Sheep, and 460 Calves; from France, 30 Calves; from Scotland, 360 Beasts; from Ireland, 30; from Norfolk and Suffolk, 2080; and 100 from the northern and midland counties.

The number of Beasts is larger than on Thursday last, and trade is not very brisk, yet prices are nearly as good as on Monday. We have about an average supply of Sheep and Lambs; the demand is not quite so good as it has been, but there is no quotable reduction in price. Lambs and Calves are selling as on Monday last. Our foreign supply consists of 790 Beasts, 3190 Sheep, and 680 Pigs. Milch Cows 75.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, June 27.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was small, and we raise our quotations 2s. per qr. The attendance was good, but the transactions in foreign Wheat were limited to about 2s. per qr. over the rates current on Monday last. Barley, Beans, and Peas are firm at the prices of this day se'nnight. Oats bring an advance of 6d. to 1s. per qr. Country and foreign Flour were each 1s. per sack, and American 6d. per barrel dearer.

FRIDAY, July 1.

The weather since the 24th ult. has been cloudy, showery, and cold for the season of the year, and not particularly genial for the setting of the Wheat blossom. The plant is represented as very promising on good and well farmed soils, but less so on the poorer and light. During the past week the improved tone of the Wheat trade, consequent upon the state of politics, enabled holders to realise an advance of 1s. to 2s. per qr, but this improvement has been nearly lost again in the chief markets of the kingdom held during the last two days, and the dull state of the French markets has caused some proportion of those purchases lately made for export to be resold here. The English markets have been good for all kinds of Spring Corn at rather better prices. Flour has met a fair sale at an advance of 6d. per barrel and 1s. per sack. Since Friday last 2 grain-laden vessels have arrived off the coast, both Wheat. Late prices are asked, but buyers do not come forward unless where some concession is made, which is the exception. Paris, June 30.—Wheat: the Paris and country markets remain inactive, and the tendency of prices downwards. Flour has been a little firmer since yesterday, and quotations unaltered. The six marks are worth 35s. 9d. per 280 lbs. The stocks are estimated at 19,242 cwts. The arrivals of English and foreign Oats and foreign Barley are large, of English Wheat small, of foreign Wheat and Flour good. The market was very thinly attended, and English Wheat being scarce commanded Monday's prices, but foreign, for which the demand was limited, was purchaseable at 1s. per qr. less than on that day. Barley, Beans, and Peas are fully as dear. Oats are neglected, and must be quoted 6d. per qr. cheaper. Flour is 6d. per barrel lower.

LIVERPOOL, June 28.—We have had a good attendance of both town and country millers and dealers at to-day's Corn Exchange, and notwithstanding the pacific tone of Parliament last night, Wheat has not given way more than 1d. per cental, and Flour 3d. per barrel and sack, with a fair consumptive demand thereat. Indian Corn is offered very sparingly, and cannot be bought any cheaper. Oats and Oatmeal steady at full prices. Beans are scarce, and 6d. per qr. dearer. The market on the whole is very sound at the reduction.

FRIDAY, July 1.—There was a fair attendance at market. Wheat rather dearer, with moderate demand. Flour: barrels more inquired for, but prices unchanged. Indian Corn steady. Egyptian Beans scarce. Saidi sold at 35s. Oats and Oatmeal firm.

News of the Week.

IN the House of Lords on Friday Earl GREY moved a series of resolutions condemnatory of the policy pursued by Her Majesty's Government with regard to the empire of Japan, and urging the adoption of such changes in the treaty as would avert further hostilities and promote an increase of friendly commerce between the two nations to their mutual benefit. Earl RUSSELL opposed the motion, and after a short debate the resolutions were negatived on a division by 30 to 11. On Monday, in reply to the Marquis of CLANRICARDE, Earl RUSSELL stated that the Prussian Government had formally deniep the authenticity of the despatches recently published in its name, in reference to the alleged renewal of the Holy Alliance. The Earl of MALMESBURY gave notice that on Friday he would move a resolution on the recent Conference, identical in its terms with the resolution moved by Mr. DISRAELI in the House of Commons. On Tuesday, in answer to the Earl of SHAFTESBURY, Earl RUSSELL said that the Government had received no official confirmation of the report that the Prussian troops had refused quarter to the Swedish volunteers found in the Danish ranks when the island of Alsen was taken; but he would make inquiries on the subject. Lord BROUGHAM withdrew the Bribery Bill for the present Session. The Facilities for Divine Service in Collegiate Schools Bill passed through Committee. On Thursday the Railway Construction Facilities Bill was read a second time, on the understanding that it is to be referred to a Select Committee. Several other Bills were advanced a stage.

In the Commons on Friday, on the order for the third reading of the Tests Abolition (Oxford) Bill, Sir W. HEATHCOTE moved that it be read a third time that day three months. On a division the amendment was negatived by 150 to 140. On the question that the Bill be read a third time, another division was called for, which resulted in a tie, the numbers being—for the third reading, 170; against it 170. The SPEAKER having given his casting vote for the "ayes," the Bill was read a third time by a majority of one. On the question that the Bill do pass, the House again divided, when the motion was negatived by 173 to 171. The Bill was consequently thrown out. The Street Music (Metropolis) Bill passed through committee, with the addition of a new clause moved by Sir G. GREY. On Monday Mr. DISRAELI, in a speech of great length, moved the resolution of which he gave notice last week, that an Address be presented to the QUEEN regretting the failure of the Conference, and expressing the opinion of the House that, while the course pursued by Her Majesty's Government had failed to maintain their avowed policy of upholding the integrity and independence of Denmark, it had lowered the just influence of this country in the counsels of Europe, and thereby diminished the security for peace. Mr. NEWDEGATE moved, as an amendment, that the independence of Denmark and the possessions of that kingdom, on the terms proposed by the representatives of the neutral Powers in the Conference, ought to be guaranteed. The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER and the LORD ADVOCATE opposed Mr. DISRAELI'S resolution, which was supported by General PEEL and Lord STANLEY. The debate was then adjourned to Tuesday, when the motion was opposed by Mr. COBDEN, Mr. ROEBUCK, Mr. HORSMAN, Mr. W. E. FORSTER, Lord R. VANE, and Mr. WHALLEY, and supported by Lord R. CECIL, Mr. B. JOHNSTONE, Mr. LIDDELL, Lord R. MONTAGU, and Mr. S. FITZGERALD. The debate was then adjourned to Thursday. On Wednesday the Trespass (Ireland) Bill passed through Committee with amendments. On the order for going into Committee upon the Punishment of Rape Bill, Sir C. O'LOGHLEN moved as an amendment that the Bill be committed that day three months. On a division the amendment was carried by 84 to 78. The Bill was therefore lost. The Municipal Corporations (Ireland) Bill and the Fisheries (Fresh Water) Bill were withdrawn. On Thursday the adjourned debate on Mr. DISRAELI's resolution was resumed, when the motion was opposed by Mr. LAYARD, the ATTORNEY-GENERAL, and Mr. ONSLOW; and supported by Mr. HARDY, Mr. BENTINCK, Mr. COGAN, Sir F. GOLDSMID, Mr. PEACOCKE, and Lord JOHN MANNERS. The debate was then adjourned to last night, on the understanding that the question should then be brought to a division. The Cranbourne Street Bill passed through Committee, and the Street Music Bill after a division was read a third time and passed.

From the seat of war we have a report that Prussia intends to take possession of all the islands in the Danish Archipelago, and afterwards to attack Copenhagen itself. Prince JOHN of GLUCKSBURG, the youngest brother of the KING of DENMARK, has arrived at Berlin, and is supposed to be the bearer of a proposal for peace. The reported massacre of 400 Swedish Volunteers by the Prussians is contradicted.

Accounts from New Zealand announce another disaster to our troops in their contest with the natives. On the 29th of April General CAMERON, with a force consisting of the 43d Regiment and the crews of her Majesty's ships Esk, Harrier, and Curaçoa, attacked a strong position held by the Maoris at Tauranga. The assault was unsuccessful, but the natives, who had suffered severely, abandoned the position during the night. Our loss was 7 officers killed on the spot, 7 wounded, 3 of whom died after the action; 21 men killed and 77 wounded. Among the killed were Captain HAMILTON, of her Majesty's ship Esk; Commander HAY, of the Harrier; Lieut. Colonel BOOTH, commanding the 43d Regiment, three captains, and two lieutenants of the same regiment, and Lieutenant HILL, of the Curaçoa.

The latest accounts from the United States are ominous of disaster to the Army of the Potomac. On the 21st ult. the Federal corps under Generals HANCOCK and WRIGHT made a move from the right to the left for the purpose of more closely investing Petersburg, but were confronted by General HILL's corps, and driven back with grea loss. On a reconnaissance being made it was found that the Confederates were in strong force in an entrenched line, on which a general engagement took place, in which the Federals suffered heavily in killed and wounded, and lost four guns. On the 22d General HILL passed right through General GRANT's lines, attacked the second corps in its rear, drove it from its entrenchments, captured an entire brigade with five guns, and inflicted a loss exceeding 3000 in killed and wounded. In consequence of this disaster General GRANT has abandoned his advance upon the Weldon Railroad, and has withdrawn to his entrenched position before Petersburg. Confederate accounts assert that General HUNTER and two columns of General SHERMAN's army have been defeated with heavy loss; and it is said that General BUTLER's forces, while engaged in the destruction of the Petersburg and Richmond Railway, were suddenly attacked by General LEE and driven off with heavy loss. President LINCOLN visited General GRANT at his head-quarters at City Point on the 21st. The Senate has passed the Bill repealing the Fugitive Slave Law by a vote of 24 to 7.

PRINCE ALFRED.—The Racoon, with Prince Alfred on board, was to have left the Firth of Forth for Norway on Saturday, but her departure has been delayed by the outbreak of smallpox on board. The crew have consequently been encamped for the time on the island of Incholm, and others have been removed to the Edinburgh Infirmary, while the vessel is subjected to a thorough purification. Prince Alfred, who landed on Saturday, is residing at Douglas's Hotel, Edinburgh, waiting the arrival of the Aurora, Captain Sir Leopold M'Clintock, which is understood he is now to join.

THE CABINET.—A Cabinet Council was held on Saturday at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury in Downing Street. Another Council was held on Wednesday.

MEETING OF THE CONSERVATIVE PEERS.—A meeting of Conservative Peers was held on Monday at the Marquis of Salisbury's residence in Arlington Street. About 80 peers were present, but the Earl of Derby was prevented attending by an attack of gout. The meeting lasted nearly two hours.

ORDER OF THE BATH.—The Queen has given orders for the appointment of Major-General Sir Henry Storks, K.C.B., and G.C.M.G., late Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands, to be a Knight Grand Cross of the Bath.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Emperor presided at a Council of Ministers on Saturday, and left Fontainebleau on Thursday for Vichy. The Empress, with the Prince Impérial, left on the same day for St. Cloud. Baron von Beust was a visitor at Fontainebleau before the Emperor's departure. His Excellency dined with M. Drouyn du Lhuys on Sunday evening. The Opinion Nationale has received a second warning for an article signed by M. Guéroult, entitled "The Programme of the English Cabinet," in which, "by representing France to be subservient to the doctrine of peace at any price, it insults and calumniates the Emperor's Government." It is reported in Paris that the Danish Government has formally applied to France for her mediation, but that the application has been rejected. The Paris papers continue to discuss at great length the failure of the Conference, and by the violence of their language against this country betray their deep mortification at the resolution of the English Government not to embark in a war with Germany for Denmark. The prospect of England having singly to bear the brunt of the conflict, with the chance of humiliation and defeat, has for some been regarded with delight, and their disappointment finds vent in the strongest language. They discuss at great length the despatches published by the Morning Post in reference to the alleged revival of the Holy Alliance, and, notwithstanding the denials of the Austrian and Prussian Governments, express a firm belief in their authenticity. They regard the documents as affording material proof of what was suspected to be the real object of the meeting of the Sovereigns at Kissengen, and unanimously declare that the chief object of the alliance of the Northern Powers is hostility to France. The Emperor, as arbitrator in the differences between the Viceroy of Egypt and the Suez Canal Company, has, on the report of a commission appointed by his Majesty, awarded 84,000,000 fr. (3,200,000*l*.) to the company.

ALGERIA.—General Rose has met 500 deputies from the insurgent tribes on their way to make offers of submission. The Algiers journals state that the chief of the revolt will be transported to Senegal, and the insurgent tribes disarmed.

SPAIN.—A circular note on the Peruvian question has been addressed by the Spanish Government to its diplomatic agents abroad, denying all intention of setting up a claim of revindication, the only object of Spain being to occupy the Chincha Islands in order to obtain satisfaction from Peru. The note also adduces proofs of the risk of losing his life, encountered by the Duke of Mazaredo during his journey through Peru. The iron-clad frigate Numancia, the sailing frigates Berenguela, Blanca, and Vencedora, and the steamer San Quintin will sail for the Pacific in the course of the present month.

PORTUGAL.—Intelligence from Lisbon asserts that the Portuguese Government will shortly be obliged to contract a new loan. The vine disease is again prevalent in Portugal. The railway from Lisbon to Oporto has been opened for traffic. The formal inauguration will not yet take place. A commission is sitting to consider the question of Custom House reform. Preparations are making for the general elections.

DENMARK.—Letters from Copenhagen, dated the 1st inst., state that a rumour was current, and generally believed there, that the King was disposed to make peace. Prince John of Glucksburg, youngest brother of the King, passed through Lubeck on Monday on his way to Berlin, and this journey is regarded as an indication of such a desire. It is also reported that King Christian has personally requested the intervention of the Emperor of the French. An address to the King has been proposed in the Rigsraad, thanking his Majesty for his determination to cede territory rather than sacrifice the independence of the country. The rumoured resignation of General Gerlach, and the appointment of General Steinmann as his successor has been confirmed.

The Danish Duchies.—It is asserted that Prussia intends to take possession of all the islands in the Danish Archipelago successively, and afterwards to endeavour to attack the Danes in Copenhagen itself. On the 3d a reconnoitring force from the 8th Hussars and the 50th Infantry regiment drove back a party of Danes who had crossed the Limfjord. Sixty prisoners were taken, of whom 30 were wounded. The Prussian loss was inconsiderable. A private letter from Tondern says that during the night of the 6th, the Austrian Rifles took possession of the Island of Fohr. The Prussians continue actively employed in erecting batteries at Middelfahrt, opposite Fühnen. A telegram from Sonderburg of the 1st inst. stated that at the partial clearance of the battle field on the previous day, the Prussians discovered 400 Swedish volunteers, to whom no quarter was given. The statement is now said to be without foundation. The Danish loss at the capture of Alsen is officially stated to amount to from 2500 to 3000 men, most of them being killed and wounded, among whom are 81 officers. It is said that the Rolf Krake was but slightly injured in her engagement with the Prussian batteries. A ship-of-war, a gunboat, and two gun-sloops succeeded in making good their escape from the Alsen Sound, while one gun-sloop and a jolly-boat were blown up, the crews, however, being saved. The Prussians and Austrians are increasing the number of their troops in the Duchies. Very considerable contributions have been imposed upon the inhabitants of Jutland, which has been placed under Prussian administration. The Danish officials and inhabitants have been ordered to obey the Prussian authorities, to whom the Customs' dues and the revenues derived from other sources are to be handed over. General Munster has destroyed several bridges in the neighbourhood of Viborg, including the railway bridge at Rindsholm, and cut down the telegraph wires along the railway. He is also reported to have given notice to the English chief engineer of the line, that the railway bridge at Langau will be blown up in a few days. The Duke of Augustenburg on Sunday received the deputation with the address of the Schleswig Holstein committee. In his reply his Highness said that it was to be hoped that a division of Schleswig had been prevented by the active proceedings of the German Powers. He also said:—

"I hope that the claims put forward by the Grand Duke of Oldenburg will not defer the time when I shall be able to lead the Duchies against the common enemy. The interests of Germany and the welfare of the country demand a speedy settlement of public affairs on a firm basis. I may hope that the country will enable me to fulfil its obligations towards Germany, and to uphold the relations of that Power which will in future be our most effectual protection against Denmark."

Sweden.—It is announced that a Swedo-Norwegian squadron has received orders to put to sea immediately and to concentrate in the waters of Göttenburg, where it will take up a position of observation.

Holland.—The Emperor of Russia and the Czarewitch on leaving Kissingen are to pay a visit of several days' duration to the King of Holland at the Hague, after which the Czarewitch will visit Scheveningen, where he will remain some weeks for sea bathing.

Frankfort.—In the sitting of the Federal Diet on Thursday it was resolved, on the proposition of the Schleswig-Holstein Committee, to request the Government of the Grand Duke of Oldenburg to use the greatest despatch in substantiating his claims to the succession of the Duchies.

Hanover.—The Lower Chamber on the 1st inst. resolved, with the assent of the Minister of Justice, to represent to the Government whether, provided common action with the remaining Federal States appeared improbable, Hanover should not for her part commence constructing a German Federal fleet.

Prussia.—Prince John, youngest brother of King Christian of Denmark, arrived at Berlin on Wednesday, and will probably proceed to Carlsbad. The King of Prussia will leave Carlsbad for Gastein on the 15th inst. Count von Bismark has addressed a telegram to the Prussian Ambassador in London, stating that all the Prussian despatches on the "Holy Alliance" published by the Morning Post are pure inventions; and that no such document nor anything similar exist.

Austria.—Count Rechberg has addressed a despatch to the Austrian Ambassadors in Paris, London, St. Petersburg, and Stockholm, recapitulating all the proceedings of the Conference, in order to prove that Denmark is alone responsible for its failure, as she rejected the last proposition of the neutral Powers. The Oesterreichische Zeitung says that all the Austrian despatches published by the Morning Post, and professing to have passed between Count von Bismark and Count von Goltz in reference to the "Holy Alliance," are purely apocryphal, and an unquestionable fabrication. It adds that on the succession question "Austria is pledged to no claimant, and has entered into no engagements towards Russia." The evening edition of the official Wiener Zeitung also denies the conversation alleged by the Morning Post to have taken place between Count Rechberg and the Prussian Ambassador at Vienna, in which Austria is said to have claimed Russian aid and guarantees for her possessions as the conditions of an alliance between the Northern Powers. It declares that no proposition has been made tending in this direction.

Italy.—In the Chamber of Deputies on Tuesday the debate on the financial policy of the Government was continued. Signor Mordini reviewed the programme of the Left. Signor Lanza criticised the financial system of the Government. He contested the accuracy of the statement on the condition of the Treasury, and proposed economy in several departments. He also urged the Cabinet to maintain the understanding with France, in order to render the frontiers secure against invasion by brigands, stating that brigandage cost the country 50,000,000 lire annually. The President of the Council stated that no financial plan had been proposed in opposition to that brought forward by the Ministry, and that no political programme had been clearly laid down by their opponents, except that of the Left, demanding an immediate declaration of war. He objected to any order of the day which did not express absolute confidence in the Government. A vote of confidence was then passed by 182 to 126 votes.

Russia.—A Russian squadron, composed of one ship of the line, three frigates, and two transports, has been equipped at Cronstadt, where great naval preparations are making. It is said that a Russian squadron of evolution will shortly touch at the Swedish and Danish ports in the Baltic.

Greece.—The King returned unexpectedly to Athens on the 4th inst. Despatches from Greece give a sad picture of the political and financial position of the country, and state that the Ionian Islands are threatened with anarchy.

Danubian Principalities.—The Governments of England and France have agreed to adopt a united policy towards the Danubian Principalities. Prince Alexander Couza has returned to Bucharest perfectly satisfied with his mission to Constantinople.

Tunis.—The Bey of Tunis has sent 4000 soldiers against the insurgents. According to all accounts the insurrection of Tunis has had no connection with that of the Algerian tribes.

India.—A despatch from Bombay of the 9th June states that the Ameer of Afghanistan has defeated one of his brothers, who has fled into British territory. The Ameer is now marching against his other brothers.

China.—A telegram from Shanghai of May 23d says that Chang-chow-foo has been taken by Major Gordon, and that Taugyau has fallen. In his previous repulse at Chang-chow-foo he had 6 officers killed and 21 wounded. The killed were Colonel Morton, Captain Smythe, Captain Rhodes, Lieut. Greenlaw, Lieut. Williams, and Lieut. Brown. The wounded were Lieut. Reynold, Capt. Abbot, Capt. Hendrickson, Lieut. Maloney, Lieut. Johns, Capt. Donald, Capt. Maher, Lieut. Donley, Capt. Murphy, Capt. Hammond, Lieut. Robinson, Lieut. Matchet, Col. Rhodie, Capt. Graham, Col. Howard, Major Coates, Capt. Cane, Lieut. Jones, Capt. Bailey, Major Doyle, and Capt. Dunn.

Japan.—The expedition to re-open the Straits of Shimonoseki has sailed.

New Zealand.—Advices from New Zealand announce that on the 29th April General Cameron attacked the rebels, who held a very strong position near Tauranga. The assault was unsuccessful, but the Maoris, who had suffered severely, abandoned the position under cover of the night. Our loss, together with that of the Royal Navy, amounted to 7 officers killed, 7 wounded, 21 men killed, 77 wounded. The officers killed were—Captain Hamilton, H.M.S. Esk; Lieut. Hill, H.M.S. Curaçoa; Captain Glover, Captain Mure, Captain Hamilton, Captain Utterton, and Lieut. Langlands, of the 43d Regiment. The officers wounded were Commander Hay, H.M.S. Harrier (since dead); Lieut. Duff, H.M.S. Esk, very severely; Lieut. Hammick, H.M.S. Miranda (? Curaçoa), very severely; Lieut.-Colonel Booth, 43d Regiment (since dead); Lieut. Glover, 43d Regiment (since dead); Ensign Clark, 43d Regiment, severely; Ensign Nichol, 43d Regiment, slightly. The Maori loss was 100. Their leader has since been defeated by friendly natives.

United States.—The accounts from General Grant's head-quarters give indications of a retrograde movement, if not of a forced retreat, of the Potomac Army; but no details are known or permitted to be published. Unofficial despatches from City Point report that on the 21st ult. General Grant moved Wright's and Hancock's corps from right to left, in order to destroy the Weldon Railroad and invest Petersburg. During his march he had heavy skirmishing with Hill's corps. The Confederates being found in force and entrenched, General Grant ordered the whole army forward, and formed line of battle. A general engagement ensued on the left of his line, lasting throughout the night of the 21st, in which the Federals lost heavily in killed and wounded, besides four cannon. On the same day Fitzhugh Lee and Hampton attacked White House, but the assault was defeated by the arrival of Sheridan with reinforcements, and the participation of Federal gunboats. On the 22d General Hill slipped through a gap in Grant's line between the Second and Sixth Corps, suddenly attacked the Second in the rear, and drove it in confusion from its intrenchments. One entire Federal brigade, besides many other prisoners and five cannon, were captured. The loss in killed and wounded is said to exceed 3000. Skirmishing continued throughout the afternoon and night, when the Confederates retired to a strong position, which they still hold. In consequence of this disaster General Grant has been obliged to abandon his attempt to occupy the railways running south from Petersburg, and has withdrawn his lines to their previously intrenched position. Severe skirmishing occurs daily. Wilson's cavalry has struck the Danville Railroad near Burkesville, destroyed the track, and moved southward. Mr. Stanton reports that all the railroads leading to Richmond have been destroyed. On the 24th Sheridan commenced crossing the James River, near City Point. He was attacked by a heavy Confederate force, which he repulsed after a severe fight, in which he lost 1000 men. A portion of his troops were still north of the river on the 27th. General Grant has blockaded the James River below Fort Darling with sunken vessels. President Lincoln left Washington on the 21st for Grant's head-quarters. On the previous day Generals Grant, Butler, and Admiral Lee held a consultation on board the flag ship in the James River. It is reported that General Butler's forces, while engaged in destroying the Petersburg and Richmond Railroad, were surprised by General Lee, and driven back with heavy loss. Confederate despatches report that Hooker was repulsed on the 15th with great slaughter in an assault upon Cleburne of Johnston's army near Marietta. Nine brigades have been detached by Lee to operate against Hunter. Mr. Stanton announces that Hunter, finding his ammunition running short, is retreating to Western Virginia, but reports the complete success of his expedition to Lynchburg. On the other hand the Southern despatches state that the Confederates who were pursuing him had attacked him several times, captured 13 of his cannon, and inflicted heavy loss upon him in killed, wounded, and prisoners. At the last accounts he was between 50 and 60 miles north-west of Lynchburg. Sherman reports that two columns of his army, under Macpherson and Thomas, simultaneously attacked the Confederates at Kenesaw Mountains on the 27th, and were repulsed. He admits Thomas's loss at 2000 and Macpherson's at 500, among whom were General Harker and four colonels. Confederate despatches state the Federal loss at 4500. Sherman believes the Confederate loss to have been light, as they were protected by breastworks. The Confederate General Pillow is operating on Sherman's rear, and has captured the town of Lafayette. The Senate on the 23d ult. concurred in the repeal of the Fugitive Slave Law by a vote of 22 to 12. The House of Representatives has passed the Loan Bill, by a vote of 100 to 50, but has refused to repeal the privilege of commutation to conscripts. Gold is at 117 premium. The Constitutional Convention of Maryland has abolished slavery in that State by a majority of 53 to 27. The meeting of the Democratic Convention at Chicago for the inauguration of the Presidential campaign has been postponed to the 29th August. Mr. Lincoln has formally accepted the nomination of the Baltimore Convention. A mass meeting was held at the Cooper Institute on the 27th ult., to ratify the nomination of General Fremont for the Presidency. All the speakers vehemently denounced Mr. Lincoln. Isaac Henderson, navy agent at New York, and one of the proprietors of the Evening Post, an Administration journal, has been arrested upon a charge of defrauding the Government. The Grand Jury have declined to take action in the matter of the suppression of the World and Journal of Commerce newspapers, on the ground of inexpediency. Manhattan, the New York correspondent of the London Standard, has been arrested on the ground that the Ambassadors in London and Paris had declared that he did more injury by his articles to the cause of the North than any other man. He has since been liberated on a three days' parole.

Canada.—Another Ministerial crisis has occurred. The late Ministry resigned a short time since, in consequence of being unable to command a majority in the Assembly, and now the new Ministry, formed from the other side of the House, has been placed in a minority of 58 to 60 on a vote condemning a financial transaction, in which the leading ministers were concerned as members of a former Ministry. A dissolution is expected.

Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday.—Japan.—Earl Grey moved a series of resolutions in reference to the relations between this country and Japan, with a view to the modification of the existing treaty.—Earl Russell denied that the treaty had been obtained by force, and contended that English subjects could not be allowed to be punished by torture and mutilation under the sanguinary laws of Japan. He admitted that the conduct of many Englishmen in Japan had been very blameable. They often, as in China, behaved insolently to the natives, but he knew of no particular regulations that could prevent these abuses. He defended the course taken by Sir R. Alcock in exacting from the Prince of Satsuma a compensation for the murder of Mr. Richardson, believing it was more likely to prevent any future war than to provoke it. This country was ready to make any concession the Japanese could reasonably ask for; but it would be better to maintain the rights we had acquired than to begin a new system of policy, especially if it reversed the principles we had always acted on when dealing with Eastern nations.—The Bishop of OXFORD thought that the treaty had certainly been obtained by intimidation, and existed only by the terror the Japanese felt of our arms. The terms of the treaty had been violated by English traders, especially by the exportation of gold, which was prohibited, and the very existence of the Japanese Government was endangered by the policy we were pursuing. England could not wish to reduce Japan to a state of anarchy, yet that must be the result if the Japanese political system were destroyed without creating any substitute.—The Duke of SOMERSET defended the conduct of Admiral Kuper and the French Admiral in prohibiting the erection of new batteries in the harbour of Yokohama. The people were quite ready to trade with us, since they continued to send goods to the open ports, though the Daimios threatened them with severe punishment for so doing.—The Earl of CARNARVON feared the system that had prevailed in China was extending itself to Japan, and would prove mischievous to all concerned with it. It undermined the native authority, and set up nothing in its place.—Earl GREY having replied, the House divided, when the resolutions were negatived by a majority of 19, the numbers being 30 to 11.

MONDAY.—The Holy Alliance.—Earl RUSSELL, in reply to a question from the Marquis of CLANRICARDE, said that the correspondence published by the Morning Post, with reference to the alleged Holy Alliance, was declared by the Prussian Ambassador to be an absolute invention. Vote of Censure.—The Earl of MALMESBURY gave notice that on Friday he intended to move a resolution to the effect that the House regretted the failure of the Conference, and that in their opinion the course pursued by her Majesty's Government with reference to Denmark had lowered the country in the estimation of Europe, and had thereby endangered the continuance of peace. The Kearsarge.—The Earl of HARDWICKE asked if the reports of the action between the Alabama and the Kearsarge had drawn the attention of the Government to the efficiency of iron chain-work as a defensive armour for ships of war.—The Duke of SOMERSET said the Admiralty two or three years ago made some experiments with chain armour, which proved that it could not effectually resist cast iron shot fired from the common 68-pounder gun. Against steel projectiles the chain-work was no defence whatever.—The Earl of CLANCARTY called attention to an alteration in the rules affecting the grants to Convent Schools in Ireland, sanctioned by the National Board of Education.—Lord GRANVILLE defended the change, contending that no valid objection could be made to it, while the progress of education was assisted by the measure.

TUESDAY.—Vote of Censure.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE gave notice that he will move, as an amendment to the Earl of Malmesbury's motion, to express the regret of the House that Denmark was allowed to expect from the English Government material aid in support of the objects of the Treaty of 1852. The Holy Alliance.—Lord STRATFORD DE REDCLIFFE said that on Friday, the 15th inst., he would call attention to the diplomatic correspondence on the revival of the Holy Alliance, recently published in the Morning Post. He did not mean to question the assurance of the Prussian Ambassador that this correspondence was a pure invitation, but he felt bound to state that some time since he saw in the hands of a person of high character and authority a correspondence identical with that which had been so published. Alleged Massacre of Swedish Volunteers.—The Earl of SHAFTESBURY brought under notice the reported massacre at Alsen in cold blood (after they had surrendered as prisoners of war) of a body of Swedish Volunteers by the Prussian troops. He denounced this alleged outrage as an act of atrocious barbarity, contrary to the usages of civilised warfare, and disgraceful to a Christian nation. He wished to know whether the Government had received any information on this subject, and if not, whether they would cause inquiries to be instituted respecting it.—Earl RUSSELL replied that none of the despatches received by the Government alluded to the occurrence, but he would direct inquiries to be made.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE feared there was too much reason to believe that this barbarous act had really been perpetrated, although he was unwilling to give credence to it. He reminded their lordships that before now similar acts of atrocity had been held to be good reasons for going to war. The Facilities for Divine Service in Collegiate Schools Bill passed through committee.—Lord BROUGHAM withdrew the Bribery Bill for the present session. In Committee on the Public-houses Bill, Lord EGERTON of TATTON moved the omission of the words giving power to town councils to adopt the provisions of the Act if they think fit.—Earl GRANVILLE opposed the amendment, and on a division it was negatived by a majority of 7, the numbers being—for the amendment, 24; against it, 31.

THURSDAY.—The Life Annuities and Life Assurances Bill, the Factory Acts Extension Bill, the Railways Construction Facilities Bill, the Railway Companies Powers Bill, and the Burghs Registration Bill were read a second time. The Civil Bill Courts (Ireland) Bill and the Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Bill passed through committee. The Clerk of the Peace Removal Bill, the Greek Loan Bill, and the Pilotage Order Confirmation Bill, were read a third time and passed.

FRIDAY.—Alleged Massacre of Swedish Volunteers.—Earl RUSSELL stated, in reference to the report that 400 Swedes had been murdered in cold blood by the Prussians in Jutland, that he had received information by telegraph from Copenhagen, in answer to his inquiries, that there was no truth in the report. Vote of Censure.—The Earl of MALMESBURY moved a resolution expressing the opinion of the House that, while the course pursued by her Majesty's Government had failed to maintain their avowed policy of upholding the integrity and independence of Denmark, it had lowered the just influence of this country in the councils of Europe, and thereby diminished the securities for peace. In introducing the question he regretted the absence, through indisposition, of the Earl of Derby.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY.—Mr. BLAKE called attention to amending the laws relating to the administration of Lunatic Asylums in Ireland, and of making better provision for the care of imbeciles in union workhouses.—Sir R. PEEL said he did not think there was any need of further legislation.—Mr. G. DUFF called attention to the Report of the Commission on the Inns of Court in 1854, and dwelt upon the defects of the system as pointed out in the report in regard to legal education.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL believed the Inns of Court fairly represented the Bar, and no complaints had been made by the profession. Epping Forest.—Mr. COX moved a resolution that her Majesty's Government, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Committee on Royal Forests, should obtain the sanction of Parliament for the enclosure of the remaining portion of the forest, and make provision for securing an adequate portion for the health and recreation of the inhabitants of the neighbourhood and the metropolis.—The SPEAKER ruled that the motion could not be put.—Mr. PEEL said that the Government would have no objection to the resolution; and that a proposition had already been made by the Treasury to the Metropolitan Board of Works for carrying out the suggestion of the Committee. The Conference.—Lord BURGHLEY asked for an explanation of the statement made by Bishop Monrad in the Danish Rigsraad in reference to Earl Russell's proposal of arbitration, after promising that he would make no proposal less favourable to Denmark than the line of the Schlei.—Lord PALMERSTON said that the statement was not absolutely correct. Earl Russell did not say that he would not make a proposal; what he said was this: if the Danes agreed to the line of the Schlei he would not himself propose or support another line if proposed by any other plenipotentiary. To that engagement he adhered; but while at last it was found that the Danes would not consent to a line north of the Schlei, or the Germans to a line south of Apenrade, it became necessary to break off negotiations or make the proposal which was then made in conjunction with other neutral Powers to refer the matter to the arbitration of a friendly Sovereign.—The House then went into Committee of Supply, and agreed to the votes in Class 7 of the Civil Service Estimates. In Committee on Thames Embankment and Metropolitan Improvement (Loans), resolutions were agreed to authorising the Treasury to guarantee the repayment of moneys that may be borrowed under the Acts for Embanking the Thames and Improving the Metropolis. The Factory Acts Extension Bill, the Inclosure (No. 2) Bill, and the Railways Acts Amendment Bill were read a third time and passed. The Indemnity Bill was read a second time. The Cranbourn Street Bill, and the Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Bill passed through Committee. On the order for the third reading of the Tests Abolition (Oxford) Bill, Sir W. HEATHCOTE moved that the Bill be read a third time that day three months. He said he should not discuss the merits of the Bill or its probable results; but would merely call attention to the position of the House with reference to the Bill, divided as its supporters were into three distinct sections entertaining different views, some members supporting the measure on the understanding that it would receive amendments, which had not been proposed.—On a division, the amendment was negatived by 150 to 140. The result was hailed by tumultuous cheering by the majority. On the question that the Bill be read a third time Lord R. CECIL complained of the conduct of Her Majesty's Ministers, who had, he said, distinctly stated that they would support certain amendments in the committee, where, however, none of those amendments had been proposed.—Sir G. GREY said that he had stated only his own individual opinion of the Bill, the principle of which he approved, and had therefore voted for the third reading.—Lord J. MANNERS, Sir M. FARQUHAR, Mr. NEATE, and Mr. COLLINS spoke almost in dumb-show, the House being in a great ferment. A division then took place, the result of which was an equality of numbers—for the third reading, 170; against it, 170.—The SPEAKER, in order to afford the House an opportunity to give another vote on the question that the Bill do pass, gave his casting vote to the "ayes," which made the number 171. The Bill was then read a third time.—On the question that it do pass, the House again divided, when the motion was negatived by 173 to 171. So the Bill, at that final stage, was lost. The result was received with loud cheers by the Opposition. The House went into committee again upon the Street Music (Metropolis) Bill.—Mr. AYRTON moved to add to clause 1 a proviso that the musician shall be truly informed by the person making the charge of the circumstances under which he is required to depart.—This amendment was negatived on a division by 98 to 67.—Sir G. GREY moved a proviso, that the person making a charge shall accompany the constable who shall take into custody any person offending to the nearest police-stationhouse and sign the charge-sheet, which was agreed to.—A new clause, moved by Sir G. GREY, as to the treatment of a charge brought to the police-court when it was shut, was likewise agreed to. The Divorce and Matrimonial Causes (Amendment) Bill passed through committee.

MONDAY.—The Holy Alliance.—Lord PALMERSTON said that he had received a communication from the Prussian Ambassador with reference to certain despatches which had appeared in the Morning Post respecting an alleged renewal of the Holy Alliance. The Ambassador said that the despatches were fabrications from beginning to end, and he therefore felt it right, with all the authority of his official character, to state that, so far as his Government was concerned, the whole of the "pretended correspondence was a complete invention."—Vote of Censure.—Mr. DISRAELI moved the resolutions, of which he gave notice last week, for an Address to the Crown, to thank her Majesty for directing the correspondence, and protocols of the Conference, to be laid before Parliament, assuring her Majesty that the House had heard, with deep concern, that the sittings of that Conference had been brought to a close without accomplishing the important purposes for which it was convened, and expressing great regret that, while the course pursued by her Majesty's Government had failed to maintain their avowed policy of upholding the integrity and independence of Denmark, it had lowered the just influence of this country in the councils of Europe, and thereby diminished the securities for peace. After adverting to the many long and disastrous wars of succession which had occurred in Europe at various periods, he said, that the first question which he would ask was, how it came to pass that the position of France relative to Denmark was so free from embarrassment and so dignified that it had lately received a tribute of admiration from Earl Russell, while the position of England, under precisely the same obligations, was one of infinite embarrassment and terrible mortification. He reminded the House that the other Powers of Europe had not interfered in the affairs of Denmark as Earl Russell had done. The language held by her Majesty's Government towards Denmark had been that of encouragement, while their policy had been marked by vacillation and deceit, amounting to perfidy. Lord Palmerston had declared that if Germany went to war with Denmark the latter Power would not find herself alone in the contest. The policy of the Government last year appeared to have been sincere, sound, and judicious; but the language which they had held towards France and Russia on the subject of Poland had alienated the good feeling of the former, while it had evoked the haughty sarcasm of the latter. Adverting to the history of Denmark during the last few months, he said that at the death of the late King there were two courses open to the Government, both of which were intelligible and honourable. They might have acted as France had done, or they might have followed the example of the other neutral Powers. He admitted that we were not bound by treaty obligations to go to the rescue of Denmark when attacked by Germany; but why did her Majesty's Ministers, just before the opening of Parliament, declare that "concert and co-operation" meant "material assistance?" When at length the Federal execution took place in Holstein, when Schleswig was invaded, and Jutland occupied, they proposed the Conference, at which they suggested the dismemberment of Denmark, and recommended that what remained from German spoliation should be placed under the joint guarantee of the great Powers. He maintained that the Government had failed to accomplish their avowed policy. They had been repulsed by Russia; their relations with France were estranged; their remonstrances to Austria, Prussia, and the German Diet were treated with dignified indifference or with open defiance; and they had declared that, as they had no allies, England could not go to war. These were words which should never have occurred to the heart of a British Minister, and should never have passed his lips. Lord Palmerston had frequently taunted him by asking, "What is your policy?" and the answer which he now gave him was, "Our policy is the honour of England and the peace of Europe." Unhappily the noble lord had betrayed both. He contended that the House of Commons ought not to allow the Government to escape from its responsibility; and it was with the view of challenging their conduct that he had moved his resolutions. They were intended as a protest against a policy which had lowered our just influence in the councils of Europe, and which had diminished the chances for peace. He denied that they would pledge those who might support them to the policy of war, but he asserted that they were inspired by a sincere desire to maintain peace.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said he accepted the responsibility cast upon the Government, and was ready to do their part to meet the accusations. The declaration of Lord Palmerston in July last, upon which so much stress was laid, was justifiable, for at that period France and Russia were prepared to act in the spirit of that declaration. As to the censure cast upon the manner in which Earl Russell declined the proposal for a Congress, he said that Lord Russell was a man of truth and honour, and in the habit of speaking his mind with very little circumlocution; and he referred to some expressions of Mr. Disraeli upon the subject of the Congress much less courteous than those he had complained of. He noticed other instances in which Mr. Disraeli had, he said, not quoted the documents fairly and fully, and he accused him of having misled the House by his misquotations, and by allegations void of foundation. He showed that these misquotations and the false inferences drawn from them affected some of the most material charges against the Government. He contended that the charges brought against the Government as regarded their conduct towards Denmark, were entirely fallacious, if not the reverse of the truth. The policy of the Government had been to induce Denmark to fulfil her engagements of 1851 and to induce Germans to moderate their views. On the accession of the present King, the object of the Government was to maintain the Treaty of 1852, and to endeavour to bind the Powers of Europe to uphold it. But a new doctrine was promulgated by Austria and Prussia with reference to that treaty, which, in their opinion, altered its position. Her Majesty's Government, believing that it was for the advantage of Europe to uphold that treaty, thought it their duty to endeavour to obtain the co-operation of other Powers, and rally them in support of it. These efforts failed, but the parties responsible for the consequences of the failure were those who first receded from the treaty. After the refusal of France and Russia, he admitted that the tone of the Government was altered. Single-handed, the interference of England would be useless. He justified the course adopted by the Government in the Conference, having to do, among other difficulties, with the resolute determination of the Danish people not to agree to the project of a personal union of the Duchies. The policy, if it had failed of its immediate object, had avoided the perils of a general war in Europe. In conclusion, he said that Mr. Disraeli had given not the slightest inkling of what he would himself do if he were in power. He denied that the failure of their honest efforts had lowered the just influence of England. This was not the language of allied and friendly Powers. It was the echo of the almost ribald language of the obscure foreign journals. Mr. Disraeli did not venture to adopt the old and constitutional form of a vote of want of confidence, and he was wise. The object of the motion was to expedite the dissolution of the Government, in order that the right hon. gentleman and his friends might come in: and he felt sure that the House and the country would approve the conduct of Her Majesty's Government in these very difficult negotiations by rejecting a motion which prudence and patriotism alike condemned.—Mr. NEWDEGATE moved that the House should express an opinion that the independence of Denmark and the possessions of that kingdom, on the terms proposed by the representatives of the neutral Powers in the recent Conference, ought to be guaranteed. He thought it was of the utmost importance to the peace of the world that England should take some steps to regain the influence she had lost. He would not like to see her take that step alone; but, if she were compelled to do so, he had faith in her ability to overcome all her enemies.—Mr. GORE LANGTON seconded the amendment.—Mr. KINGLAKE said that the amendment meant not only war, but war throughout all time. Adverting to the amendment of which he had given notice, he said that its object was to eliminate the last paragraph of Mr. Disraeli's resolution, and to substitute an expression of satisfaction that her Majesty had been advised to abstain from armed interference in the war between Denmark and the German Powers. He thought that, if the original motion were carried, and a stigma cast upon the Administration, the effect would be to damage its credit and prestige; and he could not find that in any instance her Majesty's Government had advised the Danes to resist. War, he contended, would be impolitic; it was now too late, and it would be a violation of the principle of non-interference.—General PEEL supported the original motion. If the policy of the country was to be peace at any price, silence and non-interference would become better. If we were too rich to be drawn into war by provocation, it would be better to say so at once; but what would be said of a man who declined to defend his house because he was too rich to be shot at. Her Majesty's Government had done nothing to maintain the honour and the renown of England in a critical conjuncture; but on the contrary had made us the open scorn of our enemies, and the shame and derision of surrounding nations.—The LORD-ADVOCATE said that the Government had not given out any delusive promises to Denmark to induce her to oppose the German Powers. If the resolution meant anything it meant war, and the object of its proposer was to censure the Government for abstaining from it.—Lord STANLEY agreed that it was a war resolution. If it were so no considerations would induce him to vote for it; or if the question before the House were whether it was right or not to fight for Denmark he would give his adhesion to the Government, because he considered that to engage in a European war for the sake of the Duchies would be an act not only of impolicy but of insanity. The policy of the Government had, however, been weak, vacillating, and deceptive, for instead of proclaiming neutrality and non-intervention they had threatened Germany and lured on Denmark to her destruction.—On the motion of Mr. COBDEN the debate was adjourned. The Cranbourn Street Bill was recommitted, and a motion to report progress was negatived by 45 to 37. An adjournment was, however, subsequently agreed to. The Public Schools Bill was read a second time. The India-office Bill was committed.

TUESDAY.—The Vote of Censure.—The adjourned debate was resumed by Mr. COBDEN, who said that whether the country was to be lowered in the estimation of foreign nations or not depended very much upon her own conduct. He admitted that the manner in which our foreign affairs had been conducted was most unsatisfactory, but he could not bring himself to believe that what had been done had diminished the securities for peace. Our diplomacy had broken down, but if the effect of that catastrophe was to remove dynastic secrets and diplomatic engagements from the recesses of Downing Street to the broad daylight of the House of Commons, he for one would regard the result as the best guarantee for peace. Earl Russell appeared to have but little knowledge of the history and relations of foreign States, and his ignorance in this respect had exposed him to humiliation and rebuff from almost every European Power. There could be no doubt that Denmark had violated her engagements by her treatment of the Schleswig-Holstein population; but while he was by no means prepared to justify the violent step which Prussia and Austria had taken on that account, he did not consider that England was bound by any treaty obligations to send an armed expedition to her succour. We could neither gain nor lose any territory on the Continent by going to war, and however ready we might have been to fly to arms had France cooperated with us, he did not consider that such intervention would have been either wise or necessary.—Lord R. Cecil believed that if Mr. Cobden had been Foreign Secretary instead of Earl Russell the country would occupy a position far prouder and nobler than that in which it now stood. He at least would not have made promises which he could not have fulfilled, nor would he have indulged in menaces from which he intended to recede. For much of the misfortune that had befallen Denmark her Majesty's Ministers were responsible, for they had declined offers of arbitration and mediation from Prussia, and of a Congress as proposed by France. They had held irritating language to Germany, and had held forth delusive hopes to Denmark, and when the latter was reduced to her sorest peril they lowered their tone and allowed her to be dismembered. Never, since Ancient Pistol swallowed the leek, saying he did it for revenge, had there been so humiliating an exhibition.—Mr. W. E. Forster agreed with Mr. Disraeli that the time had arrived when England must play the game of brag no longer. But the question in coming to a vote of censure upon the Government was whether the House had confidence in the Opposition, and that he was not prepared to concede.—Mr. Butler Johnstone said that to go to war now for Denmark would be to pursue a useless and suicidal policy, but the House ought no longer to leave the foreign policy of the country in the hands of statesmen who had made such a lamentable succession of blunders.—Lord H. Vane felt great sympathy for Denmark, but could not consent to go to war single-handed for her independence.—Mr. Liddell deprecated the constant system of interference which characterised the foreign policy of the Government; and, in supporting the resolution, said he would be prepared to justify it before the country whenever an opportunity were afforded him.—Lord R. Montagu supported the resolution, but would not do so on any account if he believed its adoption by the House would lead to war.—Mr. Whalley opposed the motion, and attributed the failure of our diplomacy to the secret and aggressive influence of the Papacy.—Mr. Roebuck stigmatised the conduct of the German Powers as cruel and cowardly. The facts of the case appeared to him to be in a nut shell. The small States of Germany had gone mad on the subject of nationality; the Danes, with the King at their head, had endeavoured to maintain the doctrine of empire; Prussia wanted a port in the Baltic, and also wished to divert the attention of democrats at home. Germany had become both mad and silly, and Earl Russell had aggravated her by repeated lectures. The noble earl had mistaken his vocation; he was intended for a schoolmaster, but Fortune made him a statesman. He believed that if the foreign policy of the country had been placed in the hands of Lord Palmerston, we should not be reduced to our present condition; and that if we had taken a bold stand at the first, the arrogance and injustice of Germany would have been effectually checked. He would, however, vote against the resolution, because he considered the present Government better than that which would succeed it.—Mr. Horsman denounced the madness and hypocrisy of the German Powers, and predicted that a day of reckoning would come when the whole of civilised Europe would declare that the heaviest calamity which could descend upon Austria and Prussia would be but a righteous retribution for the blood of slaughtered Danes now crying to Heaven for vengeance. With regard to the first resolution of Mr. Disraeli, he apprehended the House would give it a general assent, but when he went on to charge the Government with having failed to maintain the integrity and independence of Denmark and to censure them, he was inviting the House to adopt a conclusion that the facts did not justify. The truth was that for the last two years the House of Commons had acquiesced in the policy that they were now called upon to condemn. If, then, the country were dishonoured, it was not by her Majesty's Ministers, but by Parliament. The Government had no doubt made mistakes, but the Opposition had endorsed them. For his own part, he declined to give a vote which would assist to place in power a party which had shown more weakness and less courage than the Government—a party which had abdicated the high functions of a constitutional Opposition, and had stifled the voice of Parliament.—Mr. S. Fitzgerald admitted that the object of the resolution was intended to censure the Government for having lowered and humiliated the country, and he hoped the House of Commons had sufficient spirit to affirm it. The Government might declare that they were quite ready to go to the country upon their peace policy; but he could not imagine any greater incongruity than "Palmerston and Peace;" for on three separate occasions they had invited foreign countries to join them in going to war, and only a night or two since Earl Russell had declared in the House of Lords that they were still willing to go to war if they could but secure an ally. He denied that it was the duty of the Opposition to indicate a policy, but if they should go to the country they would be prepared to vindicate the course they now invited the House to adopt.—On the motion of Mr. Layard, the debate was adjourned until Thursday. The Game (Ireland) Bill, and the Improvement of Land Act (1864) Bill, were read a second time.—Mr. Bass's Street Music Bill was considered as amended, and was ordered to be read a third time on Wednesday. The India Office Bill, the Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Bill, and the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes (Amendment) Bill, were read a third time and passed.

Wednesday.—The House went into committee on the Trespass (Ireland) Bill, the object of which is to preserve game in that country. The Bill was opposed on the ground that it went further than the English law, by making wild duck, wigeon, teal, woodcock, and rabbits "game." After several divisions rabbits were exempted from the protection of the Legislature, and the Bill passed through committee.—Sir S. Northcote moved the Committee on the Punishment of Rape Bill, a measure originated in the House of Lords by the Marquis of Westmeath.—Sir C. O'Loghlen moved that the Bill be committed that day three months. He argued that no case had been made out for the Bill, and that it was inexpedient to alter the criminal law unless after due deliberation and careful consideration.—The amendment was seconded by Mr. Roebuck.—The Attorney-General for Ireland opposed the Bill on grounds similar to those urged by Sir C. O'Loghlen. After a desultory discussion, the House divided, when the amendment was carried by 84 to 78. The Bill is therefore lost. The Municipal Corporations (Ireland) Bill, the object of which was to assimilate the law in Ireland to that of England with respect to the qualification of burgesses, was withdrawn. The Fisheries (Fresh Water) Bill was also withdrawn. The third reading of the Street Music Bill was postponed to Thursday. The House went into Committee on the Insolvent Debtors Bill; but, after a short discussion, the Chairman was ordered to report progress.

Thursday.—The Vote of Censure.—The adjourned debate was resumed by Mr. Layard, who, in a speech of great length, defended the conduct of the Foreign Office. He contended that Earl Russell had been misrepresented and wrongfully accused, and that the Opposition had not hesitated to garble and falsify despatches in order that they might traduce the character of a statesman who had already taken a distinguished place in history amongst those who had toiled on behalf of human freedom and progress. He asserted that everything that Earl Russell had done in reference to the Dano-German difficulty had been done with the entire concurrence of France, and not until after that Power had been consulted and its answer received. He believed that when passion and prejudice had passed away, the country would arrive at the conclusion that the proposals made by Lord Russell were conceived in great wisdom, for they satisfied all parties except Denmark, would have put an end to the question of succession, and would have restored the Duchies. It was, he thought, a great calamity that Denmark had refused those proposals. He denied that the construction which had been put upon the words of Lord Palmerston, namely, that if Denmark had to enter upon a contest with Germany she should not stand alone, was the logical or correct one. Those words were not meant to convey that in certain eventualities England alone would go to the assistance of Denmark, but that Denmark would not be without allies in Europe. Such was the belief of the noble lord, but the Powers who signed the Treaty of 1852 did not consider it incumbent upon them to join England in giving practical aid to Denmark. Having reviewed the correspondence which had taken place between the Foreign Office and the four Powers, he expressed his opinion that, had the Opposition been in office, they would have plunged the country into war with the Federal States of America. He believed, too, that if power were to be transferred to them now, one of the first consequences would be that steam-rams would be sent from Liverpool to prey upon the commerce of a friendly nation. In conclusion, he denied the indictment preferred against the Government through the Chief Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and he looked with confidence to a verdict of acquittal from the country.—Mr. G. Hardy repudiated the charge brought by Mr. Layard against the Opposition of having garbled and falsified despatches in order to misrepresent the conduct of Earl Russell, and stigmatised the charge as calumnious.—Mr. Layard moved that the word "calumnious" be taken down by the clerk at the table.—The Speaker intimated that he saw no ground for interfering.—Lord Palmerston condemned the language of Mr. Hardy as disorderly and censurable.—Mr. Disraeli said that the Under Secretary was guilty of an unparliamentary and indecorous exhibition, and that Mr Hardy had a perfect right to describe his language as calumnious.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer said that the objection should have been taken at the moment when the words were spoken.—Sir John Pakington said that if Mr. Layard was to be allowed to charge the Opposition with falsification they had a right to call the word calumnious.—Mr. B. Osborne put it to the House whether it was not imperilling its "just influence in the councils of Europe," by allowing members to get up and endeavour to overrule the decision of the Speaker.—The Speaker said that the language used on both sides had somewhat exceeded the ordinary rules of debate; but from what he knew of Mr. Hardy he was sure that he did not mean to impute motives. Under the circumstances, however, it was not necessary that he should interfere; and after what had occurred he trusted the harmony with which their debates were usually conducted would be restored.—Mr. Layard expressed regret at having used the word "falsification," and after some mutual explanations Mr. Hardy resumed his speech, and contended that the whole conduct of the Foreign Office in reference to the affairs of Denmark had been weak, vacillating, and calculated to encourage the Danes to enter upon a hopeless conflict with one of the greatest military Powers of Europe.—Sir F. Goldsmid said that if he were compelled to give an affirmative or a negative to the motion of Mr. Disraeli, though not concurring with many of his views, he could not say "nay" to his resolution; but he should be glad, if he could, to avoid a vote.—Mr. G. Bentinck said that although he was prepared to censure the policy of the Government, he would not support the resolution if it were true that a compact existed between the Opposition and the Ultramontane party below the gangway.—Mr. Cogan said that the policy of the Government towards Ireland was almost as unfortunate as that pursued in reference to Denmark. They had outraged and insulted the people of Ireland by sending Sir R. Peel to direct their affairs. He should join in voting censure upon them, not in order to place a Conservative Administration in power, but to purify the Liberal party.—Mr. Peacocke also spoke in favour of the resolution.—The Attorney-General denied all the charges brought against the Government, and said that their supposed menaces were only the language of strong and just remonstrance; and that they had made no promise they had not performed, and held out no prospect of help they had not rendered. The motion was intended only to answer the purposes of a party, and was unworthy of a great one.—Lord J. Manners observed that the motion had been censured as not indicating a policy. What it did indicate was that it was not right for England to hold out threats on the one hand, and promises of assistance on the other, unless she was prepared to fulfil them. The conduct of the Government had, he said, been characterised by a weakness, vacillation, and indecision that called for the condemnation of the House.—Mr. Onslow opposed the motion, considering that the Government had used their utmost efforts to secure the object of peace.—On the motion of Mr. Osborne, the debate was adjourned to Friday, with the understanding that it should then be brought to a conclusion.—The Cranbourne Street Bill passed through Committee. The Indemnity Bill was read a third time and passed. The Courts of Justice Site Bill was read a second time and referred to a Select Committee. The Public Schools Bill passed through Committee. On the motion for the third reading of the Street Music Bill, Sir W. Jolliffe moved, as an amendment, that it be read a third time that day three months. On a division the amendment was negatived by 49 to 18. The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

Friday.—Vote of Censure.—The adjourned debate was resumed by Mr. B. Osborne, who said that he by no means endorsed the foreign policy of the Government in its different details, but he did not like the injustice that had been done to Earl Russell, for which the whole Cabinet was responsible, including the noble lord the First Minister. As to the Conference, he described the proceedings as a combination of blarney and bluster, and ridiculed the statement that there had been an interchange of ideas between the plenipotentiaries, but what these ideas were which required an interchange, he did not pretend to understand. He thought theat this country was most fortunate in being relieved from th responsibilit of the guarantee proposed by the obstinacy of Denmark.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Debate.—On Monday afternoon, as the hour approached at which the House of Commons was to assemble, an extraordinary amount of excitement prevailed in the immediate neighbourhood, indicative of the interest taken out of doors in the impending debate, and recalling the gatherings in that quarter during the party struggle which preceded the passing of the Reform Bill. A great crowd had collected in Palace Yard to see the members enter the House, and did not disperse until towards 9 o'clock. The arrival of Lord Palmerston and of Mr. Disraeli was watched with eager curiosity. Mr. Disraeli made his appearance towards half-past 4 in an open carriage. He was soon recognised by the crowd, and received a few cheers as he passed, but they were faint in comparison with those with which Lord Palmerston was greeted on his arrival about a quarter of an hour later. The Premier, who was in a close carriage, had been recognised in Parliament Street, and the cheers which his appearance drew forth there were heard in Palace Yard, and became louder and louder as he approached the House. Mr. Gladstone leant back in his carriage, as if to avoid notice, and so passed into the House almost wholly unobserved. In the half hour from a quarter past 4 the members arrived in great numbers. As Mr. Disraeli presented himself to speak, which he did about a quarter to 5, the House presented an extraordinary spectacle, resembling in its crowded state and in the prevailing excitement more the eve of a division after some great party struggle than the commencement of a debate. In the body of the House every available seat was occupied, and the members who had arrived late crowded the side galleries or stood in groups below the bar. The Duke of Cambridge, Earl Grey, Lord Llanover, Earl Powis, Lord Houghton, and Mr. Justice Shee sat in the part immediately over the clock assigned to distinguished strangers, and in the seats below the bar on either side of the entrance were Earl Russell, the Poet Laureate, the Duke of Argyll, the Bishop of Oxford, and other persons of note. Both the Speaker's and Strangers' Galleries were crowded during the night, and scores who had orders for the one or the other waited in the adjoining lobbies in the hope of being admitted.

REVIEW IN HYDE PARK.—On Monday morning a grand review took place in Hyde Park before the Prince and Princess of Wales, and the Duke of Cambridge. The troops on the ground included the Grenadier and Coldstream Guards, two batteries of the Royal Horse Artillery from Woolwich, the 5th Fusiliers, the Life Guards, and the Horse Guards Blue. The troops went through a series of file and volley firing, and there was a charge by the cavalry. The whole force then advanced in review order and presented arms to the staff. After these evolutions the whole force marched off the ground with their bands playing.

THE ELECTION OF SHERIFFS.—A Court of Aldermen was held on Monday, for the purpose of receiving the return of the result of the election of sheriffs for the ensuing year. The Common Serjeant reported that the choice of the Livery had fallen upon Alderman Besley and Alderman Dakin. A procession was then formed to the hustings, where a common hall had been called, when the Common Serjeant announced that the two aldermen were duly elected Sheriffs for the ensuing year.

THE CIRCASSIAN EXILES.—A public meeting was held at the London Tavern on Thursday, to raise means for the relief of the Circassian refugees who have been driven from their homes and cast upon the Turkish territory by the severity of Russian rule. Lord Stratford de Redcliffe took the chair, and among the speakers were the Earl of Shaftesbury, Lord Houghton, and the Marquis of Clanricarde. Resolutions expressing sympathy for the exiles were unanimously adopted, and a subscription was opened for their relief.

MIDDLE-CLASS EDUCATION.—A deputation from the Council of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science had an interview with Lord Palmerston at Cambridge House a few dayssince to represent the expediency of issuing a Royal Commission to inquire into the grammar schools and other endowed schools in the United Kingdom, and generally into the state of education of the middle classes. The memorial presented by the deputation stated that the condition of middle class education is most unsatisfactory, and that there are some hundreds of grammar schools and other endowed schools, which have never yet formed the subject of adequate inquiry, and which might probably be made available for supplying in a great degree the want of efficient education for the middle classes. It referred to the important results already derived from the recent Commission of Inquiry into the colleges and great public schools, and urged his lordship to issue a Royal Commission forthwith for the purpose of inquiring into the condition of the grammar and endowed schools throughout the country. Lord Brougham, Earl Fortescue, the Bishop of London, Lord Lyttelton, Mr. E. Chadwick, C.B., and Mr. James Heywood, having addressed his lordship in support of the memorial, Lord Palmerston admitted the importance of the subject, and promised to give it his best attention.

THE RIGHT OF MEETING IN THE PARKS.—A special meeting of the committee of the metropolitan members and electors appointed to secure the right of public meeting in the parks irrespective of Government permission was held on Friday in the Tea-room of the House of Commons. Among those present were Mr. Ayrton, M.P.; Mr. Cox, M.P.; Mr. Locke, M.P.; Mr. Whalley, M.P., and others. Mr. Beales brought up an elaborate report as to the past and present position of the rights of the Crown over the parks. It stated that the Crown in the early part of the last century had in return for a large addition to the Civil List ceded its rights over the parks, which were then dedicated to the use of the people under certain restrictions, their management being vested in a public officer called Commissioner of Works, who was paid for his services out of the public moneys. It contended that, independently of this, the right of user exercised by the public for more than 40 years of itself dedicated these parks to the people. The report referred to various Acts of Parliament in support of these views, and concluded by declaring the right of the people to meet peaceably in the parks to be above all interference from the Government, who had no Act of Parliament to show the power of interference claimed by them. Considerable discussion followed the reading of the report, more particularly on the legal points involved in it, on which much difference of opinion was expressed by the legal members of the committee. Mr. Ayrton and Mr. Cox disputed the dedication and the right of user, while Mr. Whalley, Mr. Beales, and Mr. Shaen maintained its existence. Mr. Locke suggested a reference to two eminent counsel, but to this the majority objected. Several resolutions were proposed and rejected, and ultimately it was agreed, without any formal resolution, that Mr. Beales and those acting with him should, by holding a public meeting in one of the parks, get the question raised in such a manner that the user might be tried and fairly argued in the Court of Queen's Bench, and the question set at rest. If it was decided against the right of the people, then action should be taken in Parliament to get the law placed on a more satisfactory footing. It was admitted on all sides that the orders of the Commissioners of Police forbidding meetings in the parks were totally illegal, and not warranted by any existing law.

HORSE SHOW.—A show of horses was opened at the Agricultural Hall on Friday, when a large number of visitors, including many members of the aristocracy, attended. Upwards of 300 animals were exhibited, all of such a high standard of merit that the judges were unable to award all the prizes until Monday, when the Show was thrown open to the public at the charge of 1s., and about 20,000 persons availed themselves of the opportunity to visit the exhibition. On Tuesday the Prince and Princess of Wales visited the Show. There were about 5000 visitors present at the time, who received their Royal Highnesses with warm expressions of loyalty. The finest horses were brought into the ring for the inspection of the Royal visitors, and the Prince afterwards inspected the animals in the Floral Hall. Their Royal Highnesses spent some time in the Exhibition.

CONFEDERATE ENLISTMENTS.—A man named Seymour was brought before the chief magistrate at Bow Street on Friday on a charge of enlisting men for the Confederate service. From the evidence it appeared that four men were engaged by him to go as firemen in a steamer named the Rappan, lying at Calais, at a pay of 4*s.* a day while she lay in harbour. On proceeding to Calais the men found no steamer named the Rappan, but were referred to the officers of the Rappahannock Confederate steamer, who repudiated the engagement made by Seymour. The men came home and informed against the prisoner, who was committed for trial.

DESTRUCTION OF THE SAVOY CHURCH BY FIRE.—On Thursday afternoon a fire broke out in the Savoy Church, Strand, which resulted in the total destruction of that ancient edifice, the last relic of the Savoy Palace, which figures so conspicuously in English history. The fire broke out near the organ, which was at the time under the repair of some workmen, and before the engines could arrive the whole structure was in a blaze. The roof, which was recently restored and redecorated, chiefly at the cost of her Majesty as Duchess of Lancaster, fell in soon after the outbreak, and in the course of an hour the organ, the painted windows, and nearly every monument in the building were reduced to ashes, nothing being saved except the church plate and parish registers. The flames spread with such rapidity that they ignited some of the houses in the Strand, one of which, occupied by Mr. Finney, tailor, was entirely destroyed, while those adjoining were much damaged by fire and water. For two or three hours in the afternoon the Strand was impassable, and the excitement in the neighbourhood was immense. It is understood that most of the property was insured.

GREAT ROBBERY OF JEWELLERY IN THE CITY.—A daring robbery of jewellery was committed in broad daylight on Sunday at the shop of Mr. Johnson, jeweller and chronometer maker, at the corner of Hercules Passage, Threadneedle Street, to the extent, it is said, of nearly 4000*l.* The thieves are supposed to have secreted themselves in the course of Saturday night in some of the closets in the upper part of the premises, which are occupied chiefly by stockbrokers. No one has charge of the premises at night, so that the thieves had full range of the place. During Sunday, by means of crowbars and wedges, they succeeded in forcing an iron door on the ground floor, leading into the back of the shop, and then possessed themselves of the whole stock of jewellery, watches, pins, bracelets, earrings, and other valuable property, from the shop windows and glass cases on the counter, leaving nothing but the large clocks on the brackets, which were too bulky to remove. They attempted to break open an iron safe under the counter, but its strength thwarted them, though they must have been some hours in trying to force it open. Their failure in this respect was most fortunate, as the contents were chiefly diamonds and jewellery, of the value of 10,000*l.* The police are said to have obtained a clue to the thieves.

THE NEW POLICE UNIFORM.—On Wednesday morning the whole of the officers and men of the A Division on duty at the Houses of Parliament, Buckingham Palace, and the Government Offices, appeared in the new regulation helmet and surtout.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths registered in London in the week that ended Saturday, July 2, were 1297. The average number in the corresponding week of the ten years, 1854-63, corrected for increase of population, was 1242. The present return is therefore 55 above the average. During the week the births of 1051 boys and 948 girls, in all 1999 children, were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1939.

Provincial.

CANTERBURY.—On Saturday the Princess Helena and the Princess Louisa, with the Hon. Colonel Liddell and the Hon. Mrs. Bruce in attendance, visited Canterbury for the purpose of inspecting the cathedral and other objects of interest in the city. Their Royal Highnesses travelled by special train on the London, Chatham, and Dover line, and arrived at Canterbury at 12 o'clock. Owing to a misapprehension as to the time at which the train was to arrive, no carriage was at the station, and their Royal Highnesses, instead of waiting, proceeded on foot over the Dane John recreation ground and through the principal streets of the city to the Cathedral, a distance of more than half a mile. They were recognised by several citizens from their likeness to the Queen. At the Cathedral the Royal visitors were received by the Dean of Westminster and Lady Augusta Stanley, Archdeacon Harrison and Mrs. Harrison being also in attendance. Both the Princesses appeared greatly pleased when going through the Cathedral, as the Dean of Westminster explained the different objects of interest. At 2 o'clock the Archdeacon and Mrs. Harrison had the honour of entertaining their Royal Highnesses at luncheon at their residence. Afterwards their Royal Highnesses, still attended by the Dean of Westminster, proceeded to the Missionary College of St. Augustine and St. Martin's Church, in which Christianity was first preached in England. At 4 o'clock they returned to the railway station in an open carriage, a considerable crowd of people having collected to witness their departure. On taking their seats in the saloon carriage of the Royal train the Princesses smilingly bowed their acknowledgements to the loyal greetings of the people on the platform.

GAINSBOROUGH.—Martha Howell, a young schoolmistress, residing at Springthorne, was charged at the Police Court a few days since with having attempted to shoot Emma Johnson, a teacher of music, living at the same place. It was alleged that on the evening of the 17th the parties, with some other young ladies, were walking near Somerby, apparently on the best terms, when Miss Howell pulled a pistol from her pocket, and fired it at Miss Johnson's head, wounding her. It appeared that she had on previous occasions presented a pistol at Miss Johnson, and threatened to shoot her but the threat was not regarded as serious. After the occurrence, Miss Howell was heard to express her regret that she had not shot Miss Johnson dead. No motive for the attempt has yet been assigned. She was committed for trial.

LIVERPOOL.—Several burglaries have recently been committed at the village of Hale, near this town, and the police were consequently on the alert. Two of their number, Whaldron and Holton, were on duty on the night of the 28th ult. on the high road, when they met a man who asked the way to Woolton. One officer turned his lamp upon him and said that he was the man they wanted, and they must take him into custody. The man instantly drew a pistol and fired at him, the ball grazing his back. The other officer thereupon closed with him, but received a shot in the abdomen, which caused a fearful wound. The man then drew a knife or chisel and inflicted several other wounds on the fallen man. At this moment the first officer struck the man senseless with his staff, and assistance having been procured, the prisoner was conveyed to the Woolton police-station. Upon his person was found two discharged pistols, and a third loaded with ball. He is an Irishman, and gave the name of John Daley. In the meantime the wounded officer, who has been 17 years in the force, was conveyed home, where it was found that his wounds were so serious that he is not expected to survive.

NORWICH.—The brethren of the English order of St. Benedict have commenced a series of pilgrimages to various points of monastic interest in Norfolk. Their first visit was made to Bawburgh, a village near this city, in the course of last week. A correspondence has passed between 23 Norwich clergymen and the Rev. E. A. Hillyard, rector of St. Lawrence, who has identified himself with the brethren. The 23 clergymen "earnestly and affectionately" entreated Mr. Hillyard to submit a statement of the view which he takes of his position and the principles which guide him to it, to Bishop, and to be guided by his recommendations. Mr. Hillyard replied that, after giving "prayerful attention" to this counsel, he declined to discontinue his daily administration of the Holy Communion to the monks. On this the 23 clergymen sent Mr. Hillyard a resolution in which they expressed a hope that he judgment, freed from the bias of a false impression, would yet give to the considerations put before him their due weight and influence. Mr. Hillyard, in a long reply, complained of "a course of unscrupulous agitation originated by persons as hostile to the Church as they are ignorant of its teaching." The 23 clergymen in conclusion intimated to Mr. Hillyard that they consider he is inflicting a heavy blow upon the interests of religion and of the Church which he is bound by the most solemn pledges to support. Referring to Brother Ignatius, as Mr. Lyne, they added that "not to speak of him as the enthusiastic eulogist of Rome, of his schismatic ministrations, or of the more than questionable nature of his doctrines and practices, suffice it that he acted, and still acts, in contempt of episcopal authority, and of a sentence of inhibition the legality of which is not disputed."

PLYMOUTH.—On the 13th of May a waterman named M'Coy, while sailing through Plymouth Sound, was shockingly injured by a shot fired from the citadel during the artillery practice, and died after six hours of great suffering. A coroner's inquest was convened on the following day. It was adjourned five times, and a large mass of evidence having been carefully investigated, the jury on Monday week returned a verdict of Manslaughter against Major-General Hutchinson, the General commanding the district, stating that they considered him guilty of great negligence and indifference to the public safety, which alone, in their opinion, was the cause of the death of George M'Coy. The coroner accepted the verdict, but stated that he did not concur in it, because the law did not bear it out. General Hutchinson was subsequently apprehended at Government House, Mount Wise, and has since been admitted to bail. His trial will take place at the assizes at the close of this month. The verdict has given great satisfaction to the inhabitants, as the General had persisted in directing the artillery practice to be continued over the crowded waters of Plymouth Sound, notwithstanding several narrow escapes and the remonstrances addressed to him.

TUNBRIDGE.—A fatal explosion of gunpowder took place on Wednesday afternoon in the powder-mills of Messrs. Curtis & Harvey. The four men who were at work at the time were blown to pieces, and a carman who happened to be in the neighbourhood was seriously injured. The shock was felt at a distance of some miles.

ROYAL SCOTTISH ACADEMY.—At a meeting of the council of the Academy on Monday, Mr. George Harvey, the eminent Scottish landscape and historical painter, was elected President, in room of the late Sir John Watson Gordon.

Obituary.

MAJOR-GENERAL SAGE died a few days since. He served in Rewah in 1812, in the Nepaul war in 1815, for which he received a medal, with the army of the Indus in Affghanistan, and at the storming and capture of Ghuznee. For his services on that occasion he again received a medal. He was the brigadier who commanded the Saugor field force, and during the great mutiny of 1857 he held the fort of Saugor with a small and inadequate garrison during upwards of seven months, under trying circumstances, until relieved by the force under Sir Hugh Rose.

COLONEL SIR WILLIAM COX died on the 1st inst. at Monkstown, near Dublin, in his 87th year. He was born in 1776, and entered the army in 1794. He served with much distinction in the West Indies, Egypt, the Mediterranean, and the Peninsula. He was created Knight Bachelor in 1816, and became a colonel in 1819. He was a major-general in the Portuguese service, and was nominated a Knight of the Tower and Sword of Portugal in 1815.

CAPTAIN BROWN, R.N.C.B., Registrar-General of Seamen, died on the 29th ult, at Brixton, aged 72, after a long illness. He entered the Navy in 1805, and was present at Trafalgar in the same year, and at the surrender of Copenhagen in 1807. In 1810 he served in the Baltic, and when the American war of 1812 broke out, he saw much service on the lakes of Canada. In 1835, when the Bill for the Registration of Seamen was introduced by Lord Auckland and Sir James Graham, Captain Brown was appointed to the office of Registrar-General. He was concerned in most of the amendments in the law affecting the Mercantile Marine passed within the last 30 years, and latterly took an active part in the establishment of the Royal Naval Reserve. His exertions on this occasion affected his health, and compelled him to resign his office. As a mark of their appreciation of his services the Government, on his retirement, gave him rank as Post-Captain, and a Companionship of the Bath.

PROFESSOR MILLER, Professor of Surgery in the University of Edinburgh, died at Corstorphine on the 17th ult., at the age of 52. He was the son of the late Rev. James Miller, minister of Monikie, Forfarshire. He studied medicine in Edinburgh, and was the favourite pupil of Mr. Liston, with whom he resided for 15 years. In 1842, on the death of Sir Charles Bell, he was unanimously elected by the Town Council to fill the chair of surgery in Edinburgh University, where he was a very popular and successful teacher. He was also Professor of Pictorial Anatomy to the Royal Academy, and Surgeon-in-Ordinary to the Queen for Scotland. He was the author of "The Principles and Practice of Surgery," of the article "Surgery" in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," of "The Surgical Experiences of Chloroform," and of a considerable number of tracts on temperance, of which he was a strenuous advocate. He was an elder in the Free Church and an ardent supporter of its missionary schemes. A few weeks ago he was seized with congestion of the brain, which entirely prostrated his strength, both mentally and physically, and rapidly led to a fatal result. He married in 1834 a daughter of the late Major Gordon, of Rosiburn, Aberdeenshire, by whom he has left a numerous family.

THE REV. DR. CURETON, F.R.S., Canon of Westminster, and rector of St. Margaret's, chaplain in ordinary to the Queen, and the royal trustee of the British Museum, died on the 17th ult. at his country seat, Westbury, near Shrewsbury. He received a shock on the Brighton Railway, near Streatham, about a year ago, and not more than three days before his death had obtained 3170*l.* from the company as compensation for himself and his daughter, who had also sustained some injuries. But his last illness was attributable to other causes, and he went some weeks ago, a broken down invalid, to his seat in Shropshire where he died of rheumatic fever. Dr. Cureton, was a member of the French Institute, and of nearly every learned society in Europe, and was regarded as the most eminent Syriac scholar in England, and almost in Europe. He was born about 1808, and matriculated as servitor of Christ Church, Oxford. In 1830 he graduated as a double third class. In 1834, shortly after his ordination as priest, when he was a chaplain of Christ Church, he became sub-librarian of the Bodleian, in succession to the Rev. Ernest Hawkins. In 1837 he was appointed assistant keeper of the MSS. in the British Museum, where he remained till 1849, when he received a canonry at Westminster, to which an Act of Parliament has attached the rectory of the great parish of St. Margaret's. Two years previously he had been appointed chaplain in ordinary to the Queen—an honour due to the remarkable character of his literary labours, which secured the patronage of the late Prince Consort. In 1842, while at the British Museum, he edited the "Book of Religious and Philosophical Sects," from the Arabic of Sharastani; in 1843 he edited an Arabic commentary on the "Lamentations," and "The Pillar of the Creed of the Sunnites." In 1845 he edited and translated an ancient Syriac version of the epistles of St. Ignatius, under the title of the "Corpus Ignatianum," which gave rise to what will long be remembered in the Church as the Ignatian controversy. He also edited the famous "Palimpsest" of Homer found in the convent of Maria Deipara, in the desert of Nitria; the "Spicilegium Syriacum," specimens of Bardesan and other writers, a very old version of a Syriac palimpsest of the four Gospels; and a translation of Eusebius, and it is understood that he was engaged on some other work connected with St. Matthew's Gospel at the time of his death. Two or three years ago her Majesty personally appointed Dr. Cureton a Royal trustee of the British Museum, in which he had been so long a subordinate official. He married about 18 years ago the daughter of Mr. Blore, the eminent architect, by whom he leaves a large family, an infant only a few months old being the youngest.

MR. NASSAU W. SENIOR, late Master in Chancery and Professor of Political Economy at the University of Oxford, died on the 4th ult. at 18, Hyde Park Gate, in his 73d year. He was educated at Eton and Oxford, where he graduated in 1811, taking a distinguished first class in classics. Amongst his college contemporaries were Sir John T. Coleridge, the Earl of Delawarr, the Bishop of St. Asaph, the Provost of Oriel, the Dean of St. Paul's, and other gentlemen who have raised themselves to prominent positions. In 1818 he was called to the bar, and in 1836 was appointed a Master in Chancery, during the Chancellorship of Lord Cottenham. In 1825 he was elected Professor of Political Economy at Oxford, being the first holder of the professorship, which was founded in that year by the late Mr. Drummond, M.P. He resigned it in 1830, and was succeeded by the late Dr. Whately, Archbishop of Dublin. In 1847 he was re-elected to the same office in succession to Dr. Travers Twiss. For some years he held the office of Examiner in Political Economy in the University of London. He wrote many works on the science to which he devoted [illegible] and contributed to the "Quarterly," "Edinburgh," [illegible] other reviews.

MR. W. N. WELBY, barrister-at-law, and for many years recorder of Chester and junior counsel to the Treasury, died on the 1st inst., after a short but severe illness. He was in his 82d year.

MR. WASHINGTON WILKS, one of the leaders of a certain class of the advanced Liberal party, died suddenly on the 27th ult. under melancholy circumstances. He was addressing a Reform meeting in St. Pancras vestry hall, when he fell back on the platform, and was carried in a state of insensibility into one of the committee rooms and laid upon the table. A powerful galvanic battery was at once applied to the region of the heart and chest, and the efforts were continued for 20 minutes, but without effect, and the medical men at last announced that he was dead. The body was conveyed to the dead-house of St. Pancras workhouse to await an inquest, and the meeting immediately adjourned. At the inquest on Wednesday the jury returned a verdict of death from the effects of congestion of the brain produced from sudden excitement.

MR. GEORGE LANCE, the celebrated flower and fruit painter, died a few days since at New Brighton, Cheshire, in his 62nd year. He was born at Little Easton, Essex, in 1802. In 1828, he first began to exhibit at the Royal Academy, but it is only since 1835 that he has regularly been a contributor. Every one who is in the habit of visiting the Royal Academy must be familiar with Mr. Lance's beautiful imitations of fruit and flowers. He has three pictures in the Vernon Gallery, the most celebrated of which is "Red-cap."

Potatos, owing to the dry weather, are for the most part small. Asparagus fetches from 4s. to 7s. a bundle. Flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Heaths, Pansies, Pelargoniums, Mignonette, and Roses.

HOPS.—BOROUGH MARKET, FRIDAY, July 8

Messrs. Pattenden & Smith report a better demand for Hops of all descriptions; fine samples of 1863 growth are very scarce, and command rather higher prices. The weather is very ungenial for the progress of the plant, and the crop will fall short of expectation, unless we get much higher temperature during the next two months. Currency:—

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, July 4.

We have a few more Beasts, and trade is very slow, consequently we cannot quote scarcely as high as on Monday last, yet in some instances that day's prices are realised. The number of Sheep is not much altered, nor is the demand for them. Trade is dull at late rates. Lambs and Calves are sold at reduced prices. From Germany and Holland there are 1340 Beasts, 5370 Sheep, 361 Calves and 85 Pigs; from Spain, 124 Beasts; from France, 14 Calves; from Scotland, 250 Beasts; from Ireland, 50; from Norfolk and Suffolk, 900; and 650 from the northern and midland counties.

THURSDAY, July 7.

The number of Beasts is rather shorter than on Thursday last, and there is a good demand for choice qualities. Monday's quotations are readily obtained. The supply of Sheep is about the same as of late. Trade is dull and a clearance is not effected; but prices remain unaltered. Calves and Lambs are not selling quite so well. From Germany and Holland there are 690 Beasts, 3290 Sheep, and 697 Calves; and 67 Beasts from Spain. Milch Cows, 85.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, July 4.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was small, and disposed of on the terms of this day sen'night. The attendance was moderate, and foreign Wheat was taken in retail only at Friday's decline, or 1s. per below the rates of last Monday. Barley and Peas are unaltered in value. Beans are the turn dearer, and Oats, of which the arrivals are considerable, must be quoted fully 6d. lower. We reduce our quotations of Flour 6d. per barrel.

FRIDAY, July 8.

The weather between the 1st and 4th inst. was unsettled with thunderstorms, it has since been fine, but excepting the 5th cloudy and cool; too much so, we think, to admit of a very favourable setting of the Wheat ears, and the reports we receive from the country are less favourable than they were. The crops are not well spoken of in the Western States of America, where rain appears to be much wanted, and in the interior of Russia the extreme and continued heat is said to be injuring the Wheat plant considerably. The Wheat trade in this kingdom since the 1st inst. has been inanimate, but prices have not undergone any quotable alteration. The previous value of all descriptions of Spring Corn was well supported with rather an improved tendency, particularly for Beans, owing, however, to the late arrivals of Oats here prices declined 6d. to 9d. per qr. Foreign Flour has been more freely offered, and is purchaseable here on somewhat lower terms, whilst in Liverpool it is quoted 6d. dearer. Since Friday last 15 vessels have been reported off the coast. Some cargoes of Wheat on passage have changed hands, and a few transactions for future shipment have taken place at fully late prices. Paris, July 7.—The Flour trade is inactive, and prices are declining. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 34s. 6d. per 280 lbs. The present stock has accumulated to 22,170 cwts. For Wheat 9d. per qr. lower rates have been accepted. The arrivals of British Oats and foreign Wheat have been large, of all other grain and Flour moderate. There was about the usual attendance at market. English Wheat was in demand at fully Monday's prices, and foreign commands the terms of that day. We observe no alteration in the value of Barley, Beans, or Peas, but the arrivals of Oats continuing to be somewhat in excess of the demand, our quotations are barely realised.

News of the Week.

In the House of Lords on Friday the Earl of Malmesbury moved the resolution of which he had given notice, condemnatory of the Ministerial policy in reference to the affairs of Denmark. The motion was supported by Lord Chelmsford, the Earl of Carnarvon, and Earl Grey, and opposed by Lord Brougham, the Duke of Argyll, the Marquis of Clanricarde, the Earl of Clarendon, Lord Wodehouse, Earl Russell, and Earl Granville. On a division the resolution was carried by a majority of 9. Out of 242 Peers present, 123 voted for the Government, but the scale was turned by the proxies, of which the Opposition obtained 58, while the Government had only 45. On Monday Lord Ebury moved an address to the Crown, praying for the appointment of a Royal Commission to consider what steps should be taken to obviate the evil arising from the present compulsory and indiscriminate use of the burial service of the Church of England. The Archbishop of Canterbury said that he did not object to the appointment of a commission, though he could not agree to an alteration of the Church Service. The Bishop of London said that a large proportion of the clergy were satisfied with the present state of things, and that the best course would be to leave the matter in the hands of the Government. Earl Granville intimated that he would consult the Archbishop of Canterbury and Lord Ebury, but at present he could not give any pledge on the subject. The motion was then withdrawn. On Tuesday the Indemnity Bill and the Street Music Bill were read a second time. The Facilities for Divine Service in Collegiate Schools Bill, the Life Annuities and Life Assurances Bill and the Lunacy (Scotland) Bill were read a third time and passed. On Thursday Lord Brougham asked if the Government intended to take any legislative measures to prevent the recurrence of such fearful crimes as the murder which had taken place on the North London Railway, and generally to increase the security of the public when travelling by railways. Earl Granville said that the subject should receive the careful consideration of the Government. The Commons' amendments to the Penal Servitude Bill, after some debate and a division, were agreed to. On the order for the third reading of the Public and Refreshment Houses Bill, the Earl of Donoughmore moved an amendment making the Act compulsory all over the country. Earl Granville opposed the amendment, which was negatived on a division by 44 to 33. The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

In the Commons on Friday the adjourned debate on Mr. Disraeli's resolution, condemning the policy of Ministers in regard to Denmark, was resumed, when the motion was opposed by Mr. B. Osborne, Mr. Monsell, Lord Elcho, Mr. Scourfield, Mr. Buxton, Mr. Clay, and Lord Palmerston, and supported by Mr. Whiteside, Mr. B. Cochrane, The O'Donoghue, Sir S. Northcote, and Mr. Walpole. Mr. Newdegate's amendment having then been withdrawn, Mr. Kinglake moved as an amendment to substitute for the last paragraph of Mr. Disraeli's resolution words expressing the satisfaction of the House that, at this conjuncture, Her Majesty has been advised to abstain from armed interference in the war now going on between Denmark and the German Powers. At 20 minutes to 2 o'clock on Saturday morning the House divided, when the numbers were—For Mr. Disraeli's resolution, 295; against it, 313; majority for the Government, 18. The amendment of Mr. Kinglake was then agreed to, and the words were added to the original resolution. On Monday, in answer to Mr. D. Griffith, Lord Palmerston said that her Majesty's Government had reason to believe that there was no intention on the part of the German Powers to attack Copenhagen. Sir W. Jolliffe moved, that the services rendered by Sir F. Head, when Governor of Upper Canada in the years 1857 and 1858, call for the favourable consideration of her Majesty's Government. Mr. Cardwell admitted the services of Sir F. Head, and stated that his case, in common with that of other colonial governors, was under the consideration of the Government. The motion was withdrawn. The House then went into Committee of Supply, and agreed to several votes of the Civil Service Estimates. The Inland Revenue (Stamp Duties) Bill, and the Public Schools Bill, were read a third time and passed. Several other Bills were advanced a stage. On Tuesday Lord Palmerston stated, in reply to Mr. Hardcastle, that the conduct of the Brazilian Government with regard to the slave trade had been invariably marked by a violation of their treaty engagements; and that their conduct towards the Emancipados had been equally flagrant. Mr. Bright and Mr. S. Fitzgerald contended that Lord Palmerston had made an unjust attack upon the Brazilian Government, and that the Brazilian Slave Act ought to be repealed. Lord Palmerston in reply expressed his conviction that if the Act were repealed, the Brazilian slave trade would be revived with all its former horrors. Mr. D. Griffith moved a resolution condemning the practice of appointing a Peer and Privy Councillor exclusively to the office of Postmaster-General, and was speaking in support of the motion, when the House was counted out. On Wednesday Mr. Bouverie moved the second reading of the Uniformity Act Amendment Bill. Mr. Walpole moved as an amendment that the Bill be read a second time that day three months. On a division the amendment was carried by 157 to 101. The Bill was therefore lost. The Scottish Episcopal Clergy Disabilities Bill was read a second time, an amendment moved by Mr. Kinnaird for a Select Committee on the subject having been previously withdrawn. On the order for going into Committee on the Poisoned Grain Prohibition, &c., Bill, a discussion took place on an amendment to defer the committee for three months. On a division, the amendment was negatived by 60 to 38, and the House went into committee pro formâ. Several Bills were advanced a stage, and others were withdrawn. On Thursday, in reply to Mr. Cochrane, Mr. M. Gibson declined to promise that he would bring in any measure next session making it compulsory on railway companies to establish some mode of communication between guards and passengers in railway trains. On the order for the second reading of the New Zealand Guarantee of Loan Bill, Mr. A. Mills moved as an amendment that the Bill be read a second time that day three months. After a long debate, the amendment was negatived, on a division, by 92 to 55, and the Bill was read a second time. The House then went into Committee of Supply on the remaining Civil Service Estimates, when the votes for the National Gallery and British Historical Portrait Gallery were agreed to.

The Danish Ministry, at the request of the King, has resigned, and a new Cabinet has been formed by Count MOLTKE NUTCHAU, a leading member of the strongest reactionary party. The first act of the new Ministry has been to send despatches to the Courts of Vienna and Berlin, containing proposals for the suspension of hostilities. The latest news states that hostilities have already been suspended by the Danes, and it is generally believed at Copenhagen that peace will shortly be concluded.

Selwyn is a candidate for Maldon in the Conservative interest. There are four candidates in the field for the seat about to be vacated by Mr. Ricardo at Worcester,—Mr. Allsopp, the brewer, a Conservative; Mr. Laslett, an Independent; Mr. Lycett, of the firm of Dent & Co., London, glove manufacturers; and Mr. Sherratt, Mayor of Worcester, in the Liberal interest. Mr. T. O. Trevelyan will be the Liberal candidate for Tynemouth.

THE NAVY.—A supplement to the London Gazette was published on Thursday, containing a memorandum from the Admiralty, by which the number of captains in the navy is to be reduced from 350 to 300; of commanders, from 450 to 400; and of lieutenants, from 1200 to 1000. The manner in which these reductions are to be made, and the advantages to be secured on retirement, are detailed in the memorandum.

THE ARMY.—It is stated that an important change is about to be made in the armament of our troops. It is understood that the committee appointed to consider the subject have strongly recommended that the whole of the infantry should be furnished with breech-loading rifles, and that the recommendation will be acted upon.

COLONIAL BISHOPRIC.—The Right Rev. Dr. Anderson, Bishop of Rupert's Land, is on his way to England, with a view of placing the resignation of his diocese in the hands of the Government.

COLONIAL APPOINTMENTS.—The Queen has appointed Sir Richard Graves MacDonnell, C.B., to be Lieut.-Governor of Nova Scotia, and Lieut.-General Sir Robert Percy Douglas, Bart., to be Lieut.-Governor of the Cape of Good Hope.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Empress presided on Wednesday at a Cabinet Council at St. Cloud for the first time since the Emperor's departure for Vichy. The following is a summary of a circular despatch addressed by M. Drouyn de Lhuys to the diplomatic agents of the Emperor on the 28th June, on the subject of the London Conference and the resumption of hostilities:—

"The Plenipotentiaries who met at London to re-establish peace between Germany and Denmark separated, after having confirmed the inutility of their efforts, and the belligerent parties immediately resumed arms. We sensibly regret that the labours of the Conference have not had a more satisfactory result, but it has not been the fault of France that the conclusion was not different. We have not shut our eyes to the difficulties which this negotiation presented. Thus, before its commencement, we had used every effort to obtain the meeting of the Conference upon the fittest conditions to facilitate its task. We had especially desired that a real armistice should be previously concluded for the entire duration of the deliberations, and that the basis of discussion should be determined in advance. The parties have been unable to agree upon these two points, and although this first difficulty inspired us at the outset with doubts as to the issue of the Conference, we have none the less sincerely seconded this effort at conciliation. The Plenipotentiary of the Emperor was, consequently, desired to support or to suggest every proposition which appeared likely to bring about an agreement. The point of departure of the discussion was naturally, first of all, to be sought in the arrangements of 1852. We asked ourselves, therefore, first, whether, if remodelled so as to attain their object better, they might not be made the basis of an equitable arrangement, and it was in this sense that the representative of France expressed himself at the opening of the negotiations. When, after recognition of the impossibility of keeping the discussion upon this ground, the English Government proposed an arrangement giving the southern portion of Schleswig to Holstein as well as Lauenburg, we did not hesitate to agree to this combination. It had in our eyes the advantage of taking into account the national sentiment of the German population of Schleswig, and of leaving to Holstein—increased by this annexation—the right of deciding upon its own fate. While lending our support to the English Plenipotentiaries, we acted in perfect conformity with the principles of our public law, and we should have been rejoiced at an arrangement which appeared to us acceptable to both parties. The German Powers did not consider themselves able to adopt it. They claimed for the frontier a line of demarcation which would have assured to Germany the possession of the districts, while Denmark persisted in not adding to the sacrifice to those she had consented to make in Southern Schleswig, as well as Holstein and Lauenburg. When all the other combinations put forward were set aside we suggested a last plan. We recommended that the populations forming the subject of dispute should be called upon to express their sentiments, and thus furnish the conference with the necessary data for tracing the line of separation in the most equitable manner. We have not failed to prevent the rupture of negotiations, and the difficulties are again left to be decided by arms. Opinion has been painfully sensibly moved by the resumption of hostilities, and looks with disquiet to the consequences so unequal a conflict may entail. For our part, we shall be unable to disregard the bearing of events so directly affecting the interests of all the maritime Powers in the North, and even those of the equilibrium of this portion of Europe. We entertain the sincere wishes that the dangers may be avoided which these events might bring about; and, guided by the same sentiments which have hitherto proved the rule of our conduct, in desiring to maintain the impartial attitude we have taken, we are willing to hope that no complication will arise of a grave a nature as to necessitate our embracing a different policy."

The Constitutionnel of Sunday expresses the desire that the pacific tendencies manifested by the Dagblad may be followed by some result, and says:—

"Denmark not being able to hope for material assistance from the Power which was incontestably the most interested in supporting her, may after a glorious war, notwithstanding a defeat, think of peace without in any way wounding the proudest national feeling."

The Pays of Monday contains an article referring to the despatches lately published by the Morning Post, respecting the alleged revival of the Holy Alliance. It says:—

"The Cabinets of St. Petersburg, Vienna, and Berlin take their epoch. The interviews that have taken place at Carlsbad and Kissingen will not prevail against the rights and the legitimate aspirations of modern Europe. The Sovereigns of Russia, Prussia, and Austria are now the only monarchs who persist in separating their own interests from the interests of their people. France and England are in another camp—the camp of the liberties of the new era and the rights of nationalities. Following the same object, they give one another the hand. France and England closely united will always be strong enough, without resort to force ever being necessary, to protect young Europe against the dark conspiracies of old Europe. The frank and sincere alliance of France and England secures the peace of the world, with liberty and victory for a long series of years."

La France contains an article in the same sense. A shocking disaster occurred to a steam-boat on the river Saône on Sunday afternoon. The vessel was crowded with passengers, who, rushing to one side, caused her to lurch, when 50 persons were thrown into the water and it is believed that 40 were drowned.

SPAIN.—The King will go to Paris next month on a visit to the Emperor of the French. The Queen will go to the sea baths of Cantabrique. The Madrid Liberal papers, commenting on the journey of the King to France, say that the object of this journey is to preserve the alliance with that country. The clerical papers are much opposed to this journey. The iron-clad frigate Numancia, the sailing frigates Berenguela, Blanca, and Vencedora, and the steamer San Quintin will sail for the Pacific after the arrival of the next mail at Southampton. The Madrid papers publish the terms on which the Government offer to settle the pending dispute with Peru, and to give up the Chincha Islands. If those terms are agreed upon, Spain offers to conclude a treaty with the Republic of Peru similar to those which exist between her and the other Spanish-American Republics. The Official Gazette of Saturday publishes the convention between France and Spain for the international railway service between the north of Spain and the south of France. The apprehensions of disturbances at Madrid, which would justify the adoption of precautionary measures, are now believed to be unfounded.

DENMARK.—At the request of the King, the whole Danish Ministry has resigned. On Friday the King deputed Count Charles Moltke-Nutchau to form a new Cabinet. The count belongs to the strongest reactionary party, and was formerly a member of the Bluhme Ministry. The Cabinet he has formed is as follows:—President of the Council and Minister of Foreign Affairs, M. de Bluhme; Minister of the Interior, M. Tillisch; Minister of War, Lieut.-General Hansen; Minister of Marine, Councillor Lütken; Minister of Justice and of Public Worship, Chamberlain Helzen; Minister of Finance, Councillor David; Minister for Schleswig, Chamberlain Johannsen. Count Moltke-Nutchau and M. de Quaade are Ministers without portfolios. The following is a summary of a Message sent by the New Ministry to the Rigsraad on Tuesday:—

"The King, deeming that men unconcerned in the past events would be better able to save the Fatherland, has decided upon a change of Ministers. We hope to obtain the confidence of the Rigsraad and the people, otherwise we shall be powerless. To lay down a programme would at present be impossible. The new Ministers can only give the assurance that, taking their stand firmly upon legal ground, they will never advise the King to adopt illegal measures. The Ministers will consider it as their mission to uphold the honour and independence of Denmark."

It is asserted that despatches were forwarded on Wednesday morning by the Government to the Courts of Vienna and Berlin, which are said to contain proposals for the suspension of hostilities. A Danish ship with a flag of truce, arrived at Swinemunde on Tuesday evening, with a despatch from Denmark requesting the suspension of hostilities. On Wednesday the military commander of Dantzig received a despatch announcing the suspension of hostilities on the part of the Danes. Colonel Kauffmann, of the Danish army, proceeded on Tuesday to the Prussian head-quarters; it is supposed for the purpose of negotiating the suspension of hostilities. The belief is becoming very general that peace will shortly be concluded. It is asserted on good authority that M. de Quaade is about to proceed to Berlin; The following is stated to be the probable programme of the new Ministry:—Maintenance of the London Treaty with the support of England, France, and Russia; eventual entrance into the Germanic Confederation; consent to an administrative State of Schleswig-Holstein with some common institutions; and personal union of both Duchies with the Danish kingdom. Bishop Monrad is believed to have told the King that the country required peace, and that he was nevertheless not in a position to conclude a peace of an acceptable character. He was, however, ready, should his Majesty desire, to hold out even under these unfavourable circumstances. The official Berlingske Tidende, referring to the Ministerial crisis, says:—

"The cause of the crisis is not so much to be sought in any difference of opinion between the King and his responsible advisers with regard to any especial question, as in the entire situation, threatening such extreme danger to the country."

THE DANISH DUCHIES.—On Sunday afternoon the Prussian troops, under General Falkenstein, successfully crossed the Liim Fiord, near Aalborg, in boats. The head-quarters were removed to Attrupgaard on Wednesday, and to Frederickshaven on Thursday.

SWEDEN.—The screw line-of-battle ships Carl Johann and Stockholm, and the steam corvettes Vanadis and Gefle, put to sea last week, with orders to cruise between Gottenburg and Falsterbo, on the south-west coast of Sweden. One portion of the fleet has since been recalled, but the other is still held in readiness for service. According to a statement in the Morgenblad of Tuesday, the whole of the army intended for active service has been disembodied, the men being sent away on furlough.

FRANKFORT.—At the sitting of the Federal Diet on Thursday a proposition was made by Austria and Prussia that a request should be addressed to the Duke of Augustenburg similar to that addressed to the Grand Duke of Oldenburg, asking him to substantiate his hereditary claims to the Duchies. The vote upon this proposal has been postponed until the next sitting.

BELGIUM.—In the sitting of the Senate on Wednesday, a Royal decree was read closing the Legislative Session of 1863-1864.

WURTEMBURG.—At the opening of the Estates on Tuesday, the King, in his speech from the Throne, expressed a wish that unanimity should reign between the Government and the Estates, and assured them of his sincerity and love towards the people. He hoped that the Holstein question would be settled in a national sense, and in accordance with national right. The speech of the King was received with loud and general cheering. The civil list is to be retained on the same footing as in the former reign.

PRUSSIA.—Official intelligence arrived at Berlin on Wednesday that couriers had left Copenhagen for Vienna and Berlin with proposals for an armistice and peace. The Ministerial Provinzial Correspondenz of Thursday, referring to the recent change in the Danish Ministry, says:—

"It appears certain that this change is intended to preserve Denmark from further losses, by at last entering upon a path leading to peace. It may be presumed that the German Powers will meet any earnestly-meant peace policy of the Danish Government by every means in their power. But peace is no longer to be obtained by Denmark except by her giving up the whole of Schleswig-Holstein and recognising its independence. An armistice can also only be agreed to when an acceptable basis for peace negotiations has been offered."

The Customs treaty of the 28th ult., which Hanover and Oldenburg had signified their intention of joining, was signed at Berlin by their representatives on Monday.

AUSTRIA.—The Ministry for Foreign Affairs has received information that a courier from Copenhagen will shortly arrive at Vienna with proposals for an armistice.

ITALY.—In the Senate on Thursday the Budget came on for discussion. Signor Marliani referred to the relations with Spain, and demanded that the Italian Legation at Madrid should be abolished. The Minister for Foreign Affairs, in reply, said that Italy, having been recognised by the great Powers, did not seek to be acknowledged by Spain. Signor Marliani urged the Government to take possession of the Spanish College at Bologna. The President of the Council assured the Senate that the Government would exercise the rights to which it is entitled. It is believed that the Session will close on Monday next. Intelligence from Venetia announces that the country, especially the province of Verona, is infested by several bands of brigands.

TURKEY.—Accounts from Constantinople state that 40,000 militia have been disbanded, and the armaments hitherto carried on are being less urgently conducted. This is considered to show that the intentions of the Porte are of a peaceful nature. By an Imperial order the Turkish commercial flag has been altered. Instead of the red ground and white crescent, as hitherto, the colours are green ground with a red ball in the middle bearing a white crescent in its centre.

COAST OF AFRICA.—The news brought by the last mail respecting our troops on the Gold Coast is most unsatisfactory. It is stated that they were so diseased that hardly four men out of ten were fit for duty.

INDIA.—The Bombay mail of the 8th June says that the resignation of the chief command of the army by Sir Hugh Rose, and the appointment of Sir William Mansfield as his successor, are near at hand. The Ameer of Cabul is reported to have completely defeated Afzat Khan in a great battle at Bamcea. The tract of land situated at the foot of the Bhootan Hills, called Ambarree Fallacootah, is to be immediately annexed to the British territories. The sum of 10,000 rs. hitherto paid as a subsidy to the Bhootiahs on the frontier of Assam is to be discontinued. The Bhootiahs are to be hemmed in by posts established along our frontier, the garrisons of which are to prevent supplies of any kind reaching Bhootan from British India. These measures will soon bring the Bhootiahs to submission, as the Hill States depend on our territories for most of their supplies. Another suttee has taken place in Meywar. The son of the Rajah of Beygoon died and was burnt. During the ceremony his wife was thrown on the funeral pile and held there until she was burnt to death. Deva Sing, the chowkeydar, who caused the death of the Rev. Isider Loewenthal, at Peshawur, has been convicted of culpable homicide, and sentenced to imprisonment for two years. Two more new banks have been started at Bombay.

AUSTRALIA.—The transportation question continues to occupy public attention in the Australian colonies. Mr. Kyte has submitted a motion to the Parliament of Victoria, proposing a vote to defray the passage-money of a certain number of expirees annually from the colony to England. It was discussed on the 11th May, and supported by several prominent members, including Mr. O'Shanassy, Mr. Duffy, and Mr. Haines. The proposition was withdrawn, but not before it had evoked a strong expression of feeling against the continuance of transportation to any portion of Australia. It was admitted that the object proposed to be gained by the adoption of the motion would be achieved if the landing of a few expirees at Plymouth or Gravesend brought practically before people in England a sense of the evil they propose to bestow upon the colonies. The Argus, referring to this subject, makes the important statement that a memorial praying for the suppression of transportation has been drawn up in Western Australia itself, but that Dr. Hampton, the governor of that colony, has refused to send it to England. The salmon acclimatising experiment is proceeding successfully at Melbourne and Hobart Town.

NEW ZEALAND.—The following are the details of the recent disaster to our military and naval forces at Tauranga:—

"The natives, in considerable strength, had reached Tauranga before General Cameron went down, and had erected a pah of some considerable strength on the neck of land which connects Te Papa (the place where our camp was situated), and the main land. On the 27th and 28th April preparations were carefully made for an attack. Guns were got into position, and troops thrown into positions commanding the approaches to the pah. On the night between the 28th and 29th the 68th Regiment were marched round so as to reach the rear of the position, and succeeded in doing this perfectly unopposed. The whole day from half-past seven up to four o'clock in the afternoon the firing continued with terrific perseverance. The effect was very manifest in a large breach which extended about twenty yards, the rubbish of various kinds filling the trench nearly up to the level of the surrounding earth. At four o'clock the troops prepared for the assault, advanced towards the breach, the skirmishers on each flank pouring a searching fire into the place. The impression was that there could hardly be a living soul left in the place, which appeared to have been turned outside in by the explosion of the shells which had gone on all day. A well-directed, but feeble fire from the flanking angles, which opened on the column as it advanced at double-quick time up the slope to the breach, only served to modify the view very slightly. With a cheer the stormers crossed the ditch, scaled the bank, and plunged into the pah. They were led by Commander Hay of the Harrier, and consisted of the Naval Brigade and the 43d Regiment, in equal numbers, but when they dashed into the works they saw nothing of the enemy. There were fragments of the palisading, kits of food, mats, and other things lying about; but not a living soul visible. Beyond was a second palisade, also somewhat shattered and rent; over this the sailors at once swarmed into the second compartment. There were here no signs of life either. Two or three dead natives lay about, and there was an unusual amount of plunder of various kinds, in different parts of the opening. The usual love of loot which possesses every man-of-war's man was too much for discipline or prudence. Seeing no enemy they would not believe in one, and many threw down their guns to search for loot. They were soon joined by the 43d's men in some numbers, and, despite the exertions of their officers, they seem to have formed a very tumultuous band crowded into the inner division. Suddenly from every side, and even, as it seemed, from the ground at their feet, a terrific fire was poured upon them from hundreds of pieces; and the awful war-howls of the natives rang on every side of them. The 43d men were panic-struck, and fled at once without looking behind them, leaving their officers to stand, and, alas, fall unsupported. The sailors also fell back, and the place was all but evacuated, when Captain Hamilton, of the Esk, arrived with the supports, and waving his hand over his head shouted to his men to follow him. As he leaped into the pah a bullet pierced his brain, and he fell dead. His men rushed in, and a terrific fire was kept up for some time, until at last all the officers, with scarcely an exception, being killed and wounded, they fell back in disorder. The 68th Regiment had tried to assault on the opposite side according to orders, but it was found that the cross-fire was so terrific as to render it death to attempt to storm. It is believed that 300 men were in the pah, and they had concealed themselves in casements cut out of the ground, and covered with boughs and earth, which, in great measure protected them from the shells. The General lost no time in moving up guns and skirmishers and renewing the fire upon the place, but as it was now growing dark nothing more could be done by way of assault. The yells of triumph from the pah were tremendous, and many were the challenges sent through the darkness to the soldiers to come on once more. This was bravado however, as they knew very well that the assault would be renewed next morning, and did not mean to await its coming. About 10 o'clock they crept out of the pah and tried to escape unperceived in the darkness. They were, however, intercepted at a crossing-place of the river by the guard of the 68th and Naval Brigade, and broke and took to the swamp. Here they were fired at by the skirmishers of the whole regiment. They escaped for the most part under cover of the darkness, leaving between 20 and 30 of their number dead in the swamp. Our troops entered the pah at midnight, and found that the killed and wounded had not been touched by the natives. Our loss was enormous, especially in officers, a list of which has already been published."

UNITED STATES.—Secretary Chase has resigned, and Mr. Lincoln has nominated as his successor ex-Governor Todd, of Ohio, who having declined the appointment, Senator Fessenden, of Maine, was appointed, and confirmed by the Senate. Gold opened at 250, rose to 282, but declined to 260 on Mr. Fessenden's confirmation, and to 230 on the repeal of the Gold Bill by the Senate. There is no news from either of the armies. General Grant has made no further attempt to turn the Confederate position at Petersburg since his defeat on the 22d ult. The term of service of many of his veteran regiments expires from day to day, and the soldiers exhibit no disposition to re-enter the ranks. The Administration journals insist that he must be heavily reinforced before he again ventures to advance. Much anxiety is felt for the safety of General Sherman. Many of his supply trains have been captured, and the Confederate force in his rear is steadily augmenting. His loss during his present campaign is estimated at nearly 20,000 men. General Wilson's cavalry has destroyed 20 miles of the Danville Railroad. On their return on the 27th ult. they were interrupted by the Confederates at Beam's Station on the Weldon and Petersburg Railroad. Wilson fought all night and the following morning, but was unable to push his way through. General Meade sent the 6th Corps, with a division of the 2d Corps, to his assistance. General Polk, Bishop of Louisiana, was killed in battle in Georgia on the 14th ult. Mr. Joseph F. Scoville, the well-known "Manhattan" of the London Standard and Herald, died suddenly in New York on the 25th ult. in his 50th year. Colonel Marshall Anderson, of Cincinnati, brother of Major, now General Anderson, who commanded Fort Sumter when its bombardment by the State of South Carolina precipitated the war, has declined the nomination by the leaders of the Democratic party as "Presidential Elector for the 12th congressional district of Ohio." He has published a remarkable letter, stating as his grounds for this decision that he is opposed to the continuance of the war, and is in favour of the secession of the Western States from the Union. He says:—

"I want every voter to know that I am diametrically opposed to the continuance of this war. I will not, I cannot, consent to advocate and sustain any man, be he soldier or civilian, who is in favour of its prosecution. I am for a candidate who will lead us on under the banner of the Constitution, our motto, 'Union and liberty, or no union at all.' If we cannot have our glorious old Union, let us have God and Nature's Union. Let us follow the bright sparkling waters of the Ohio down to the Father of Waters, down to the Ocean of Peace. We poor Western serfs are crushed to the earth under national burdens, imposed upon us by our factory masters, by Lowell lords and shoddy ladies. I am tired of working for Yankee taskmasters. I hate their selfish meanness, their commercial restrictions for their own benefit, and am in favour of a Western Confederacy. I have paid tribute long enough to the looms and spindles of the East. I wish no longer to be the political pack mule of New England. They have taught me that when the burden becomes intolerable I have a right to throw it off. They invented the word 'secede,' and they have inculcated the doctrine that an oppressed people are justified in separating from their oppressors—peaceably if they can—forcibly if they must. The Union is dissolved."

CANADA.—A German emigrant train on the Grand Trunk Railway ran off the Beloid Bridge, near St. Hilaire, Canada East, on the morning of the 29th ult. 34 dead and from 30 to 40 wounded had been taken from the wreck. One car was yet to be examined.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.—The Colonial papers give details of an attack by Indians on the 7th of May upon a road party, working on the Bute Inlet route. The men were attacked at daybreak while most of them were asleep, and of 17 white men only three made their escape. The motive is supposed to have been plunder. The massacre has created a very painful feeling among the colonists generally, and it is feared that a like fate has overtaken a second party, who had been sent up by Bentinck Arm, and were working downwards.

MEXICO.—Official despatches from Mexico describe the solemn entry of the Emperor Maximilian into the capital on the 12th of June, amid unanimous and indescribable enthusiasm. The Indians of pure breed, who form seven-eighths of the population, were particularly conspicuous by the exuberance of their delight. The native chiefs addressed the Emperor Maximilian in the Aztec language, and hailed him as the avenger and regenerator destined by Providence to raise the Indian race from their humiliation and degradation.

THE PACIFIC.—The hostilities which have occurred between Spain and Peru, have caused great excitement in Chili. It is proposed to erect formidable batteries to guard the entrance to the harbour of Valparaiso. A commission has been appointed to proceed to England for the purpose of purchasing war steamers. In Peru subscriptions are raising for the purpose of maritime defence. On the 3d ult. a Spanish gun boat appeared in the Bay of Callao, under a flag of truce, and requested permission to anchor and deliver despatches to the minister of England, France, and Chili, which was refused. The officer commanding the gun boat then said that he wished solely to treat with the Peruvian Government for the suspension of hostilities, but this was also refused.

Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

FRIDAY.—Vote of Censure.—The Earl of MALMESBURY moved a resolution expressing the opinion of the House that, while the course pursued by her Majesty's Government had failed to maintain their avowed policy of upholding the integrity and independence of Denmark, it had lowered the just influence of this country in the councils of Europe, and thereby diminished the securities for peace. Having regretted the absence, through indisposition, of the Earl of Derby, on whom the task of moving the resolution would have fallen, he expressed his fear that the violation of the Treaty of 1852 had set a bad precedent, which might at any future time be quoted as an excuse for violence and wrong. The German Diet had exceeded its powers in interfering with the European treaty, by asserting the principle of nationality against it. He would express no opinion as to the future, but as to the past he believed had the Government been firm and decided in its course the present conflict might have been prevented. He then traced the failure of all the negotiations to the interference of Lord Russell with questions connected rather with the internal government of Denmark than its foreign relations. He had placed himself in the position both of partisan and judge between Denmark and Germany, and had therefore pleased neither party, and destroyed his own influence as an English Minister.—The Duke of ARGYLL said that the resolution involved no principle, and explained no policy. The discussion raised on it was a mere contest of faction. The Opposition avowed that they would not have gone to war with Germany on behalf of Denmark; why, then, was not the Government justified in equally refraining from hostilities? He attributed the course taken by Denmark, in resisting the demands of Germany, in a great degree to a conviction on the part of the Danish Government that the sympathies of the country and of that House were on its side. He believed that Denmark had also speculated on a change in the Government of this country, by which it would be assisted. Instead of this, Denmark now saw the Government attacked on the very ground that they had endeavoured to form an European alliance to defend it.—Lord BROUGHAM said he had attentively studied the correspondence, and had come to the conclusion that the Government had not menaced Germany. He felt that they could not have stood silently by and seen the Danes overwhelmed without remonstrance and protest; at the same time it would be unreasonable to expect that England should, single-handed, take up arms against a third of continental Europe.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE moved as an amendment to omit the latter part of the motion, and insert in lieu thereof "That this House regrets that Denmark was allowed to expect from the English Government material aid in support of the objects of the Treaty of 1852." While agreeing that the Government had deplorably mismanaged affairs, he could not concur in the terms of the motion, as he did not believe that the influence of England had been lowered, or that she stood humiliated before the nations of Europe.—The Earl of CLARENDON said that he had not shared the responsibilities of the Government during the most active part of the negotiations, but in the outset of the affair the Government had exhibited foresight and a clear appreciation of its gravity. They had shown an honest and sincere desire to bring about an amicable settlement, in which they would have succeeded if they had been met in an equal spirit, not only by the parties directly interested, but also by the other Powers who were equally parties to the Treaty of 1852.—Lord CHELMSFORD condemned the policy of the Government.—Lord WODEHOUSE would not admit that any promise of material aid had been given by England to Denmark. All the Government had done was to offer the Danes sound and honest advice, for which the other Powers were equally responsible with England. The Earl of CARNARVON argued that the conduct of the Government had from beginning to end been characterised by failure, and that it was the duty of Parliament to pass its judgment on a policy so indecisive, feeble, and humiliating.—Earl RUSSELL said he could not discover, either from the resolution or the speeches in support of it, what was the foreign policy of the Opposition. No two speakers seemed to agree in their notions as to how these negotiations ought to have been conducted. Lord Derby had admitted it would be wrong at any time to go to war for Denmark. Now, Lord Malmesbury thought, if the English Government had resolved on war when the German troops entered Schleswig, this conflict would have been prevented. The Treaty of 1852, though wise in its general objects and calculated to secure peace, was an artificial one, and dependent upon conditions the performance of which it was not in the power of England, France, and Russia to insure. The Government had chosen and acted on one principle — that of non-intervention, to which it had strictly adhered, as in the case of Italy and in the civil war in America. — Earl GREY supported the resolution. — Earl GRANVILLE said he felt convinced, from the course the debate had taken, that it would have a good effect on the country and remove a good deal of misapprehension. He contended that England had not lost her just influence in Europe. The complete concord between England and the neutral Powers throughout the sittings of the Conference was a proof that our influence was unimpaired. The taunts of the German newspapers were no evidence it had been diminished. There were parties in Europe to whom a war would have been an advantage, but if England had entered into hostilities it would only have been a dupe for their purposes. The House then divided, when the numbers were—

MONDAY.—The Burial Service.—Lord EBURY moved an address to the Crown praying for the appointment of a Commission to consider what steps should be taken to mitigate the evils arising from the present compulsory and indiscriminate use of the Burial Service of the Church of England. No less than 4000 clergymen had petitioned the Bishops to devise some remedy for the scandal and grievance caused in some cases by the existing form of the service; and he understood that the Primate admitted the grievance, and was prepared to assent to the motion with some restriction.—The Archbishop of CANTERBURY said that he would agree to the appointment of a Royal Commission, but could not approve any alteration in the Church Service as the remedy.—The Bishop of LONDON doubted the expediency of appointing a Commission, thinking it better that the responsible advisers of the Crown should take what steps they deemed right in the matter. There was a strong feeling on the part of the clergy against an alteration in the service, but it was possible to modify the law that prescribed the use of that service.—Earl GRANVILLE could not pledge the Government to any particular course of proceeding, but an attempt would be made to deal with the question in a manner satisfactory to all parties. The motion was then withdrawn. The Publichouses and Refreshment Houses Bill was considered in committee. On the clause giving to Town Councils and Improvement Commissioners the power of deciding on the adoption of the Act, the committee divided, and as the numbers for and against the clause were equal (31) it stands part of the Bill. Some discussion ensued on the manner in which the question had been put; but as any objection of this kind must be made before the division, and cannot be entertained afterwards, the report of the amendments was agreed to. The India Offices Bill, the Summary Procedure (Scotland) Bill, and the Facilities for Divine Service in Collegiate Schools Bill were read a third time and passed. The Lunacy (Scotland) Bill passed through committee. The Thames Conservancy Bill was read a second time.

TUESDAY.—The Alleged Massacre of Swedish Volunteers.—Earl RUSSELL, in reply to a question by Lord SHAFTESBURY, stated that a communication had been received from the Prussian Minister of Foreign Affairs, stating that the report of the German troops having massacred 400 Swedish Volunteers after the engagement of Düppel was altogether false.—The Earl of SHAFTESBURY read an extract from a private letter stating that the Prussians had fired on wounded Danes during the action, and referred to an order of the day issued by the Prussian Commander, notifying that every foreigner made prisoner in the Danish ranks and unable to prove that he had been regularly enrolled in the Danish service would be tried by court-martial, and on conviction shot. The order proved that the Prussian Government had no desire to mitigate the horrors of war.—Earl RUSSELL believed there was no intention to carry the order into effect. — On the motion of the Earl of MALMESBURY, the Street Music Bill was read a second time. The Performance of Divine Worship in Collegiate Schools Bill was read a third time.—The Earl of HARDWICKE withdrew the motion of which he had given notice, in reference to the Memorial of Sir Francis Head, as he understood the Government intended to make a proposal to Parliament on the subject early in the next Session.

THURSDAY.—Railway Travelling.—Lord BROUGHAM drew the attention of the Government to the general feeling of alarm created in the public mind by the recent occurrences in railway carriages, and urged the necessity of establishing some means by which the passengers could communicate with the guard. He hoped some measures would be adopted for the protection of the community.—Earl GRANVILLE promised that the subject should be carefully considered by the Government. —The amendments of the House of Commons to the Penal Servitude Act were considered, when the Earl of SHAFTESBURY moved that the fourth clause, which the Peers had struck out of the Bill, but which the Lower House had reinserted, be again struck out. The clause provides that the convict holder of a ticket of leave shall report himself to the police of the district in which he resides once a month. The noble lord examined the reasons given by the Commons for reinserting the clause, and declared himself strongly opposed to allowing it to remain part of the Bill. Its effect would be to increase every difficulty with which a released convict now had to contend in obtaining employment.—The Earl of CARNARVON thought that if Lord Shaftesbury's views were carried out the Bill would be wholly inoperative.—Earl GRANVILLE recommended the House to accept the meeasure as it came up from the Commons. On a division on the question whether their lordships' amendment should be sustained, the numbers were—Contents, 25; non-contents, 62. Clause 4, therefore, is reinserted in the Act. On the motion for the third reading of the Public and Refreshment Houses Bill, Lord DONOUGHMORE moved an amendment, making the Act compulsory on all places to which it would extend, instead of optional with the corporations and governing bodies. On a division the amendment was negatived by a majority ef 11, the numbers being 44 against 33 The Bill was then read a third time and passed. The Factory Act Extension Bill passed through committee, after a few observations from Lord SHAFTESBURY on the great benefit former legislation of the same kind had conferred on the workpeople employed in various manufactures. The new Foreign Office.—In answer to a question by Lord REDESDALE, Earl GRANVILLE stated it would be necessary for the Government to purchase the block of buildings between Parliament Street and the front of the new Foreign Office. The Railways (Ireland) Act Amendment Bill and the Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Bill were read a second time. The Indemnity Bill, the India Stocks Transfer Amendment Bill, and the Defence Act Amendment Bill passed through committee. The Civil Courts (Ireland) Bill and the India Offices Bill were read a third time and passed.

FRIDAY.—Essays and Reviews.—Lord HOUGHTON asked whether her Majesty's Government have taken or are willing to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown as to the powers of Convocation, to pass a synodical judgment on books written by clergymen or laymen; as to the immunity of members of that body from proceedings at common law consequent on such judgments; and as to the forms according to which such judicial power must be exercised if it belongs to that body. He asked the question because of the verdict that had been passed upon the volume called "Essays and Reviews." [Left speaking.]

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY.—Vote of Censure.—The adjourned debate was resumed by Mr. B. OSBORNE, who said that he by no means endorsed the foreign policy of the Government in its different details, but he did not like the injustice that had been done to Earl Russell, for which the whole Cabinet was responsible. It was not, he thought, any portion of the duty of the Opposition to find a policy for the Ministry; but in regard to the future policy to be adopted in our foreign relations, he considered that Mr. Cobden had correctly indicated the only line which could be followed with honour and with safety, for we were now isolated in Europe, and even the King of Ashantee was indifferent to our friendship. He concluded by giving a personal sketch of the Cabinet, as a museum of curiosities, containing many birds of rare and curious plumage, some alive and some stuffed, the noble lord at its head being undoubtedly the most active of the number; and though his domestic policy was what might be termed stationary, his foreign policy was pugnacious and progressive.—Mr. WHITESIDE argued that we had no right to give advice to foreign Powers unless we meant to assist them.—Mr. MONSELL opposed the motion; Mr. B. COCHRANE supported it.—Lord ELCHO said it was admitted that there had been a failure in the negotiations, but because they had failed that was no just ground for a vote of censure on the Government. He would be no party to a censure upon a Government which had earnestly, honestly, and perseveringly, though unsuccessfully, laboured for peace.—Mr. SCOURFIELD, Mr. BUXTON, and Mr. CLAY opposed the motion. — THE O'DONOGHUE denied that there was any compact among the Roman Catholic members to vote against the Government, or that there was any truth in the rumour that any agents of the Pontifical Government had undertaken a mission to England to bring pressure on the Catholic members. For his own part he would vote in favour of the motion, because the Government had done nothing for Ireland.—Sir S. NORTHCOTE said that the Opposition charged the Government with a general want of sagacity and of statesmanship in the whole course of the negotiations. The indictment was, not that their conduct had humiliated the country, but that they had deprived her of a portion of her just influence in Europe.—Mr. WALPOLE, after adverting to the cause of the war and to the conduct of Austria and Prussia in allowing themselves to be borne along with the revolutionary torrent, denounced the mode in which the Treaty of 1852 had been got rid of, to the injury of public law and national rights. His charge against the Government was founded, he said, upon the manner in which they had interfered during [illegible] 1862. The Government had not, what they ought to have had, a definite, distinct policy; they placed themselves in a false position by irritating Russia and France, and they had lost influence in Europe.—Lord PALMERSTON said if any doubt could have existed, when the motion was first made, as to its object and importance, that doubt must be dispelled, for the House had been told plainly that it was intended as a vote of no confidence in the Government. Efforts had been made in the discussion to separate Earl Russell from his colleagues. This was an unconstitutional course of proceeding. The Ministers were all equally responsible for what the Foreign Office had done. He regretted for his country the pains taken to vilify and degrade her. He maintained that the country stood as high as ever in the estimation of Europe. The motion asserted that the [illegible] influence of the country had been lowered. This was not a fact; it was a gratuitous libel upon the country by a party that hoped to rule it. He read a statement of what the present Administration had done during their five years' tenure of office, in the reduction of taxation, the diminution of the National Debt, and the reduction of the expenditure; and he showed the vast increase of the income of the country and of its foreign trade, and indicated other tests of the national prosperity. This being so, he contended that the Government had administered the affairs of the country with honour and advantage, and with credit to themselves, so as to entitle them to the approbation of the House and the confidence of the country.—Mr. DISRAELI replied, and defended himself against the charge of having misquoted documents,—Mr. NEWDEGATE having, with some reluctance, withdrawn his amendment, Mr. KINGLAKE moved an amendment, in lieu of the last paragraph of Mr. Disraeli's resolution, to substitute the words following:—"To express the satisfaction with which we have learnt that, at this conjuncture, Her Majesty has been advised to abstain from armed interference in the war now going on between Denmark and the German Powers." On a division, this amendment was carried by 313 to 295, a majority of 18 for the Government, and the words were added to the original resolution. The result of the division was received with tremendous applause and waving of hats and handkerchiefs.

MONDAY.—Railway Trains.—Mr. B. COCHRANE gave notice that on an early day he would call attention to the necessity of compelling railway companies to provide a means of communication between passengers and the guards of trains.—In reply to Sir F. HEYGATE, Mr. DILLWYN said it was not his intention to proceed with his motion on the necessity of reforming the Irish Church this session, but he hoped to do so early in the next.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL for IRELAND intimated that it was not his intention to proceed with the Court of Chancery (Ireland) Bill, on account of the late period of the Session. Reservoirs of Waterworks Companies.—On the motion for going into Committee of Supply, Mr. FERRAND called attention to the proceedings of waterworks companies, and to the great danger to which the lives of people residing near their reservoirs are continually exposed. He contended that the reservoirs in Lancashire and Yorkshire were in a most defective state, and that it behoved the Government to cause immediate inquiry to be made into their condition, in order to prevent the recurrence of accidents similar to that which had proved so fatal at Sheffield.—Sir G. GREY declined on the part of the Government to assume the responsibility of a periodical inspection of these reservoirs, but added that if the works referred to were in a defective state, the persons in the neighbourhood ought to indict the companies in the manner provided by the law.—After a few words from Mr. W. E. FORSTER and Mr. HADFIELD the subject dropped. The Address on the Conference.—Lord PROBY, Comptroller of the Household, brought up the reply of her Majesty to the address of the Commons, in which Her Majesty stated that she shared in the deep concern felt by the House that the Conference had broken up without having accomplished the important purpose for which it was convened, and that she was happy to find that the House was satisfied with the course which she had adopted by abstaining from interfering in the war between Denmark and Germany. The War in Denmark.—In answer to Mr. D. GRIFFITH, Lord PALMERSTON said her Majesty's Government had reason to believe that there was no intention on the part of the German Powers to attack Copenhagen. Case of Sir F. B. Head.—Sir J. JOLLIFFE brought under notice the memorial of Sir Francis Bond Head to the Secretary for the Colonies, laid upon the table of the House on the 6th of June; and moved that, in the opinion of the House, the great but hitherto unrequited services rendered by Sir F. Head, when Governor of Upper Canada in 1837 and 1838, called for the favourable consideration of the Government.—Mr. CARDWELL bore testimony to the distinguished services of Sir F. Head during the period of his governorship, and said the subject was under the consideration of the Treasury, and that it would be considered in connection with the memorial of the colonial governors for retiring pensions. He hoped that the House would be satisfied with the proposal which the Government proposed to make on the subject next session.—Sir J. PAKINGTON hoped that Mr. Cardwell would take a generous view of Sir F. Head's case, and would recognise the irresistible claims which he had upon the gratitude of the country, for, had it not been for his energy and capacity, the province of Upper Canada would have been lost to the Crown.—Sir F. SMITH trusted that Sir F. Head would be treated with generosity, and not with parsimony.—Mr. ADDERLEY reminded the Government that the losses of the rebels in Canada had been made good, while Sir F. Head had for years been deprived of public employment.—Mr. ANGERSTEIN expressed his hope that the claim of Sir F. Head would not be mixed up with those of other colonial governors, as it rested upon different grounds altogether. The motion was then withdrawn. The House went into committee of supply on the Civil Service Estimates.—Sir R. PEEL, in proposing the vote of 316,769*l.* for National Education in Ireland, explained in detail the expenditure of the board, and observed that the reports of the inspectors on convent schools would be published in the course of a few days, and that they would be found on the whole most favourable to those institutions. The vote gave rise to a considerable discussion, in which the Irish members took part, and eventually the vote was agreed to without a division. Mr. WALPOLE moved the vote of 96,327*l.* for the British Museum, and explained that the amount was 1,486*l.* more than the sum voted last year. This increase was accounted for chiefly by the special purchases which had been made—both of them valuable acquisitions to the Museum and to the community at large. The first of these was the purchase of a collection recently found in a cave in the south of France, and calculated to throw great light on the question of the antiquity of man. The second purchase was a bronze lamp, found on the site of the Julian Palace, and supposed to be of Greek workmanship and of a date prior to the Christian era. Another purchase had been made since the date of the vote, and therefore not included in it,—the contents of the Farnese Palace, sold by the King of Naples. In that collection was a beautiful equestrian statue of Mars—one of the only three ancient equestrian statues known to be in existence. These acquisitions raised the question of providing additional accommodation for the national collections. Two courses were open to Parliament to adopt. One was to remove the natural history collections to South Kensington, where a site was already obtained, leaving the [illegible] and other works at Bloomsbury, or to purchase of the Duke of Bedford and his tenants a sufficient quantity of land in the neighbourhood of the Museum for the gradual extension of the present building. The expense of the latter alternative might appear at first sight startling, but he believed that in the end it would not be found unreasonable. It was, therefore, thought, more desirable that this question should be settled before the prorogation of Parliament.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer said that beyond the circumstance of having invited designs for a building at South Kensington the Government had not, and would not, do anything without the sanction of Parliament. The vote was then agreed to, and the Chairman reported progress. The Inland Revenue (Stamp Duties) Bill and the Public Schools Bill were read a third time and passed. The Ionian Islands States Acts of Parliament Legal &c., Bill, the Militia Pay Bill, and the Expiring Laws Continuance Bill were read a second time. The Court of Chancery (Ireland) Bill was withdrawn. Several other Bills were advanced a stage.

Tuesday.—The Highways Act Amendment Bill was recommitted at a morning sitting, when the clauses were agreed to, with amendments.—The Slave Trade and Brazils.—On the reassembling of the House in the evening, Lord Palmerston stated, in reply to Mr. Hardcastle that the conduct of the Brazilian Government with regard to the slave trade had been invariably marked by a flagrant violation of treaty engagements, and that their conduct towards the Emancipados had been equally flagrant. All the efforts which her Majesty's Ministers had made to obtain justice for those negroes had failed.—Mr. Fitzgerald asked whether it was not the fact that the Brazilian Government had put down the slave trade, and that Lord Brougham had recently, in the House of Lords, expressed his warm appreciation of the exertions made by that Government for the purpose.—Lord Palmerston replied that if Brazil had, since 1852, put down the slave trade, it was by compulsion, and not by conviction.—Mr. Bright moved the adjournment of the House in order to enter his protest against the continuance of what was called the "Aberdeen Act," which, he argued, ought to have been repealed long since, and which, if not repealed, would preclude the possibility of re-establishing friendly relations between the two countries. He hoped that the debate of last week, which had elicited extraordinary unanimity of censure on the irritating and offensive policy of the Foreign Office, would serve as a caution to the Government to abandon that policy for the future.—Sir J. Elphinstone called attention to the inefficiency of the British squadron on the West Coast of Africa, and said we had not a single vessel, with the exception of the Rattlesnake, in those waters which could make more than 8 knots an hour.—Lord Palmerston said that if the Aberdeen Act were repealed the inevitable effect would be to revive the slave trade. This would be a most deplorable circumstance; and much as he valued the friendship of Brazil, he would rather surrender it than consent to a step which would have the effect of reducing that country again to the level of a slave-trading State. Railway Trains.—Mr. B. Cochrane called attention to the recent murder on the North London Railway, and inquired of the President of the Board of Trade whether, with the view of protecting the public, it would not be possible to compel railway companies to introduce into the carriages some mode of communicating with the guards.—Mr. M. Gibson said it would be possible to make such a mode of communication as that in use on railways in France, but he doubted its expediency. He had no intention of bringing in any bill to compel railway companies to adopt that or any other plan. The Railway Murder.—Mr. Butler asked whether it was the intention of Government to offer a reward for the apprehension of the murderer or murderers of Mr. Briggs, on the North London Railway on Saturday evening.—Sir G. Grey replied that the Government had offered a reward of 100*l*., and that Messrs. Robarts, Lubbock & Co., the bankers, had offered a similar sum. The report that the suspected murderer had been captured was not true, but he had been informed that the watch chain taken from the person of Mr. Briggs had been disposed of on the previous day to a silversmith, who had given the police an accurate description of the person who had brought it to him.—Mr. D. Griffith was moving "That the practice of appointing a peer and privy councillor exclusively to the Office of Postmaster-General is one which is not directed or required by law, and does not particularly conduce to the convenience of the distribution of Ministerial appointments or to the efficiency of the public service," when the House was counted out.

Wednesday.—The Superior Courts of Common Law (Ireland) Bill, the Court of Queen's Bench (Ireland) Bill, and the Married Women's Acknowledgments Bill, were withdrawn.—Mr. Bouverie moved the second reading of the Uniformity Act Amendment Bill, which proposed to repeal a portion of the Act of Charles II., requiring certain dignitaries of the Church and Fellows of Colleges in the Universities to make a declaration of Conformity to the Liturgy of the Church of England. Assuming that the Universities were lay Corporations, he contended that the exclusion by Act of Parliament of Protestant Nonconformists was unjust, as well as injurious even to the Universities themselves. The test did not exclude the profane, the sceptical, or the indifferent; it shut out only men of conscientious views, and was therefore no real security to the Church.—Mr. Walpole moved as an amendment that the Bill be read a second time that day three months. He said that Mr. Bouverie had withdrawn his Bill last year upon two grounds: first, because it was too late in the session, and it was equally so this year; second, because the objections in the Universities to the Bill were so strong, and there was a disinclination in the House to pass a measure that would end in undermining that foundation of religious instruction upon which secular education ought to stand. The real question was whether there ought to be an Established Church at all. Parliament had no right to dissever the connection between the Universities and the Church of England. The Dissenters had no grievance; the Colleges were open to them for the purposes of education, but the government of the Universities ought to be confined to those who were in connection with the Church.—Sir W. Heathcote seconded the amendment.—Mr. Monsell opposed the Bill, because under professions of liberality it was not liberal to Roman Catholics. It made a fundamental change in the whole system of University education, and would introduce a system which had been tried in other countries, and which, if carried out to its logical conclusion, would subvert the principle that religion should be at the foundation of education.—After some observations by Mr. Whalley in support of the Bill, and by Mr. Neate against it, the amendment was carried, on a division, by 157 to 101, so the Bill was lost.—Sir W. Heathcote moved the second reading of the Scottish Episcopal Clergy Disabilities Removal Bill, which had come down from the House of Lords. He said that these disabilities had been virtually imposed by an unobserved amendment of a clause introduced into the Act of 1792. They had been relaxed in 1840, and the object of this Bill was to repeal them. He hoped that English and Scotch members would combine to remove an oppression imposed by England upon Scotland.—Mr. Kinnaird moved, as an amendment, the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire how far any privileges which may be conferred upon the clergy of the Episcopal Church in Scotland would interfere with the Treaty of Union, and into the expediency of removing at the same time from the ministers of the Established Church of Scotland the disabilities imposed on them by the Act of Charles II.—After some remarks by Mr. Walter, Mr. G. Duff, Mr. Newdegate, Mr. Black, Lord H. Scott, Mr. Stirling, Mr. Hadfield, and Mr. Bouverie, the amendment was withdrawn, and the Bill read a second time. The Poor-law Guardians Election Bill, the Insolvent Debtors Bill, the Petty Offences Law Amendment Bill, the County Voters Registration Bill, the Election Petitions Act (1849) Amendment Bill, and the Jersey Court Bill were withdrawn. The Ecclesiastical Court and Registries (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.—Mr. W. E. Duncombe opposed the recommittal of the Poisoned Grain Prohibition Bill, and moved that the House go into committee on the Bill that day three months. The motion was, on a division, negatived by 60 to 38, and the House went into committee on the Bill and agreed to the clauses. The Report on Supply was brought up. The Expiring Laws Continuance Bill, and the Militia Ballots Suspension Bill passed through committee. The Trespass (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.

Thursday.—Standing Orders.—On the motion of Colonel W. Patten, a Select Committee was appointed to revise the standing orders, with instructions to consider the expediency of constituting a committee of referees (one of them to be an engineer) under the authority of the House, for more speedy and economical decisions of certain questions of fact commonly arising in the proceeding upon private Bills. Railway Travelling.—In reply to Mr. B. Cochrane, Mr. Gibson declined to give a promise that he would bring in any measure next session for making it compulsory on railway companies to introduce some mode of communication between passengers and guards, to prevent the murder and plunder of the former without the knowledge of the latter. The Repulse in New Zealand.—In answer to Sir M. Farquhar, Mr. Cardwell stated that despatches had reached the Colonial Office relative to the late repulse of the British troops at Karangua, on the east coast of New Zealand, which General Cameron attributed to the confusion created by the intricate nature of the interior defences of the pah, and by the sudden fall of so many officers of the attacking column. The despatches which the Government had received on the subject would be laid upon the table as soon as possible. On the order for the second reading of the New Zealand (Guarantee of Loan) Bill, Mr. A. Mills moved as an amendment that the Bill be read a second time that day three months. He said he had good authority for asserting that if the present war lasted until April next it would cost the taxpayers of this country not less than a million and a half sterling in the course of the year. It further appeared that the agent of the colony and the negotiator of the proposed loan, had no power to bind the New Zealand Legislature either in respect of the repayment of the loan or the contribution towards the military expenditure.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer said that the colony was not exclusively responsible for the war: that we were parties to the policy which had caused it. He then showed that the conditions and considerations under which the loan was guaranteed afforded a sufficient security, and were, upon the whole, advantageous to this country.—Mr. Whiteside inquired what was the policy of the Colonial Office with reference to the lands of the insurgent natives.—Mr. Roebuck said it was the inevitable tendency of the civilisation of the age that the brown man should disappear before the white. So long as the mother country proclaimed the policy of extermination, she could not turn round and repudiate the financial obligations which that policy entailed.—Sir H. Willoughby recommended the House not to mix itself up with any financial transactions with the colony.—Mr. Aytoun opposed the Bill.—Sir S. Northcote complained that the Government had not given the House sufficient information with regard to the future policy to be pursued towards New Zealand.—Mr. Cardwell defended the policy of the Bill, which was under all the circumstances a reasonable demand, which the mother country ought not to withhold. The Government had taken ample security for the guarantee, which was for a third only of the sum which the colony was in the first instance indisposed to raise. The present measure was justified by the unparalleled efforts which the colony was making for self-defence, and by the arrangement which it had made for the payment of military assistance for the future.—Mr. Adderley thought that on the whole the proposition was one which the House might fairly sanction.—Sir J. Trelawny, Mr. J. B. Smith, Colonel Sykes, Mr. Monsell, Sir J. D. Hay, Lord Stanley, and Mr. Cobden opposed the Bill, Mr. C. Fortescue supported it.—Mr. Whalley attributed all the disasters which had befallen our arms in New Zealand to the influence of the Roman Catholic clergy.—After some remarks by Sir J. Ferguson, Lord Palmerston said the doctrine of some of the opponents of the Bill would cast the colonies adrift. He was not prepared to agree to that principle. He lamented the war in New Zealand, but it was not owing to any dispute about land; it arose from the murder of some of our officers and men, and was entirely unconnected with land. The real question was whether the war was to continue. As to the security for the loan, the revenue and the waste lands in the colony afforded an ample security. On a division the amendment was negatived by 92 to 55, and the Bill was read a second time. The War in Denmark.—In answer to Mr. Griffith, Lord Palmerston said that the Government had received no information with regard to so monstrous a proposition as that the Prussians had demanded the payment of 11,000,000*l*., and the surrender of the Danish fleet as the conditions of peace. They had, however, reason to believe that negotiations were in progress for an armistice, but they were not aware that it had been concluded.—The House then went into Committee of Supply.—Some discussion ensued on the vote of 8876*l*., to complete the sum necessary for the National Gallery, Mr. Osborne and other members protesting against any attempt on the part of the Government to evade the recent vote of the House against the proposal for surrendering the National Gallery building to the Royal Academy, and removing the national pictures to a gallery to be erected behind Burlington House.—Lord Palmerston assured the Committee that the Government was quite prepared to accept the recent vote of the House as fatal to the Burlington House scheme. It would, however, be necessary to consider what provision should be made to house the Royal Academy.—Mr. Liddell saw no reason why the public should be called upon to provide accommodation for the Royal Academy, which was a wealthy private body, well able to provide for itself.—The vote was agreed to, as also a vote of 9000*l*. for the National Portrait Gallery.—In Committee on Fortifications and Works, the Marquis of Hartington moved resolutions to the effect that, towards providing a further sum for the construction of works for the defence of the Royal dockyards and arsenals, and of the ports of Dover and Portland, and for the creation of a central arsenal, a sum not exceeding 650,000*l*. be charged upon the Consolidated Fund, and that the Treasury be authorised to raise the same by annuities for a term not exceeding 30 years. The works for which the money was required had already been sanctioned by Parliament, and the total sum expended up to March last amounted to 2,854,000*l*. The resolutions were agreed to. The Bleaching and Dyeing Works Act Extension Bill was committed. A number of Bills were forwarded a stage.

Friday.—Diseases of Cattle Prevention Bill.—At the morning sitting, on the motion for going into committee on this Bill, Mr. Bagwell moved that the House should not resolve itself into such committee, but on the assurance of Mr. Baring that certain alterations would be introduced, he withdrew the amendment, and several clauses, with verbal amendments, were agreed to.—The Chairman then reported progress, and the House adjourned. The House resumed at six o'clock.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Prince and Princess of Wales at Cloth-workers' Hall.—On Monday the corporation of Cloth-workers, one of the oldest and wealthiest of the ancient guilds of the city of London, presented the freedom of their Company to the Prince of Wales, and afterwards entertained his Royal Highness with the Princess, and a select company, at luncheon in their hall in Mincing Lane. The freedom was handed to the Prince in a gold box, set in a tablet of chestnut wood, part of a beam of the ancient hall of the company, on the site of which the present building was erected. The Prince, in acknowledging the compliment, assured the Master and Wardens that it was a great source of gratification to him to receive the freedom of their company and to be enrolled among its members. The Clerk then tendered to the Prince the accustomed oath, which he took and subscribed. It pledged his Royal Highness as a freeman to be good and true to our Sovereign Lady Queen Victoria; to observe, maintain, and keep the laws and ordinances for the government of "the fellowship of the art or mystery of Clothworkers," and for its common profit; to be obedient at all times and in all lawful matters to the Master, Wardens, and Assistants, and to attend before them at all times, "upon a lawful summons either of clerk or beadle," having no lawful or reasonable excuse to the contrary. The Prince and Princess were then conducted to the banquetting hall, where their Royal Highnesses took luncheon, which was served with befitting splendour. Their Royal Highnesses were loudly cheered in their passage through the city.

THE RECENT DIVISION.—It appears from an analysis of the division lists on the Vote of Censure in both Houses, that in the House of Lords the Government had a majority of 4 of those present; while the Opposition had a majority of 13 proxies. The Government were very strongly supported by the Episcopal Bench, 10 bishops having voted with them in person and 7 having sent their proxies. The only prelates who voted with the Opposition were the Bishops of Oxford and Bangor, the latter of whom sent a proxy. The Archbishops of York and Armagh voted with the Government. The Archbishop of Canterbury paired in favour of the Government, with the Bishop of Chichester against them. Earl Grey and Lord Denman voted against the Government. In the House of Commons 310 Liberals and 5 Conservatives voted for the Government; 379 Conservatives and 18 Liberals voted against them. The English votes gave them a majority of 41, the Scotch votes gave them a further majority of 23, while the Irish votes showed a majority of 46 against them. The five Conservative members who voted for Government were, Mr. J. Chapman, Hon. R. Dutton, Mr. David Pugh, Major Cornwall Legh, Mr. J. H. Scourfield. The following 18 Liberal Members voted against Government:—Sir J. Acton, Dr. Brady, Mr. Blake, Sir G. Bowyer, Mr. Cogan, Mr. Corbally, Colonel Greville, Mr. Greene, Mr. M'Evoy, Mr. M'Mahon, Mr. M'Cann, Mr. O'Reilly, The O'Donoghue. The O'Conor Don, Mr. O'Ferrall, Mr. Scully, Mr. Sullivan, Mr. L. Waldron. These are all Irish members, and, with the exception of Colonel Greville, Roman Catholics. No English or Scotch Liberal member voted against the Government.

ALLEGED NAVAL BATTLE IN THE CHANNEL. — A report reached Southampton on Thursday by the Wonder steamer, from Jersey, that fighting had taken place off the island between the Federal steamer Kearsarge and the Confederate steamer Florida, in which the Kearsarge was disabled and put into Gorey, while the Florida was brought up off Gorey, waiting to renew the engagement. There is no foundation for this report, so far at least as the Kearsarge is concerned. She has been, and still is, at anchor off Dover. The Sacramento, another Federal vessel, left Cherbourg for Dover on Thursday morning.

THE WIMBLEDON RIFLE MEETING.—On Monday the Wimbledon meeting was inaugurated in the same way as last year. The Prince of Wales rode to Wimbledon in the afternoon, personally to inspect the arrangements. His Royal Highness was received on the north side of the enclosure by several members of the Council, and conducted to the running deer range, where several shots were fired by the Royal party, at first with very bad success, owing to the peculiar glitter of the sun, which rendered it difficult to hit any object, especially one in rapid motion. The Prince, however, made the only bull's-eye that was recorded, fairly beating such accomplished deerstalkers as the Master of Lovat and Lord Elcho. After inspecting the tramways and the new ranges, his Royal Highness returned soon after 6 o'clock to London. On Tuesday several matches were shot off, including that for the Oxford and Cambridge Bronze Medal, which was won by Ensign Thomas, of Cambridge University; and the Middlesex Bronze Medal, won by Lieutenant Hopkins, of the 41st Middlesex. The All Comers' County Match was contested by four counties, and was won by Lancashire, beating Middlesex, Gloucestershire, and Derbyshire. On Wednesday the Prince of Wales's Prize was won by Sergeant Dodd, of the 2d Hereford; and the remainder of the day was devoted to the first stages of the Alexandra or All Comers Prize, for which there were 2000 competitors; the Duke of Cambridge's Prize, and the first series of the Extra Prizes. On Thursday the Duke of Cambridge's Prize was won by Mr. Edward Ross, of Cambridge University. The remaining business of the day included the first stages of the Queen's Prize, for which there were 4000 competitors; Lord Vernon's Prize, the Enfield Association Cup, the Alexandra, and the Extra Prizes.

THE GREAT EASTERN AT SHEERNESS.—The Great Eastern reached the Great Nore about 6 P.M. on Wednesday evening, where she was met by three powerful steam-tugs. She was able, however, to dispense with their assistance, and slowly steaming she rounded the point, and made for her moorings at Black Stakes, off Standgate Creek. There she safely cast anchor about 7 P.M. She was watched by a large crowd of spectators assembled along the beach and on the pier. She will now ship the Atlantic Telegraph Cable as soon as it is received from the manufacturers at East Greenwich. It will be sent in sections, and from the calculations made it appears that the work of shipping the whole cable will occupy nine months.

AFRICAN EXPLORATION.—News has at length been received from Khartûm of Mr. Samuel Baker, who after the departure of Captains Speke and Grant, started for the South in search of the reported lake, Luta Nzige. His party has now been met with returning to Gondokoro, a few hours' march from that place, and as one of the swiftest vessels on the river, placed at his disposal by the generosity of Mr. Petherick, was waiting his arrival at Gondokoro, it is expected that he will soon descend the Nile and communicate the results of his journey.

THE THAMES EMBANKMENT.—At the Sheriffs' Court on Monday, the case "Gwynne [v. the Metropolitan Board of Works" occupied the Court for the fifth day, and was brought to a conclusion. The plaintiff, Mr. Gwynne, who is an hydraulic and mechanical engineer at the bottom of Essex Street, by the Temple Pier, claimed upwards of 30,000*l.* compensation for being deprived of the water of the Thames, which was necessary to carry on his works. Last year his net profits exceeded 10,000*l.*, and he had taken new premises at Battersea, for which he paid 700*l.* The Board of Works did not require his premises for the embankment, but had made a roadway which deprived him of access to the river. On both sides numerous witnesses were called, some of whom stated their opinion that property in the neighbourhood would be increased in value by the improvements in progress. On the part of Mr. Gwynne a substantial compensation was claimed, and the several items were placed before the jury. Mr. Lush, Q.C., for the Board of Works, complained of the monstrous claim which had been made, and said it was impossible to exaggerate the importance of the case, for the compensation would come out of the public money in the shape of rates. Mr. C. Pollock, the assessor, in summing up the evidence, laid down the law on the subject, and said that the claimant was entitled to full and fair compensation. The jury, after a consultation of an hour and a half, gave a verdict for 14,000*l.*

THE MAIN DRAINAGE.—At a meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works on Friday, Mr. Bazalgette, the engineer, reported that on the north side of the river 14,000,000 gallons of sewage were now discharged at Barking, and on the south side 12,000,000 gallons were discharged at Crossness, making together 26,000,000 gallons of sewage now discharged into the river far out of the metropolitan limits, at such a turn of the tide as to carry the obnoxious fluid seawards. This quantity is one-third of the whole metropolitan sewage.

THE SAVOY CHAPEL.—The Earl of Clarendon, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, has informed the authorities of the Duchy that her Majesty will graciously take upon herself the cost of restoring this ancient fabric, which was reduced to ruins by the fire of Thursday week. On Friday Mr. Sidney Smirke, the architect, made a careful inspection of the ruins, with a view to estimate the cost of rebuilding the chapel. He is understood to have expressed an opinion that the four walls which remain are not seriously injured, and may therefore be made available in the work of restoration. These walls, which are built of squared stone and boulder, are upon an average 4 feet thick, and must be at least 350 years old. The fabric was insured to the amount of 4000*l.*, a sum which will go far towards its restoration.

THE NEW ROOF OF GUILDHALL.—The new roof of this ancient edifice, which dates back upwards of four centuries and a half, is rapidly advancing towards completion. The old roof, which was nearly 200 years old, having been erected shortly after the fire of London in the place of the original one that was destroyed in the conflagration, had become very dilapidated and unsightly, and its removal had been long pressed on the Common Council, not only as a work of necessity, but as being unsuited to the structure itself, and offensive to architectural taste. For some time past the subject has been under the consideration of a committee, and on their report the Common Council resolved recently to expend about 24,000*l.* in the entire reconstruction of the roof, in denuding the building itself of a thick coating of cement which conceals much of its original ornamentation, and in restoring some of the foundations. The removal of the old roof has been for some time in progress, and it is said the new one will be so far completed by the 9th of November next as to admit of the Lord Mayor's feast being held in the hall on that day. It will be an open oak roof, somewhat resembling that of Westminster Hall in the interior, and will exactly correspond with the period in which the hall itself was built, and, indeed, with the original roof itself, as far as the style and character of that can now be ascertained after the lapse of more than 450 years. Externally it will have a very high pitch, with a louvre in the centre, the lower part of which will be a lantern of the size of an ordinary sitting-room for purposes of light and ventilation, and the upper portion a tapering metal spire about 150 feet from the ground, and which will be seen all over London. There will also be eight dormers or skylights on each side of the roof to give light to its interior. The design is a joint production by Mr. Horace Jones, the city architect, Mr. Digby Wyatt, and Mr. Edward Roberts, and the work is to be executed by Messrs. Myers under a contract with the Corporation.

PATRIOTIC FUND.—A report has been presented to Parliament showing that the Patriotic Fund, collected for the benefit of the widows and orphans of our men who lost their lives in the Crimean war, has reached 1,459,697*l.*, and that up to the end of 1862 551,05[illegible] has been expended in relief. The number of widows of non-commissioned officers and men placed on the list is 3508, and of children 4581; and 135 officers' widows and 230 officers' children are also put in receipt of allowances. Mr. Finlaison has estimated that the assets exceed the liabilities for the continuance of relief by 190,743*l.*, of which surplus he considers all [illegible] 90,000*l.* to be safely disposable. The commissioners have authorised an addition to the allowances to widows with children, the erection of a chapel for the Royal Victoria Patriotic Asylum, and the appointment of a clerical inspector to examine periodically the children in that asylum, and in the various institutions and temporary homes throughout the country in which children have been placed.

MURDER IN A RAILWAY CARRIAGE.—A frightful tragedy took place on Saturday evening in a first-class carriage of the North London line. Mr. Thomas Briggs, chief clerk in the bank of Messrs. Roberts & Co., while travelling the short distance from Fenchurch Street to Hackney, was robbed, brutally ill-used, and thrown out of the carriage, receiving such injuries that he died on Sunday night. The outrage was not discovered until the train arrived at Hackney, when the interior of the carriage was found covered with blood. Inquiries were made, without any immediate result, but meanwhile the body of Mr. Briggs was found lying insensible on the line by the driver and stoker of another train. On a surgical examination it was found that the unfortunate gentleman, who though nearly 70 years of age, was a fine tall hale man, had been frightfully wounded in the head, the skull in one place having been beaten in, and the ear nearly cut off. The money which he had in his pocket had not been taken, but his watch chain had been broken off and the watch was missing. The crime was committed between Bow and Hackney Wick. The train was due at the latter place within five minutes after leaving Bow, so that the attack must have been made almost as soon as the train was in motion. The carriage was covered with blood and bore other signs of a desperate struggle having taken place, but no noise was heard by the other passengers; although, when the body was thrown out at the door, one of the arteries in the wound appears to have burst, and to have sent a jet of blood through the open window of the next compartment upon the dresses of two ladies, who were unconscious of the frightful tragedy which was going on almost in their very presence. A hat found in the carriage turned out to be that worn by the murderer, who must have taken Mr. Briggs's in mistake; but the hope that this error would give the police a clue which might lead to his apprehension has proved fallacious, the hatter being unable to state the name of the purchaser. It has since been ascertained that the gold chain had been exchanged for another of a different pattern at a jeweller's in the city, by a man who appeared to be a German, and it is now hoped that the person who exchanged it will be found. The Government on Monday offered a reward of 100*l.* for his detection, and Messrs. Roberts & Co. and the railway company have each offered a similar sum. It is stated that the police have obtained another clue, which they are actively working out.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH. — The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths in London in the week that ended Saturday, July 9, were 1268. The average number for the corresponding week of 10 years 1854-63, corrected for increase of population, was 1172. The present return is therefore 98 above the average. During the week the births of 967 boys and 909 girls, in all 1876 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1782.

Provincial.

ALDERSHOT.—At the Petty Sessions on Monday a case came before the magistrates which has excited a good deal of interest in connection with the prevailing feeling as to the insecurity of railway travelling, so long as passengers have no means of communication with the guards. A person called Henry Nash, a middle-aged man of respectable appearance, described as a yeoman, residing at Hawley, near Farnborough, surrendered to his bail on a charge of having indecently assaulted a young woman, named Moody, in a railway carriage, whilst travelling between Surbiton and Woking, on Wednesday, the 6th inst. The complainant, who is 20 years of age, was in attendance with her father, who is curator of the Winchester Museum, and with whom she resides. It appeared from the statement of Mr. Bent, who prosecuted on behalf of the Railway Company, that the complainant took her seat in a second-class carriage at Waterloo Station, and shortly afterwards the prisoner entered the same compartment. He attempted to force a conversation with her, asking several questions, which she declined to answer. Another female then entered the railway carriage, and her presence caused the prisoner to desist for a time from putting any further questions. The complainant then felt safe, and the three rode down to Surbiton, where the female alluded to alighted, leaving Miss Moody alone with the prisoner. Almost immediately on the train leaving Surbiton, and before it had got fairly in motion, the prisoner laid himself on the seat opposite to complainant, and in a very insulting manner, repeated the questions he had previously put to her, which she again declined to answer. In order to avoid the annoyance, she got up and looked out of the window, but had scarcely done so when she felt a hand under her clothes. She immediately opened the door of the compartment and got outside, standing on the step of the carriage, the train at the time going at a rapid pace. She had no further recollection of anything that occurred until she found herself in the hands of the guard, and of Mr. Stokes, another passenger, the train being then at a standstill between Esher and Woking. It was then discovered that complainant had for some time been in a state of unconsciousness, and that she had been held in a most perilous position during the time by Mr. Stokes, a military bootmaker, of London and Aldershot, who was riding in the adjoining compartment, and whose notice was directed to the complainant by a boy who had observed her hanging by the handle of the door. Mr. Stokes bravely exerted himself to rescue her from this dangerous position, and had no sooner succeeded in drawing her to the door of his own compartment than she swooned on his arm, which was fortunately at that time round her waist. In this situation he held her for a distance of about five miles, when the attention of the guard having been attracted to the circumstance by a number of labourers at work in the adjacent fields, the train was stopped, and complainant safely placed in a carriage. On arriving at Woking station, Mr. Stokes insisted on the prisoner being taken into custody. This was accordingly done, but he was subsequently liberated on bail. After some discussion the magistrates decided that the case could not be dealt with by Hampshire magistrates, as the offence was committed in Surrey, before the arrival of the train at Woking. The case was therefore dismissed, and the prisoner, who was apparently unconcerned during the proceedings, left the court with his friends. Mr. Bent intimated his intention to take further proceedings, in order to resume the case in a Surrey court.

LEEDS.—On Tuesday the 8th inst. the West Riding bench of magistrates heard a complaint by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals against two persons in this town, who are the owners of two horses which on the 27th ult. trotted against each other in a 50-miles race for 50*l.* a side. One horse accomplished the journey in three hours and fifty minutes, but the other died after going more than 40 miles. Mr. Green, the owner of the winner, was fined 5*l.* and costs, which was immediately paid; but Mr. John Robson, the owner of the animal which died, was committed to prison for a month, the magistrate being of opinion that his was an aggravated case, inasmuch as after his horse fell once he attempted to prosecute the journey, and only gave it up on a second break-down quickly occurring.

NORWICH.—The Poor-law Board has declined to interfere for the present with reference to the Rev. E. A. Hillyard, chaplain of the Norwich Workhouse, who is accused by the local guardians of unduly identifying himself with the brethren of the English Order of St. Benedict. The guardians have resolved to have an interview with the Poor-law Board on the subject.

YORK.—The National Association for the Promotion of Social Science will hold its eighth annual meeting in this city on the 22d September and seven following days. Lord Brougham will be President; the Archbishop of York will preside in the department of Education; the Right Hon. James P. Wilde, judge of the Probate Court, will occupy the chair in the section for Jurisprudence. The other two chairs are not yet filled.

ACCIDENT ON THE GREAT EASTERN.—A fatal accident occurred on Wednesday afternoon to an up train from Harwich, near the Bradfield station. The engine left the rails and ran down an embankment, dragging the whole train of four carriages and two trucks after it. The passengers escaped with life, but six or seven of them were slightly injured. The fireman, however, was killed, his body having been crushed beneath the engine, while his hand still grasped the break.

THE ASSIZES: WESTERN CIRCUIT, WINCHESTER.—The Attempted Murder at Bishopstoke.—Charles Gay, a young man of 21, described as a common carrier, was indicted for feloniously attempting to shoot Kate Boyes, his wife's sister, with intent to kill and murder, at Bishopstoke, on the 20th May. It appeared that the prisoner had married one of the daughters of James Boyes, of Crowd Hill, and had been living so unhappily with her that she left him. He went to her father's house in the belief that she was there, and having hovered about the place for a couple of days, presented a pistol at the sister and pulled the trigger. The cap, however, only exploded, and it was a question for the jury whether the pistol was or was not loaded with a bullet. The foreman of the jury was a gunsmith, and after some time a bullet was extracted from the barrel, upon which the jury returned a verdict of Guilty of an attempt to do grievous bodily harm. The prisoner was sentenced to be kept in penal servitude for six years.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—The Islington Murder.—Frederick Charles Bricknell, 23, waiter, was indicted for the wilful murder of Jane Jeary. The facts of this case were noticed at the time in our Metropolitan News. The prisoner was employed as under-waiter at the Lion Tavern, at Islington, and deceased was also a servant in the same house. On the night of the 8th June she had gone up to bed with her fellow-servant, and the latter having occasion to go downstairs, left her, and almost immediately heard a loud scream. She went up again, and met the prisoner on the stairs with a knife in his hand, when he said at once that he had done it. It appeared that for some time the prisoner had been paying his addresses to deceased, but latterly she had rejected them, and when he was taken into custody he made use of the expression that he was glad she was dead, as he would rather see her dead than see her married to anyone else. The medical evidence proved that the knife had penetrated the heart, dividing the principal artery, and that death must have been instantaneous. In the defence an attempt was made to reduce the crime to manslaughter. The jury, however, after a very short deliberation returned a verdict of Guilty, and Chief Justice Erle, having put on the black cap, passed sentence of death in the usual form. The prisoner, who, during the whole of the proceedings, appeared to be perfectly indifferent to what was going on, was then removed from the bar. The trial lasted very little more than an hour. Sale of Diseased Meat.—John Millar, 36, cattle dealer, pleaded Guilty to an indictment charging him with having sent to Newgate Market 300 lb. weight of beef for sale, well knowing the same to be diseased and unfit for human food. The Commissioner, in passing sentence, said the prisoner had admitted the offence of having killed a diseased cow and sent it up to London from Forfarshire. There was no doubt that very large quantities of beasts in a most unwholesome condition had been forwarded from various parts of the country to the metropolis. In fact, one butcher had candidly admitted in this court that he had sent up hundreds of pounds weight of diseased carcases. Now, it was most important that the farmers and butchers living in the country should be taught, in a manner which they could not misunderstand, that they could not with impunity impose upon the people of London in this sort of manner. The most effectual way of making this lesson felt and experienced was by imposing a punishment, and that not a light one, but one which should be fully understood for some time to come because of its heaviness. There was nothing in the present case which in the slightest degree diminished the amount of the crime. It was as bad as it could be. It was not like that of an ignorant man who did not know the law. Whether he had not sold more bad meat in Scotland was not exactly shown, although there was some evidence on the face of the depositions that he had; but, at all events, for some time to come he would be restrained from carrying on his nefarious attempts in London in injuring, or attempting to injure, the lives of the Queen's subjects, for the sentence upon him now was that he be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for 12 calendar months, that he pay a fine to Her Majesty of 50*l.*, and that he be further imprisoned until such fine be paid.

Obituary.

LADY CATHERINE MAUNSELL died suddenly on the 7th inst. at her residence at Malvern, at an advanced age. She was the youngest of the four daughters of the first Earl of Listowel, and great aunt of the present Earl. She married, in 1808, Mr. Richard Maunsell, who died in 1819.

ADMIRAL HAYES O'GRADY died at Erinagh House, county Clare, on the 8th inst., in his 77th year. He was educated at the Royal Naval College, and entered the Navy in 1802. After serving against the French off Boulogne, he was present at the reduction of the Cape of Good Hope, and then accompanied the expedition to the Rio de la Plata, and served at the destruction of an armed brigantine, off Monte Video, in 1806. After obtaining the rank of Lieutenant in 1807, he served successively on the St. Helena, Channel, Leeward Islands, Halifax, and North America stations, and was advanced to the rank of Commander in 1810. From that period until he attained Post rank in 1814 he was employed in the West Indies. He became Rear Admiral on reserved half pay in 1849, Vice Admiral in 1856, and Admiral in 1862.

COLONEL BREWSTER, the Commanding officer of the Inns of Court Rifle Volunteers, died on the 7th inst. at his residence in Warwick Square, Pimlico. He was well known as a most distinguished Volunteer officer. He had been suffering for a considerable time from an affection of the lungs, which terminated in pleurisy.

THE REV. JOHN BRANTHWAITE, Principal of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, was accidentally drowned on the 5th inst. while bathing at Morecombe. It appears that he hired a machine for the purpose of bathing, and was drawn out only a short distance from the shore, as it was nearly high water. A few minutes afterwards he appeared to be floating on his back, but as he remained in that position for some time, persons on shore suggested that he was drowning. Two men belonging to the bathing machine endeavoured to reach him, but were unable to do so. A boat was then procured, after a delay of about half an hour, when the body was found in precisely the same position as it had been seen at first, the shoulders being a little out of the water, but the head completely immersed, and life quite extinct. When the body was taken on shore, means were adopted to restore animation, but to no purpose. It is a singular circumstance that three or four persons were bathing near Mr. Branthwaite whilst he was in the water, but none, until it was too late, had any idea that he was drowning. A verdict of accidentally drowned was returned. The deceased was 41 years of age and unmarried.

MR. THOMAS COLLEY GRATTAN, the well-known novelist, died at his lodgings in Jermyn Street on the 4th inst., at the age of 68. He was born in Dublin in 1796, and was the son of Mr. Colley Grattan, of Edenderry, King's County. He was intended for the profession of the law, but having an uncle and two cousins in the army, he entered the Militia in the hope of getting a commission. He served as a volunteer in the South American army in the war of independence against Spain, but marrying a Miss O Donnell, he left the service and settled in the south of France. In 1819 he produced "Philibert," a poetical romance, which was not successful. He then removed to Paris, and became a regular contributor to the "Edinburgh Review" and to the "New Monthly Magazine," then under the editorship of Thomas Campbell. In 1823 he published "Highways and Byeways, by a Walking Gentleman," the work by which he will be best remembered. This book had a great sale, and brought the author many offers from the booksellers which induced him to bring out a second and third series. He then produced in succession "Ben Nazir the Saracen," a play written for Kean, after which he removed to Brussels. While residing in that city he produced "Tales of Men and Cities," "Traits of Travel," "The Heiress of Bruges," "The History of the Netherlands," and "Jacqueline of Holland." The latter caused his expulsion from Brussels during the revolution, and his residence in Holland and Heidelberg, where he wrote his "Legends of the Rhine" and "Agnes de Mansfeldt." On the accession of Prince Leopold to the newly created throne of Belgium Mr. Grattan returned to Brussels, and in 1839 was appointed, at the special request of his Majesty, British Consul at Boston, where he published a pamphlet on the boundary question in America. In 1848 he was permitted to resign this office to his son, who had been acting as his deputy, and he was appointed a gentleman of the Privy Chamber in the royal household. He was also the author of "Civilised America," "Women of Colour," "The Cagot's Port and the Conscript's Bride," "England and the Disrupted States of America," "Beaten Paths, and Those who Trod Them."

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, July 11.

We have a larger number of Beasts on offer, but a considersble proportion of middling quality. The choicest kinds are disposed of readily at fully late rates. The supply of Sheep is about the same as on Monday last; trade is still dull, and prices are not better. Trade is very heavy for Lambs at lower rates. Calves are selling as on Thursday. From Germany and Holland there are 1790 Beasts, 5230 Sheep, and 321 Calves; from Spain, 70 Beasts; from France, 15 Calves; from Scotland, 210 Beasts; from Ireland, 20; from Norfolk and Suffolk, 650; and 1800 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

They cannot all be disposed of, even at our lower quotations. Trade is slow for Lambs, at about Monday's prices. There is not much alteration in the trade for calves. Our foreign supply consists of 870 Beasts, 2190 Sheep, and 760 Calves. Milch Cows 90.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, July 11.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was small, and disposed of at the extreme rates of this day sen'night. Foreign was neglected, but on the business done, which was chiefly confined to necessitous buyers, last week's prices were insisted upon, excepting for Russian qualities, which were about 1s. per qr. lower. Barley supports our quotations. Beans and Peas are each 1s. per qr. dearer. Oats are the turn cheaper, and Russian must be written fully 6d. per qr. lower. The value of Flour is unaltered, and the demand limited.

FRIDAY, July 15.

The 9th was a dull cold day, but the weather has since been warmer with sun. As the Wheat car becomes developed, the effects of the ungenial weather is apparent, and there is no longer a doubt that the yield will be much less than would have been the case under more favourable circumstances. Beans in some districts appear to have suffered. The Wheat trade during the past week has been extremely firm, and purchasers of English have generally had to pay rather more money; foreign has been in less demand; on particular qualities, say Russian here, and American in Liverpool, somewhat lower rates have been accepted. Spring Corn of all kinds has been very firm in price with rather an improving tendency, excepting for Russian Oats on the spot, the large arrivals having caused a reduction of fully 6d. per qr. Flour is in moderate request at previous rates. Since Friday last 2 cargoes of Barley and 1 of Maize have arrived off the coast, and only one cargo of Wheat is now left on sale. Wheat has remained in moderate demand, but the increased pretensions of holders checked business. Maize advanced 6d. to 1s., and Barley 6d. to 9d. per qr. Paris, July 14.—The Flour trade is extremely quiet, but no lower prices have been accepted The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 34s. 9d. per 280 lbs. The present stock of Flour is estimated at about 24,750 cwts. Wheat is held for late rates, but there are no buyers unless at a reduction of 9d. to 1s. per 480 lbs. The arrivals of English Wheat are small, of foreign moderate, of Barley there are none, of Oats, both English and foreign, large. This morning's market was very thinly attended. English Wheat being scarce commanded the extreme prices of Monday, and holders of foreign firmly insisted upon the rates of that day. The value of Spring Corn of all descriptions tends upwards.

News of the Week.

IN the House of Lords on Friday Lord HOUGHTON asked whether the Government had taken or intended to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown as to the powers of Convocation to pass synodical judgment on books written either by clergymen or laymen, and as to the immunity of the members of that body from proceedings at common law consequent on such judgment. The LORD CHANCELLOR censured the course taken by Convocation, and expressed his hope that the Bishops would pause for their own sakes, and not carry Convocation beyond its proper limits. It was not however the intention of the Government to take any steps in the matter. The Archbishop of CANTERBURY explained that the object of Convocation had been solely to vindicate the Church of England from complicity with opinions which the clergy considered mistaken and dangerous. The Bishop of OXFORD defended the judgment from the attack of the LORD CHANCELLOR, and after some further discussion the subject dropped. On Monday Lord BROUGHAM called attention to the subject of the Cuban slave trade, and said that while Spain had evaded or violated her treaty engagements, there was not the slightest symptom of the revival of the slave trade in Brazil. He again urged upon the Government the propriety of repealing the Aberdeen Act. Earl RUSSELL said that every English Government had been anxious to put down the slave trade, but when they had to rely on the aid of foreign Powers the question always presented difficulties, and the traffic had never been wholly suppressed. The Earl of MALMESBURY believed that the Government of Brazil had done all that it could to put down the slave trade, and concurred with Lord BROUGHAM in advising the repeal of the Aberdeen Act. Several Bills were read a third time. On Tuesday the Earl of CARNARVON gave notice that on Tuesday next Lord ELLENBOROUGH will call attention to the changes which have taken place in foreign affairs since the meeting of Parliament. In reply to Lord REDESDALE, Earl GRANVILLE said that the Government hoped to be able to prorogue Parliament at the end of next week, but owing to the state of private business in that House they were not in a position to name the precise day. On Thursday Earl FORTESCUE moved the second reading of the Weights and Measures Bill, which permits the use of the metric system of calculation by those who prefer it to the Imperial or local standards. The Marquis of SALISBURY moved as an amendment that the Bill be read a second time that day three months. On a division the motion for the second reading was carried by a majority of 11, the numbers being 34 to 23. On the motion for the second reading of the Poisoned Flesh Prohibition Bill, Lord WODEHOUSE moved as an amendment that the Bill be read a second time that day three months. On a division the motion for the second reading was carried by a majority of 13, the numbers being 31 to 18.

In the Commons on Friday the House went into Committee on the Cattle Diseases Prevention Bill and the Improvement of Land Act (1864) Bill; but neither Bill passed the Committee, and in both the CHAIRMAN was reported to report progress. After a desultory discussion on a variety of subjects, the House went into Committee of Supply on the remaining Civil Service and other Estimates, when certain votes were agreed to, after much discussion. On Monday Mr. OSBORNE called attention to the state of our political relations with Brazil. He contended that if the Aberdeen Act were repealed, Brazil would be happy to enter into a commercial treaty and a postal convention with us; but so long as it remained in force it would be a source of annoyance to Brazil and injurious to the trade of England. Lord PALMERSTON deprecated discussion at that moment, seeing that Ministers were negotiating through the Portuguese Government for the re-establishment of diplomatic relations with Brazil. After a short discussion the subject dropped. The House then went into Committee of Supply, and agreed to the votes for the Packet Service and for the Establishments on the Western Coast of Africa. On the order for going into committee on the New Zealand (Guarantee of Loan) Bill, Sir J. TRELAWNY moved an amendment for the appointment of a Select Committee. After a long discussion the amendment was negatived by 79 to 32. The House then went into Committee, and agreed to the clauses, with amendments. Several Bills were read a third time and passed. On Tuesday the Appropriation Bill was brought in and read a first time. Mr. MAGUIRE moved for a Select Committee to inquire into the present position of the paper manufacture of the United Kingdom with respect to foreign taxation. The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said that if the motion were deferred to next Session the Government would offer no opposition to it. On this understanding the motion was withdrawn. Sir F. SMITH moved an Address to the Crown praying for a Royal Commission to consider the various systems of constructing and armour-plating ships of war for the British Navy, as well as for the navies of other maritime Powers, and to report what, in the opinion of such Commission, should be the system to be now adopted for the British Navy Lord C. PAGET opposed the motion, and after a short discussion it was withdrawn. On Wednesday Mr. COLLINS moved the second reading of the Facilities for Divine service in Collegiate Schools Bill, sent down from the Lords. Mr. HARDCASTLE moved as an amendment that the Bill be read a second time that day three months. Sir G. GREY recommended that the Bill should be referred to select committee, and reintroduced next session. Mr. COLLINS acceded to this suggestion, and withdrew the Bill. Several Bills were forwarded a stage, and others were withdrawn. On Thursday Sir C. WOOD made his annual statement of the revenue and expenditure of India. He showed that, after an equilibrium of revenue and expenditure, there had been a considerable surplus in three successive years, 8,313,000*l.* of debt had been paid off, and there was a balance in the Treasury of upwards of 19,000,000*l.* He concluded by moving a series of resolutions on the subject. After a long discussion, in which general satisfaction was expressed at the improved prospects of Indian finance, the resolutions were agreed to. The Consolidated Fund (Appropriation) Bill passed through committee. On the motion for the third reading of the New Zealand (Guarantee of Loan) Bill, Mr. HENNESSY moved, as an amendment, that the Bill be read a third time that day month. On a division, the amendment was negatived by 75 to 32. The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

A suspension of hostilities has been agreed upon between Austria, Prussia, and Denmark, commencing from noon of the 20th, and lasting until midnight of the 31st inst. The negotiations for peace will take place at Vienna.

By the Cape mail we learn that the colonists have been alarmed by the prospect of another Kaffir war. It was reported that the Kaffir chief KRELI had passed the Bashee with a large force and had a collision with the mounted police. The report turned out to be exaggerated, but the proceedings of the Kaffirs were so threatening that the Government had sent reinforcements to the frontier and were making every preparation for war.

From the United States we learn that General GRANT has so completely failed in the objects of his campaign, that General LEE has detached a large Confederate force for an offensive movement into Maryland and Pennsylvania. So much alarm is entertained in the North for the safety of Baltimore and Washington, that President LINCOLN, after proclaiming martial law in Kentucky, has called out 27,000 militia to repel the invasion, and has appointed the 8th of August as a day of humiliation and prayer.

In the evening the Prince and Princess dined with the Duke and Duchess d'Aumale, at Orleans House, Twickenham. On Thursday morning the Prince and Princess came to Marlborough House from Richmond Park. The Prince presided at a meeting of the Council of the Duchy of Cornwall.

PRINCESS HELENA has been confined to the house at Osborne for some days by an attack of scarlatina. The disease is of a mild form, and all the symptoms are very satisfactory. Her Royal Highness is now making favourable progress, and the rash has entirely disappeared.

ARRIVAL OF GRAND DUCHESS MARIE.—Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie, sister of the Emperor of Russia, attended by a large retinue, landed at Dover on Thursday from Belgium, and was received by Baron Brunnow, the Russian Ambassador, the resident consul, and other personages connected with the Russian Government. Her Imperial Highness immediately left by the South-Eastern railway for Claridge's Hotel, whence she will go to Torquay for a few weeks. Prince Gortschakoff met the duchess on her arrival at the Charing Cross terminus.

THE CABINET.—A Cabinet Council was held on Saturday at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury in Downing Street. Another Council was held on Wednesday.

THE ARMY.—The colonelcy of the 91st Regiment, vacant by the death of General Hay, has been conferred on Lieut.-General Arbuthnot. The colonelcy of the 89th Regiment, vacated by this appointment, has been conferred on Major-General Gascoyne. Major-General Chesney has been appointed Colonel-Commandant of the Royal Artillery, in the room of the late General Sir R. W. Gardiner.

BARONETCY.—The Queen has directed letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Baronet of the United Kingdom to Sir Charles Lyell, of Kinnordy, Forfarshire, and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—Sir Hugh Arbuthnott will retire from Kincardineshire, and Mr. James Dyce Nicol, of Ballogie, is the Ministerial candidate for the vacant seat. Lord Edward Cavendish, third son of the Duke of Devonshire, and the Hon. Reginald C. Abbot, son of Lord Colchester, will be candidates for East Sussex at the next election, the former in the Liberal, the latter in the Conservative interest. Mr. F. Calvert, Q. C., a brother of Sir Harry Verney, M.P., and Mr. N. M. Rothschild, eldest son of Baron Lionel de Rothschild, will be candidates for Aylesbury at the next election. The Hon. William George Eden, of Cantley Hall, will be the Liberal candidate for Great Grimsby, in the room of Mr. Chapman, who will retire. Mr. Scully has contradicted the report that he intends to retire from Cork.

CASE OF BISHOP COLENSO.—The council of the Colonial Bishoprics Fund, out of which part of the salary of the Bishop of Natal was paid, have transferred the amount hitherto granted to him to a reserved fund, pending the final decision of the question as to the legality of the Bishop of Cape Town's judgment suspending him from his see. The amount hitherto paid annually to the Bishop from the fund has been 682*l.* 10*s.*

THE CHANNEL FLEET, comprising the Edgar, Warrior, Black Prince, Defence, and Trinculo, under the command of Admiral Dacres, C.B., sailed from Spithead on Monday on a cruise westward. They will probably call at Torbay, and afterwards at Bristol, and other ports not visited during last summer's cruise. From the western ports the fleet is expected to proceed to the north coast of Ireland.

THE NEW CANON OF WESTMINSTER.—The Rev. William Conway, M.A., has been nominated to the canonry in Westminster Abbey, with the Rectory of St. Margaret, vacant by the death of the Rev. Dr. Cureton.

A NEW DECLARATION.—Dr. Daubeny, Professor of Botany in the University of Oxford, has called attention to a new declaration of religious opinion which has been issued by Mr. M'Leod, from the Royal College of Chemistry, with a view to obtain the signatures of scientific laymen. It appears that Sir David Brewster, Sir Henry Rawlinson, and about 150 others have already affixed their names to it. The gist of the declaration is contained in the following sentence:—"We conceive that it is impossible for the Word of God—as written in the book of nature—and God's Word written in Holy Scripture, to contradict one another, however much they may appear to differ." Dr. Daubeny has published the letter which he sent in reply, stating his reasons for withholding his sanction from such a creed. While generally admitting the justice of the declaration in principle, he fears its tendency is to "countenance that view of Scripture inspiration which, of the many entertained by divines of different schools, is the one which I regard as the narrowest and the most beset with difficulties."

COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL AND THE INSPECTORS OF SCHOOLS.—The report of the select committee appointed to inquire into the practice of the Committee of Council on Education with respect to the reports of her Majesty's inspectors of schools has been published. The committee find that no instance of marking the reports has occurred since Feb. 14, 1862, when a report by Mr. Longueville Jones was specially submitted to the president, with passages marked, written with a feeling of hostility to the department, and that report was sent back to him with remarks by the president. The committee however could not proceed with the investigation, owing to the illness of Mr. Jones. They say:—

"The principle involved in the subject of this inquiry and in the resolution is important. Your committee have carefully considered the action of the department, and have come to the conclusion that the supervision exercised in objecting to the insertion of irrelevant matter, of mere dissertation, and of controversial argument, is consistent with the powers of the Committee of Council, and has, on the whole, been exercised fairly and without excessive strictness. If passages occur in the reports, as printed, consisting of inference or arguments which may tend to support the educational views of the department, other passages may be found which have a contrary tendency. No objection is made to statements of facts observed by the inspectors within the circle of their official experience, whatever may be their bearing on the policy of the Committee of Council. The knowledge, or even a reasonable suspicion, that the inspectors' reports are subject to alteration, either directly or indirectly, at the instance of the department, has, without doubt, a tendency to lower their value, if they are to be regarded as independent sources of testimony in matters of opinion or controversy touching the educational views or policy of the Committee of Council. It appears however to your committee that whatever may have been the understanding under which the appointment of inspectors was originally sanctioned, Parliament cannot be presumed to be ignorant (since the year 1858 at latest), that the heads of the office have exercised a censorship over the inspectors' reports as to the insertion of argumentative or irrelevant matter; and your committee are of opinion that some such power is essential to the effectual working of the department so long as it retains its present constitution and functions. It has occurred to your committee that it might be possible to obtain all the information which the inspectors can be desired to give to the department or to Parliament, by requiring them to furnish answers to specific questions, instead of making general reports, and thus to avoid risk of misunderstanding, either between the department and the inspectors or between the department and Parliament as to the kind of information which the inspectors are required to give. It appears however that none of the reports for the last year have been objected to on the ground of nonconformity with the minute of 1861, as explained by the paragraph of August, 1863. For the information of Parliament your committee recommend that all instructions which may hereafter from time to time be issued to the inspectors, either as to their general or tabulated reports, should be laid before Parliament with the annual report of the Committee of Council."

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Princess Clotilde, wife of Prince Napoleon, gave birth to a son on Saturday night. Prince Napoleon, who embarked on the previous evening at Havre for a cruise at sea, was not acquainted with the birth of the Prince till some time after the event. The Princess and the infant are doing well. The latter was privately baptised after the accouchement, and received the names of Napoleon Louis Joseph Jerome. The Empress paid a visit to the Princess on Sunday morning and remained half-an-hour. The King of the Belgians arrived in Paris on Tuesday evening on his way to Vichy on a visit to the Emperor of the French. His Majesty paid a visit to the Empress at St. Cloud on Wednesday, and left on Thursday morning for Vichy. It is rumoured in Paris that this visit is not connected with politics, but is for the purpose of arranging a marriage between his Majesty's second son, the Count of Flanders, and Princess Anna Murat. M. Drouyn de Lhuys, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, has been summoned for a few days to Vichy to confer with the Emperor. His Majesty is in perfect health. The French Government has addressed a circular to the various Powers, inviting them to take part in an international Congress, to be held in the autumn, for the purpose of regulating telegraphic communications in Europe. The Constitutionnel of Sunday publishes an article demonstrating that the project for the admission of Denmark into the German Confederation would disturb the balance of power in Europe, and says:—

"It would give rise to threatening contingencies, and would produce such complications and such opposition that it is impossible to consider the scheme as having been seriously entertained."

The Pays of Thursday evening publishes an article signed by its editorial secretary, opposing the pretensions of the German Powers to incorporate that portion of Schleswig inhabited by Danes. It says:—

"Before violating equity the German Powers, who are about to abandon the old right without adopting the new, should think twice. They should not forget that the law of retaliation exists. If the German Confederation be unjustly aggrandised it exposes itself to reprisals; if it now sets the example of a spirit of conquest, why should not others follow it to its detriment?"

The Court of Appeal on Saturday gave judgment on the appeal of M. Levy the publisher, against the sentence of the Civil Tribunal of the Seine, justifying the Prefect of Police for seizing all the copies of the Duc d'Aumale's "History of the House of Condé," after the authorities had allowed it to be printed. The civil tribunal held that the Prefect of Police was not amenable to common law, unless an authorisation from the Council of State were first obtained, and the Court of Appeal on Saturday confirmed judgment on the same grounds, namely, that the proceedings taken by the Duke d'Aumale and M. Michel Levy for the recovery of the property seized by the Prefect of Police, could not be sustained without the authority of the Council of State. It was announced in Court that an appeal would be lodged in the Court of Cassation against the judgment. A despatch from Fécamp states that a sharp cannonade was heard at sea from that place on Monday. An engagement was supposed to be proceeding between Federal and Confederate vessels. The Débats publishes a description of a formidable iron-cased vessel now building at Bordeaux, the peculiarity of which is, that she combines the characteristics of a turret ship with those of a steam ram. She is to be called the Sphinx, and is said to be different from any other vessel ever designed. She is iron-cased from the deck level to 1 metre 80 below the water line, with plates varying from 10 to 12 centimetres in thickness, according to their position. The stern is armed with a cast-steel spur, the extremity of which is placed about a metre below water, so as to strike an enemy below the plating. The deck is protected by cast-iron plates, placed under the planking, and supports two formidable iron-cased turrets. That on the bows is to be armed with a pivot gun, throwing solid shot of the weight of 300 pounds, the effect of which at short range no iron-casing is expected to withstand. The turret in the stern is to mount two long range pivot 70-pounders, to engage the enemy at a distance, but she is meant for close quarters.

SPAIN.—The King will leave for Paris on the 15th of August, the day of the inauguration of the Northern Railway. The Council of Ministers have decided to grant an amnesty to persons convicted of offences against the press laws. The statement that several despatches of Admiral Pinzon to the Government had been stolen during the passage of the couriers across the Isthmus of Panama is unfounded, the Government having received the Admiral's despatches. Communications have also been received from Chili, expressing the desire for friendly relations with Spain.

PORTUGAL.—A despatch from Lisbon states that a numerously signed petition of merchants has requested from the Government the free importation of cereals, the warehouses being empty and the crop insufficient.

BELGIUM.—King Leopold left Brussels on Tuesday evening for Vichy. By a Royal decree issued on Sunday the Chamber of Deputies is dissolved, and the new eletcions are fixed for the 11th August.

SWEDEN.—The Swedish and Norwegian fleet has been put out of commission, and the troops which had been mobilised have been disembodied. The construction of the first Monitor for the Swedish navy has been commenced at the ironworks. The materials for two others are ready. The Dagligt Allehanda of Friday says:

"Denmark is of little importance to strengthen Scandinavia against Russia. The absorption of Denmark by Germany would inspire us with pity, but not with alarm."

DENMARK.—Prince John of Glücksburg arrived at Lubeck on the 18th, and left by the steamer Ellida in the afternoon for Copenhagen. Three Danish ships of war under a flag of truce arrived off Dantzig harbour on the 13th with a despatch addressed to the military commander of Dantzig, announcing the suspension of hostilities on the part of the Danes.

THE DANISH DUCHIES.—On Thursday, the 14th, while General Falkenstein was planting the Austrian and Prussian flags at Skagen, the Danes attempted a landing at Aalbeck and Frederickshaven. They were driven off from the first place by a body of Hussars, and repulsed from the latter by a couple of guns. On the afternoon of the same day an engagement took place at Föhr between the allies and the Danish gunboats. During the night of the 17th, the Austrian troops took possession of the Island of Föhr. All the islands on the west coast of Schleswig are now in possession of the allies. The Danish Captain von Hammer has been taken prisoner in a creek of the Island of Fanoe, after having sunk seven boats. On Monday and Tuesday last a conflict took place between the Hanoverian and Prussian troops at Rendsburg. The Hanoverians attacked the Prussian outposts and soldiers, many of whom were wounded in the streets. Tumultuous assemblages even gathered before the hospitals, where some severely wounded Prussians were lying. The Prussian troops were compelled to remain under arms during the night. In consequence of these occurrences Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia informed the Commander-in-Chief of the Federal troops in Holstein that he had received orders to make himself master of Rendsburg. General Hake replied that, having only four companies at his disposal, he must yield to superior force, but that he declined to assume the responsibility for this step. In accordance with the previous announcement a Prussian force of 6000 men entered Rendsburg on Thursday. A meeting of Schleswig landowners took place at Kiel on Wednesday, to draw up an address to the highest civil authorities of Schleswig, requesting that the Duchies should be placed ad interim, until the decision of the succession question, under the joint government of Austria and Prussia.

FRANKFORT.—In the sitting of the Federal Diet on Thursday the Austro-Prussian motion that the Diet should called upon the Prince of Augustenburg to substantiate his claims to the throne of Schleswig-Holstein was adopted by a large majority.

AUSTRIA.—A despatch from Vienna, dated Saturday, says that the proposals of Denmark, addressed direct to the Courts of Berlin and Vienna, have been met on the part of Austria and Prussia by a suspension of arms on land and sea from the 20th to the 31st July, during which period the blockade of the Prussian ports will be raised by the Danes. The German Powers have added the request that Denmark will immediately send Plenipotentiaries to Vienna, where the negotiations for peace are to take place. The Austrian Government has appointed Baron Halbhuber, Councillor of State, as Civil Commissioner for Jutland.

Prussia.—It is asserted on good authority that Count von Bismark will be present in Vienna at the negotiations for peace.

Italy.—In the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on Sunday, Signori Bastoggi, Susani, and four other deputies resigned their seats. After an animated debate the Chamber adopted the order of the day presented by Signori Mari and Biancheri, whereby the Ministry were invited to bring in a Bill providing for cases in which the personal interests of Deputies might clash with their national duties. This was the last sitting of the Session, which closed on Monday. The Bill authorising the sale of the State Railways to the house of Messrs. Rothschild is postponed to next Session. A Royal decree published on Friday gives effect to the postal convention concluded between France and Italy, whereby money orders can be issued reciprocally in both countries. Garibaldi left Ischia on Tuesday morning at 7 o'clock for Caprera, where he arrived at noon on the next day. It is said that he is not in good health. The rumours of expeditions being undertaken by him are unfounded. The Neapolitan authorities have received intelligence that a three-masted steamer of suspicious appearance has been seen off the Island of Ischia, and two Italian ships of war have been directed to cruise off the island. The Pope left Rome on Monday for Castel Gandolfo. General de Montebello paid his respects to his Holiness at the station.

The Principalities.—A proclamation has been issued by Prince Couza stating the result of his journey to Constantinople, and expressing the gratitude of the country towards the Suzerain Court and the guaranteeing Powers. The Prince also formally announces that the Powers have recognised, saving some slight modifications, the acts of the 2d of May, sanctioned by a plebiscite of the Roumain people. The Roumain Monitour publishes the statute of the new Electoral Law. Another decree constitutes the Council of State and a Board of Control, and appoints the members of the same. The principal modifications of the Constitution mutually agreed upon between Prince Couza and the Porte were published on Sunday. In reference to the Constitution of the Senate, it was determined that the Senators directly appointed by the Prince are to possess a yearly income of 800 ducats, while a yearly income of 200 ducats is necessary for eligibility to the Chamber of Deputies. It is, however, reserved for the Chamber of Deputies, at their first sitting, definitively to decide upon this qualification.

West Africa.—The Sierra Leone Free Town Observer of June 16, states that M. Jules Gerard, known as the Lion-killer, has failed in his attempt to reach the interior of the continent by the route of Timbuctoo. He has been attacked and plundered by the natives, and with difficulty escaped with his life.

India.—Bombay papers of the 23d ult. state that Dr. Livingstone arrived in Bombay on the 15th ult. in the steamer Lady Nyassa, from Africa. The steamer, belonging to the Zambesi exploring expedition, is to be sold. Sir John Lawrence has declared himself opposed, for military reasons, to the extension of the Scinde Railway to Mooltan, and favourably inclined towards the maintenance of an Indus flotilla. His Excellency was still at Simla; and Sir Hugh Rose was expected to arrive there on his return from his recent trip to Cashmere about the 18th. Preparations are making for a census of Calcutta.

Cape of Good Hope.—Great alarm had been caused at the Cape by a telegram from the frontier stating that there was danger of a Kaffir war. Sir Walter Currie had reported to the Governor that the difficulties in the Transkei were increasing, and had recommended the 10th Regt. to be retained on the frontier. On the frontier it was even asserted that the paramount chief Kreli had crossed the Bashee in force, and had come in collision with the mounted police. Official telegrams from the Governor to the Commander of the Forces required the latter to proceed to the frontier immediately with every available man in the garrison. Accordingly the Commander of the Forces had started in the Valorous for Natal with the 2d battalion of the 11th Regiment, and the 5th Fusileers with a detachment of artillery and a battery of Armstrong guns for East London. The Cape Town Volunteers had tendered their services for garrison duty. Later advices from the frontier reported this alarm to have been in a great measure groundless, nothing like actual collision having taken place; and a trader who had passed through Kreli's country, and had arrived recently at King William's Town, found the tribe peaceable. The Commander of the Forces announced in Graham's Town, at the Mayor's dinner on the 15th June, that he did not apprehend a Kaffir war at present. It appears that Kreli had been irritated by the reported intention of the Governor to remove the Tambookies from their Queenstown locations into Transkei, and on that account the chief had been assuming a threatening tone. In return the Governor was desirous of making a warlike demonstration. The British authorities considered there was no fear of any actual disturbances, and it was likely that the Governor would reconsider the Tambookie question. The boundary line between the Orange Free State and the Basutas will, in all probability, be amicably settled. The Parliament is still sitting in Graham's Town. Several Government measures have been thrown out, among others the Bill for establishing a Deeds' Registry Office in Graham's Town, and that for the creation of a Supreme Court in one of the Eastern divisions. The agitation against the arbitrary ex post facto legislation of the Government and Parliament in connection with the Customs Protection Bill was continued in the colony. The home Government has consented to the annexation of No-Man's-Land. Sir Baldwin Walker in the Narcissus left for England on the 25th May. The Bishop of Cape Town is still at Natal, whence he will probably return in about a month. Bishop Tozer, of the late Central African Mission, is in Cape Town. Dr. Duff, the venerable Indian Missionary, is a passenger to England by the present mail steamer.

United States.—The Confederates have invaded Maryland and Pennsylvania in force, and the corps of Generals Ewell, Breckinridge, and Rhodes are all north of the Potomac. The invasion commenced on the 3d, when a Confederate force, variously estimated at from 6000 to a full corps, consisting of the veterans of Stonewall Jackson's army, under General Ewell, advanced up the Shenandoah valley, occupied Martinsburg, and drove General Sigel to Harper's Ferry. On the 4th General Sigel evacuated Harper's Ferry and retreated across the Potomac to Maryland Heights, destroying the iron bridge of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway at that point. The Confederates also crossed the Potomac on the same day, and at 4 P.M. were preparing to assault General Sigel's position. General Hunter on receiving this news hastened eastwards from Parkersburg to Sigel's assistance, but it is thought that he cannot reach him under 10 or 12 days; and meanwhile General Breckinridge is reported to be moving to retard his advance. The Confederates are now engaged in destroying the Baltimore and Ohio Railway, securing the harvest in the Shenandoah Valley, and running off horses, cattle, and other spoil. They have already occupied Frederick City, and are marching upon Baltimore, General Wallace, who had been sent against them, having been compelled to retreat after eight hours fighting at Monocacy, in which he sustained heavy loss, including Brigadier General Tyler and Colonel Seward of the New York artillery, taken prisoners. Great alarm exists in the Border towns and counties, and serious apprehensions are entertained for the safety both of Washington and Baltimore. President Lincoln has appointed the 8th of August for a day of humiliation and prayer; and has demanded 12,000 militia from New York, 12,000 from Pennsylvania, and 5000 from Massachusetts to repel the Confederate invasion. The Governor of New York has ordered an immediate draught to increase the State Militia to 75,000, and has ordered 5000 of the State Militia to Washington. Martial law has been proclaimed in Kentucky. General Grant has made no further attempt to turn the Confederate position at Petersburg since his defeat on the 22d ult., but it is reported that he has again demanded the surrender of the city, and that no answer has been returned by General Beauregard. It is now said that General Grant is preparing to reduce the Confederate works by bombardment. General Sherman reports that he occupied Kenesaw Mountain and Marietta on the morning of the 3d, the Confederates having retired towards the Chattahoochee. General Wilson's cavalry in their recent raid destroyed 20 miles of the Danville Railroad. On their return on the 27th ult. they were interrupted by the Confederates at Beam's Station on the Weldon and Petersburg Railroad. After three days' conflict, during which he lost all his trains, artillery, wounded, and between 2000 and 3000 men, he succeeded by a detour of 30 miles in escaping through the Confederate lines and rejoined Grant. 1300 negroes whom he kidnapped during the early part of his expedition were rescued. General Baldy Smith on the morning of the 30th attempted the capture of the Confederate intrenchments in his front, but was repulsed. Memphis papers state that General Carr defeated the Confederate General Shelby near St. Charles, Arkansas, on the 27th ult., capturing 200 prisoners and several cannon. The Federal loss was 200, that of the Confederates in killed and wounded is estimated at 500. During the night Shelby was reinforced by Marmaduke, when Carr retreated. It is reported that Marmaduke and Shelby are moving for a combined attack upon Steele at Little Rock. President Lincoln has ordered General Dix not to defend the action in the civil courts for the seizure of the New York World and Journal of Commerce. It is reported that Governor Seymour will enforce the orders of the Court, and order General Dix's arrest. The sinking of the Alabama by the Kearsarge has caused great rejoicing. Regrets are expressed that the steam-yacht Deerhound was not also sunk for rescuing Captain Semmes. Captain Winslow has been made a Commodore in recognition of his services. The authorities have arrested numbers of persons at New Orleans for recruiting for Juarez. The steamer Rouen has been captured. Gold is at 176 premium.

San Domingo.—Passengers arrived at Vigo assert that the insurgents at San Domingo had abandoned their position at Puerto Plata, and were prepared to surrender, provided the Spanish authorities would promise them a complete amnesty.

Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday.—Essays and Reviews.—Lord Houghton, in asking whether her Majesty's Government have taken or are willing to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown as to the powers of Convocation to pass a synodical judgment on books written by clergymen or laymen, regretted that the volume called "Essays and Reviews" should have been selected by Convocation as the first of an "Index Expurgatorius" with which literature seemed to be threatened. He declined to enter on a theological controversy, but described the origin and nature of the condemned work. The proceedings connected with it would, he thought, establish a dangerous precedent, as on the same principle of action any work might be censured. He suggested that, instead of exercising a doubtful authority, the better course would have been to answer by argument anything in the work that seemed objectionable; and urged that, if the powers claimed in this instance were extended to other cases, it would constitute a pressing grievance, and be a source of great danger to freedom of opinion and the liberty of religion.—The Lord Chancellor said there were three modes of dealing with Convocation since it had been permitted to deliberate actively. One was, to take no notice of its proceedings; another was, if it were likely to be mischievous, to prorogue it; and the third, when it exceeded its powers, to bring it to the bar of a court of justice. The supremacy of the Crown was most carefully guarded by the statutes, and any one who presumed to exercise that authority, directly or indirectly, save under special warrant of the Crown, was liable to the penalties of præmunire. Moreover, Parliament had carefully provided that no sentence, or anything else pronounced by Convocation, had any validity whatever, and could not be carried into practical effect. But he was only partially aware of what Convocation had done, his authority being chiefly the reports in the newspapers; and he was most reluctant to interfere, for the case might prove to be a serious one, and he shrank from doing anything which would enable the Chancellor of the Exchequer to sweep into his net at one haul the whole of the archbishops and bishops, and all the deans and chapters—in short, the entire Convocation. He warned the right rev. bench, however, of the peril in which they had put themselves, and advised the members of Convocation, if any attempt were made to draw it beyond its proper limits, at once to withdraw, and, remembering the pillar of salt, not to look behind. In conclusion he had to state that there was no intention on the part of the Government to take any steps in the matter.—The Archbishop of Canterbury said that the object of Convocation in dealing with "Essays and Reviews" was not persecution, but to vindicate the Church of England from all complicity in the doctrines propounded in that work. Desirous of proceeding legally, he had applied to Government for the opinion of the law officers of the Crown, which they had declined to give. He therefore took that of Sir Hugh Cairns and Mr. Rolt, who held that Convocation was proceeding legally.—The Bishop of London thought Convocation had a right to complain of the Government refusing to supply the opinion of the law officers of the Crown; but he doubted whether the course adopted by Convocation was the best that could have been devised. The Church had passed through more dangerous periods than the present, and he thought her influence would be more effectually extended by sound learning, good argument, and the pious lives of the clergy.—Lord Wensleydale said the Archbishop could obtain, by a motion in the House, the opinion of the judges as to the validity of proceedings proposed to Convocation.—The Bishop of Oxford argued that Convocation when called together had power to express an opinion on heretical doctrines, although it was doubtful whether it could proceed against the authors. The case involved the religion of the realm and the liberty of the subject, and when the highest authority under the Crown descended to ribaldry, he ought, if he did not respect himself, at least treat the audience whom he was addressing with some deference. He also complained of the misrepresentations of the Lord Chancellor, and indignantly repelled the insinuation that Convocation was asserting rights in violation of the Queen's supremacy.—The Lord Chancellor observed that he had now received a useful warning. He had wished to treat the matter in a good natured spirit, and without the slightest idea of bringing charges or making misrepresentations.—On the motion of the Earl of Malmesbury, the Street Music Nuisance Suppression Bill passed through committee. Several other Bills were advanced a stage.

Monday.—The Burials Registration Bill passed through Committee.—Lord Brougham called attention to the subject of the Spanish Slave Trade, and said that it was with the utmost grief and displeasure that he saw Spain evading and setting at naught the stipulations which had been made between European nations for the suppression of that nefarious traffic, and in giving encouragement to the exportation of negroes to Cuba. Our own West Indian colonies were loud in their complaints of the competition to which they were exposed by the slave-cultivated produce of Cuba, and stated that they suffered more from the increase of Cuban slavery than from the abolition of slavery in the British West Indies. If Spain persisted in her refusal to fulfil her solemn treaty obligations, not only ought our force of gun-boats to be largely augmented, but measures should be adopted for taxing the slave produce of the Spanish possessions in the tropics. The conduct of the Brazilian Government had nobly contrasted with that of Spain on this question, and Mr. Christie himself, although no friend to that Government, readily admitted the fact. He thought that there was a very strong case for repealing the Aberdeen Act, and denied that there was the slightest symptom of a renewal of the slave trade in Brazil, where, from the Emperor down to the smallest planter, every man was against it.—Earl Russell replied that successive Foreign Ministers had made representations on the subject to the Spanish Government, which had expressed its willingness to join with other countries in putting down the slave trade, but that, owing to the obstacles interposed by the planters in the colonies, their endeavours had not yet been attended with success. As to the suggestion to tax the slave-grown sugar of Cuba, such a proceeding would be perfectly inefficacious, whilst it could be brought here through France and other countries. He could only say that her Majesty's Government would not relax their efforts for the purpose of putting down the slave trade.—The Earl of Malmesbury concurred with Lord Brougham, that the Brazilian Government had done all in its power to discourage the traffic in slaves, and expressed the surprise with which he had heard its conduct impugned in the other House of Parliament. The Mutual Surrender of Criminals (Prussia) Bill, the Militia Ballots Suspension Bill, and the Administration of Trusts (Scotland) Bill were read a second time. The Street Music Bill, the Railways (Ireland) Act Amendment Bill, and the Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Bill were read a third time and passed.

Countess Spencer with their company at dinner at Spencer House. On Saturday their Royal Highnesses left Marlborough House for the White Lodge, Richmond Park, and dined in the evening with the Duke of Buccleuch at his villa at Richmond. On Monday their Royal Highnesses attended the Duchess of Cambridge's fête champêtre at Cambridge Cottage, Kew. On Wednesday morning the Prince went to Aldershot. In the evening the Prince and Princess dined with the Duke and Duchess d'Aumale, at Orleans House, Twickenham. On Thursday morning the Prince and Princess came to Marlborough House from Richmond Park. The Prince presided at a meeting of the Council of the Duchy of Cornwall.

PRINCESS HELENA has been confined to the house at Osborne for some days by an attack of scarlatina. The disease is of a mild form, and all the symptoms are very satisfactory. Her Royal Highness is now making favourable progress, and the rash has entirely disappeared.

ARRIVAL OF GRAND DUCHESS MARIE.—Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie, sister of the Emperor of Russia, attended by a large retinue, landed at Dover on Thursday from Belgium, and was received by Baron Brunnow, the Russian Ambassador, the resident consul, and other personages connected with the Russian Government. Her Imperial Highness immediately left by the South-Eastern railway for Claridge's Hotel, whence she will go to Torquay for a few weeks. Prince Gortschakoff met the duchess on her arrival at the Charing Cross terminus.

THE CABINET.—A Cabinet Council was held on Saturday at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury in Downing Street. Another Council was held on Wednesday.

THE ARMY.—The colonelcy of the 91st Regiment, vacant by the death of General Hay, has been conferred on Lieut.-General Arbuthnot. The colonelcy of the 89th Regiment, vacated by this appointment, has been conferred on Major-General Gascoyne. Major-General Chesney has been appointed Colonel-Commandant of the Royal Artillery, in the room of the late General Sir R. W. Gardiner.

BARONETCY.—The Queen has directed letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Baronet of the United Kingdom to Sir Charles Lyell, of Kinnordy, Forfarshire, and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—Sir Hugh Arbuthnott will retire from Kincardineshire, and Mr. James Dyce Nicol, of Ballogie, is the Ministerial candidate for the vacant seat. Lord Edward Cavendish, third son of the Duke of Devonshire, and the Hon. Reginald C. Abbot, son of Lord Colchester, will be candidates for East Sussex at the next election, the former in the Liberal, the latter in the Conservative interest. Mr. F. Calvert, Q. C., a brother of Sir Harry Verney, M.P., and Mr. N. M. Rothschild, eldest son of Baron Lionel de Rothschild, will be candidates for Aylesbury at the next election. The Hon. William George Eden, of Cantley Hall, will be the Liberal candidate for Great Grimsby, in the room of Mr. Chapman, who will retire. Mr. Scully has contradicted the report that he intends to retire from Cork.

CASE OF BISHOP COLENSO.—The council of the Colonial Bishopries Fund, out of which part of the salary of the Bishop of Natal was paid, have transferred the amount hitherto granted to him to a reserved fund, pending the final decision of the question as to the legality of the Bishop of Cape Town's judgment suspending him from his see. The amount hitherto paid annually to the Bishop from the fund has been 682*l.* 10*s.*

THE CHANNEL FLEET, comprising the Edgar, Warrior, Black Prince, Defence, and Trinculo, under the command of Admiral Dacres, C.B., sailed from Spithead on Monday on a cruise westward. They will probably call at Torbay, and afterwards at Bristol, and other ports not visited during last summer's cruise. From the western ports the fleet is expected to proceed to the north coast of Ireland.

THE NEW CANON OF WESTMINSTER.—The Rev. William Conway, M.A., has been nominated to the canonry in Westminster Abbey, with the Rectory of St. Margaret, vacant by the death of the Rev. Dr. Cureton.

A NEW DECLARATION.—Dr. Daubeny, Professor of Botany in the University of Oxford, has called attention to a new declaration of religious opinion which has been issued by Mr. M'Leod, from the Royal College of Chemistry, with a view to obtain the signatures of scientific laymen. It appears that Sir David Brewster, Sir Henry Rawlinson, and about 150 others have already affixed their names to it. The gist of the declaration is contained in the following sentence:—"We conceive that it is impossible for the Word of God—as written in the book of nature—and God's Word written in Holy Scripture, to contradict one another, however much they may appear to differ." Dr. Daubeny has published the letter which he sent in reply, stating his reasons for withholding his sanction from such a creed. While generally admitting the justice of the declaration in principle, he fears its tendency is to "countenance that view of Scripture inspiration which, of the many entertained by divines of different schools, is the one which I regard as the narrowest and the most beset with difficulties."

COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL AND THE INSPECTORS OF SCHOOLS.—The report of the select committee appointed to inquire into the practice of the Committee of Council on Education with respect to the reports of her Majesty's inspectors of schools has been published. The committee find that no instance of marking the reports has occurred since Feb. 14, 1862, when a report by Mr. Longueville Jones was specially submitted to the president, with passages marked, written with a feeling of hostility to the department, and that report was sent back to him with remarks by the president. The committee however could not proceed with the investigation, owing to the illness of Mr. Jones. They say:—

"The principle involved in the subject of this inquiry and in the resolution is important. Your committee have carefully considered the action of the department, and have come to the conclusion that the supervision exercised in objecting to the insertion of irrelevant matter, of mere dissertation, and of controversial argument, is consistent with the powers of the Committee of Council, and has, on the whole, been exercised fairly and without excessive strictness. If passages occur in the reports, as printed, consisting of inference or arguments which may tend to support the educational views of the department, other passages may be found which have a contrary tendency. No objection is made to statements of facts observed by the inspectors within the circle of their official experience, whatever may be their bearing on the policy of the Committee of Council. The knowledge, or even a reasonable suspicion, that the inspectors' reports are subject to alteration, either directly or indirectly, at the instance of the department, has, without doubt, a tendency to lower their value, if they are to be regarded as independent sources of testimony in matters of opinion or controversy touching the educational views or policy of the Committee of Council. It appears however to your committee that whatever may have been the understanding under which the appointment of inspectors was originally sanctioned, Parliament cannot be presumed to be ignorant (since the year 1858 at latest), that the heads of the office have exercised a censorship over the inspectors' reports as to the insertion of argumentative or irrelevant matter; and your committee are of opinion that some such power is essential to the effectual working of the department so long as it retains its present constitution and functions. It has occurred to your committee that it might be possible to obtain all the information which the inspectors can be desired to give to the department or to Parliament, by requiring them to furnish answers to specific questions, instead of making general reports, and thus to avoid risk of misunderstanding, either between the department and the inspectors or between the department and Parliament, as to the kind of information which the inspectors are required to give. It appears however that none of the reports for the last year have been objected to on the ground of nonconformity with the minute of 1861, as explained by the paragraph of August, 1863. For the information of Parliament your committee recommend that all instructions which may hereafter from time to time be issued to the inspectors, either as to their general or tabulated reports, should be laid before Parliament with the annual report of the Committee of Council."

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Princess Clotilde, wife of Prince Napoleon, gave birth to a son on Saturday night. Prince Napoleon, who embarked on the previous evening at Havre for a cruise at sea, was not acquainted with the birth of the Prince till some time after the event. The Princess and the infant are doing well. The latter was privately baptised after the accouchement, and received the names of Napoleon Louis Joseph Jerome. The Empress paid a visit to the Princess on Sunday morning and remained half-an-hour. The King of the Belgians arrived in Paris on Tuesday evening on his way to Vichy on a visit to the Emperor of the French. His Majesty paid a visit to the Empress at St. Cloud on Wednesday, and left on Thursday morning for Vichy. It is rumoured in Paris that this visit is not connected with politics, but is for the purpose of arranging a marriage between his Majesty's second son, the Count of Flanders, and Princess Anna Murat. M. Drouyn de Lhuys, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, has been summoned for a few days to Vichy to confer with the Emperor. His Majesty is in perfect health. The French Government has addressed a circular to the various Powers, inviting them to take part in an international Congress, to be held in the autumn, for the purpose of regulating telegraphic communications in Europe. The Constitutionnel of Sunday publishes an article demonstrating that the project for the admission of Denmark into the German Confederation would disturb the balance of power in Europe, and says:—

"It would give rise to threatening contingencies, and would produce such complications and such opposition that it is impossible to consider the scheme as having been seriously entertained."

The Pays of Thursday evening publishes an article signed by its editorial secretary, opposing the pretensions of the German Powers to incorporate that portion of Schleswig inhabited by Danes. It says:—

"Before violating equity the German Powers, who are about to abandon the old right without adopting the new, should think twice. They should not forget that the law of retaliation exists. If the German Confederation be unjustly aggrandised it exposes itself to reprisals; if it now sets the example of a spirit of conquest, why should not others follow it to its detriment?"

The Court of Appeal on Saturday gave judgment on the appeal of M. Levy the publisher, against the sentence of the Civil Tribunal of the Seine, justifying the Prefect of Police for seizing all the copies of the Duc d'Aumale's "History of the House of Condé," after the authorities had allowed it to be printed. The civil tribunal held that the Prefect of Police was not amenable to common law, unless an authorisation from the Council of State were first obtained, and the Court of Appeal on Saturday confirmed judgment on the same grounds, namely, that the proceedings taken by the Duke d'Aumale and M. Michel Levy for the recovery of the property seized by the Prefect of Police, could not be sustained without the authority of the Council of State. It was announced in Court that an appeal would be lodged in the Court of Cassation against the judgment. A despatch from Fécamp states that a sharp cannonade was heard at sea from that place on Monday. An engagement was supposed to be proceeding between Federal and Confederate vessels. The Débats publishes a description of a formidable iron-cased vessel now building at Bordeaux, the peculiarity of which is, that she combines the characteristics of a turret ship with those of a steam ram. She is to be called the Sphinx, and is said to be different from any other vessel ever designed. She is iron-cased from the deck level to 1 metre 80 below the water line, with plates varying from 10 to 12 centimetres in thickness, according to their position. The stern is armed with a cast-steel spur, the extremity of which is placed about a metre below water, so as to strike an enemy below the plating. The deck is protected by cast-iron plates, placed under the planking, and supports two formidable iron-cased turrets. That on the bows is to be armed with a pivot gun, throwing solid shot of the weight of 300 pounds, the effect of which at short range no iron-casing is expected to withstand. The turret in the stern is to mount two long range pivot 70-pounders, to engage the enemy at a distance, but she is meant for close quarters.

SPAIN.—The King will leave for Paris on the 15th of August, the day of the inauguration of the Northern Railway. The Council of Ministers have decided to grant an amnesty to persons convicted of offences against the press laws. The statement that several despatches of Admiral Pinzon to the Government had been stolen during the passage of the couriers across the Isthmus of Panama is unfounded, the Government having received the Admiral's despatches. Communications have also been received from Chili, expressing the desire for friendly relations with Spain.

PORTUGAL.—A despatch from Lisbon states that a numerously signed petition of merchants has requested from the Government the free importation of cereals, the warehouses being empty and the crop insufficient.

BELGIUM.—King Leopold left Brussels on Tuesday evening for Vichy. By a Royal decree issued on Sunday the Chamber of Deputies is dissolved, and the new eletcions are fixed for the 11th August.

SWEDEN.—The Swedish and Norwegian fleet has been put out of commission, and the troops which had been mobilised have been disembodied. The construction of the first Monitor for the Swedish navy has been commenced at the ironworks. The materials for two others are ready. The Dagligt Allehanda of Friday says:

"Denmark is of little importance to strengthen Scandinavia against Russia. The absorption of Denmark by Germany would inspire us with pity, but not with alarm."

DENMARK.—Prince John of Glücksburg arrived at Lubeck on the 18th, and left by the steamer Ellida in the afternoon for Copenhagen. Three Danish ships of war under a flag of truce arrived off Dantzig harbour on the 13th with a despatch addressed to the military commander of Dantzig, announcing the suspension of hostilities on the part of the Danes.

THE DANISH DUCHIES.—On Thursday, the 14th, while General Falkenstein was planting the Austrian and Prussian flags at Skagen, the Danes attempted a landing at Aalbeck and Frederickshaven. They were driven off from the first place by a body of Hussars, and repulsed from the latter by a couple of guns. On the afternoon of the same day an engagement took place at Föhr between the allies and the Danish gunboats. During the night of the 17th, the Austrian troops took possession of the Island of Föhr. All the islands on the west coast of Schleswig are now in possession of the allies. The Danish Captain von Hammer has been taken prisoner in a creek of the Island of Fanoe, after having sunk seven boats. On Monday and Tuesday last a conflict took place between the Hanoverian and Prussian troops at Rendsburg. The Hanoverians attacked the Prussian outposts and soldiers, many of whom were wounded in the streets. Tumultuous assemblages even gathered before the hospitals, where some severely wounded Prussians were lying. The Prussian troops were compelled to remain under arms during the night. In consequence of these occurrences Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia informed the Commander-in-Chief of the Federal troops in Holstein that he had received orders to make himself master of Rendsburg. General Hake replied that, having only four companies at his disposal, he must yield to superior force, but that he declined to assume the responsibility for this step. In accordance with the previous announcement a Prussian force of 6000 men entered Rendsburg on Thursday. A meeting of Schleswig landowners took place at Kiel on Wednesday, to draw up an address to the highest civil authorities of Schleswig, requesting that the Duchies should be placed ad interim, until the decision of the succession question, under the joint government of Austria and Prussia.

FRANKFORT.—In the sitting of the Federal Diet on Thursday the Austro-Prussian motion that the Diet should called upon the Prince of Augustenburg to substantiate his claims to the throne of Schleswig-Holstein was adopted by a large majority.

AUSTRIA.—A despatch from Vienna, dated Saturday, says that the proposals of Denmark, addressed direct to the Courts of Berlin and Vienna, have been met on the part of Austria and Prussia by a suspension of arms on land and sea from the 20th to the 31st July, during which period the blockade of the Prussian ports will be raised by the Danes. The German Powers have added the request that Denmark will immediately send Plenipotentiaries to Vienna, where the negotiations for peace are to take place. The Austrian Government has appointed Baron Halbhuber, Councillor of State, as Civil Commissioner for Jutland.

Prussia.—It is asserted on good authority that Count von Bismark will be present in Vienna at the negotiations for peace.

Italy.—In the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on Sunday, Signori Bastoggi, Susani, and four other deputies resigned their seats. After an animated debate the Chamber adopted the order of the day presented by Signori Mari and Biancheri, whereby the Ministry were invited to bring in a Bill providing for cases in which the personal interests of Deputies might clash with their national duties. This was the last sitting of the Session, which closed on Monday. The Bill authorising the sale of the State Railways to the house of Messrs. Rothschild is postponed to next Session. A Royal decree published on Friday gives effect to the postal convention concluded between France and Italy, whereby money-orders can be issued reciprocally in both countries. Garibaldi left Ischia on Tuesday morning at 7 o'clock for Caprera, where he arrived at noon on the next day. It is said that he is not in good health. The rumours of expeditions being undertaken by him are unfounded. The Neapolitan authorities have received intelligence that a three-masted steamer of suspicious appearance has been seen off the Island of Ischia, and two Italian ships of war have been directed to cruise off the island. The Pope left Rome on Monday for Castel Gandolfo. General de Montebello paid his respects to his Holiness at the station.

The Principalities.—A proclamation has been issued by Prince Couza stating the result of his journey to Constantinople, and expressing the gratitude of the country towards the Suzerain Court and the guaranteeing Powers. The Prince also formally announces that the Powers have recognised, saving some slight modifications, the acts of the 2d of May, sanctioned by a plebiscite of the Roumain people. The Roumain Moniteur publishes the statute of the new Electoral Law. Another decree constitutes the Council of State and a Board of Control, and appoints the members of the same. The principal modifications of the Constitution mutually agreed upon between Prince Couza and the Porte were published on Sunday. In reference to the Constitution of the Senate, it was determined that the Senators directly appointed by the Prince are to possess a yearly income of 800 ducats, while a yearly income of 200 ducats is necessary for eligibility to the Chamber of Deputies. It is, however, reserved for the Chamber of Deputies, at their first sitting, definitively to decide upon this qualification.

West Africa.—The Sierra Leone Free Town Observer of June 16, states that M. Jules Gerard, known as the Lion-killer, has failed in his attempt to reach the interior of the continent by the route of Timbuctoo. He has been attacked and plundered by the natives, and with difficulty escaped with his life.

India.—Bombay papers of the 23d ult. state that Dr. Livingstone arrived in Bombay on the 15th ult. in the steamer Lady Nyassa, from Africa. The steamer, belonging to the Zambesi exploring expedition, is to be sold. Sir John Lawrence has declared himself opposed, for military reasons, to the extension of the Scinde Railway to Mooltan, and favourably inclined towards the maintenance of an Indus flotilla. His Excellency was still at Simla; and Sir Hugh Rose was expected to arrive there on his return from his recent trip to Cashmere about the 18th. Preparations are making for a census of Calcutta.

Cape of Good Hope.—Great alarm had been caused at the Cape by a telegram from the frontier stating that there was danger of a Kaffir war. Sir Walter Currie had reported to the Governor that the difficulties in the Transkei were increasing, and had recommended the 10th Regt. to be retained on the frontier. On the frontier it was even asserted that the paramount chief Kreli had crossed the Bashee in force, and had come in collision with the mounted police. Official telegrams from the Governor to the Commander of the Forces required the latter to proceed to the frontier immediately with every available man in the garrison. Accordingly the Commander of the Forces had started in the Valorous for Natal with the 2d battalion of the 11th Regiment, and the 5th Fusileers with a detachment of artillery and a battery of Armstrong guns for East London. The Cape Town Volunteers had tendered their services for garrison duty. Later advices from the frontier reported this alarm to have been in a great measure groundless, nothing like actual collision having taken place; and a trader who had passed through Kreli's country, and had arrived recently at King William's Town, found the tribe peaceable. The Commander of the Forces announced in Graham's Town, at the Mayor's dinner on the 15th June, that he did not apprehend a Kaffir war at present. It appears that Kreli had been irritated by the reported intention of the Governor to remove the Tambookies from their Queenstown locations into Transkei, and on that account the chief had been assuming a threatening tone. In return the Governor was desirous of making a warlike demonstration. The British authorities considered there was no fear of any actual disturbances, and it was likely that the Governor would reconsider the Tambookie question. The boundary line between the Orange Free State and the Basutas will, in all probability, be amicably settled. The Parliament is still sitting in Graham's Town. Several Government measures have been thrown out, among others the Bill for establishing a Deeds' Registry Office in Graham's Town, and that for the creation of a Supreme Court in one of the Eastern divisions. The agitation against the arbitrary ex post facto legislation of the Government and Parliament in connection with the Customs Protection Bill was continued in the colony. The home Government has consented to the annexation of No-Man's-Land. Sir Baldwin Walker in the Narcissus left for England on the 25th May. The Bishop of Cape Town is still at Natal, whence he will probably return in about a month. Bishop Tozer, of the late Central African Mission, is in Cape Town. Dr. Duff, the venerable Indian Missionary, is a passenger to England by the present mail steamer.

United States.—The Confederates have invaded Maryland and Pennsylvania in force, and the corps of Generals Ewell, Breckinridge, and Rhodes are all north of the Potomac. The invasion commenced on the 3d, when a Confederate force, variously estimated at from 6000 to a full corps, consisting of the veterans of Stonewall Jackson's army, under General Ewell, advanced up the Shenandoah valley, occupied Martinsburg, and drove General Sigel to Harper's Ferry. On the 4th General Sigel evacuated Harper's Ferry and retreated across the Potomac to Maryland Heights, destroying the iron bridge of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway at that point. The Confederates also crossed the Potomac on the same day, and at 4 P.M. were preparing to assault General Sigel's position. General Hunter on receiving this news hastened eastwards from Parkersburg to Sigel's assistance, but it is thought that he cannot reach him under 10 or 12 days; and meanwhile General Breckinridge is reported to be moving to retard his advance. The Confederates are now engaged in destroying the Baltimore and Ohio Railway, securing the harvest in the Shenandoah Valley, and running off horses, cattle, and other spoil. They have already occupied Frederick City, and are marching upon Baltimore, General Wallace, who had been sent against them, having been compelled to retreat after eight hours fighting at Monocacy, in which he sustained heavy loss, including Brigadier General Tyler and Colonel Seward of the New York artillery, taken prisoners. Great alarm exists in the Border towns and counties, and serious apprehensions are entertained for the safety both of Washington and Baltimore. President Lincoln has appointed the 8th of August for a day of humiliation and prayer; and has demanded 12,000 militia from New York, 12,000 from Pennsylvania, and 5000 from Massachusetts to repel the Confederate invasion. The Governor of New York has ordered an immediate draught to increase the State Militia to 75,000, and has ordered 5000 of the State Militia to Washington. Martial law has been proclaimed in Kentucky. General Grant has made no further attempt to turn the Confederate position at Petersburg since his defeat on the 22d ult., but it is reported that he has again demanded the surrender of the city, and that no answer has been returned by General Beauregard. It is now said that General Grant is preparing to reduce the Confederate works by bombardment. General Sherman reports that he occupied Kenesaw Mountain and Marietta on the morning of the 3d, the Confederates having retired towards the Chattahoochee. General Wilson's cavalry in their recent raid destroyed 20 miles of the Danville Railroad. On their return on the 27th ult. they were interrupted by the Confederates at Beam's Station on the Weldon and Petersburg Railroad. After three days' conflict, during which he lost all his trains, artillery, wounded, and between 2000 and 3000 men, he succeeded by a detour of 30 miles in escaping through the Confederate lines and rejoined Grant. 1300 negroes whom he kidnapped during the early part of his expedition were rescued. General Baldy Smith on the morning of the 30th attempted the capture of the Confederate intrenchments in his front, but was repulsed. Memphis papers state that General Carr defeated the Confederate General Shelby near St. Charles, Arkansas, on the 27th ult., capturing 200 prisoners and several cannon. The Federal loss was 200, that of the Confederates in killed and wounded is estimated at 500. During the night Shelby was reinforced by Marmaduke, when Carr retreated. It is reported that Marmaduke and Shelby are moving for a combined attack upon Steele at Little Rock. President Lincoln has ordered General Dix not to defend the action in the civil courts for the seizure of the New York World and Journal of Commerce. It is reported that Governor Seymour will enforce the orders of the Court, and order General Dix's arrest. The sinking of the Alabama by the Kearsarge has caused great rejoicing. Regrets are expressed that the steam-yacht Deerhound was not also sunk for rescuing Captain Semmes. Captain Winslow has been made a Commodore in recognition of his services. The authorities have arrested numbers of persons at New Orleans for recruiting for Juarez. The steamer Rouen has been captured. Gold is at 176 premium.

San Domingo.—Passengers arrived at Vigo assert that the insurgents at San Domingo had abandoned their position at Puerto Plata, and were prepared to surrender, provided the Spanish authorities would promise them a complete amnesty.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday.—Essays and Reviews.—Lord Houghton, in asking whether her Majesty's Government have taken or are willing to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown as to the powers of Convocation to pass a synodical judgment on books written by clergymen or laymen, regretted that the volume called "Essays and Reviews" should have been selected by Convocation as the first of an "Index Expurgatorius" with which literature seemed to be threatened. He declined to enter on a theological controversy, but described the origin and nature of the condemned work. The proceedings connected with it would, he thought, establish a dangerous precedent, as on the same principle of action any work might be censured. He suggested that, instead of exercising a doubtful authority, the better course would have been to answer by argument anything in the work that seemed objectionable; and urged that, if the powers claimed in this instance were extended to other cases, it would constitute a pressing grievance, and be a source of great danger to freedom of opinion and the liberty of religion.—The Lord Chancellor said there were three modes of dealing with Convocation since it had been permitted to deliberate actively. One was, to take no notice of its proceedings; another was, if it were likely to be mischievous, to prorogue it; and the third, when it exceeded its powers, to bring it to the bar of a court of justice. The supremacy of the Crown was most carefully guarded by the statutes, and any one who presumed to exercise that authority, directly or indirectly, save under special warrant of the Crown, was liable to the penalties of premunire. Moreover, Parliament had carefully provided that no sentence, or anything else pronounced by Convocation, had any validity whatever, and could not be carried into practical effect. But he was only partially aware of what Convocation had done, his authority being chiefly the reports in the newspapers; and he was most reluctant to interfere, for the case might prove to be a serious one, and he shrank from doing anything which would enable the Chancellor of the Exchequer to sweep into his net at one haul the whole of the archbishops and bishops, and all the deans and chapters—in short, the entire Convocation. He warned the right rev. bench, however, of the peril in which they had put themselves, and advised the members of Convocation, if any attempt were made to draw it beyond its proper limits, at once to withdraw, and, remembering the pillar of salt, not to look behind. In conclusion he had to state that there was no intention on the part of the Government to take any steps in the matter.—The Archbishop of Canterbury said that the object of Convocation in dealing with "Essays and Reviews" was not persecution, but to vindicate the Church of England from all complicity in the doctrines propounded in that work. Desirous of proceeding legally, he had applied to Government for the opinion of the law officers of the Crown, which they had declined to give. He therefore took that of Sir Hugh Cairns and Mr. Rolt, who held that Convocation was proceeding legally.—The Bishop of London thought Convocation had a right to complain of the Government refusing to supply the opinion of the law officers of the Crown; but he doubted whether the course adopted by Convocation was the best that could have been devised. The Church had passed through more dangerous periods than the present, and he thought her influence would be more effectually extended by sound learning, good argument, and the pious lives of the clergy.—Lord Wensleydale said the Archbishop could obtain, by a motion in the House, the opinion of the judges as to the validity of proceedings proposed to Convocation.—The Bishop of Oxford argued that Convocation when called together had power to express an opinion on heretical doctrines, although it was doubtful whether it could proceed against the authors. The case involved the religion of the realm and the liberty of the subject, and when the highest authority under the Crown descended to ribaldry, he ought, if he did not respect himself, at least treat the audience whom he was addressing with some deference. He also complained of the misrepresentations of the Lord Chancellor, and indignantly repelled the insinuation that Convocation was asserting rights in violation of the Queen's supremacy.—The Lord Chancellor observed that he had now received a useful warning. He had wished to treat the matter in a good natured spirit, and without the slightest idea of bringing charges or making misrepresentations.—On the motion of the Earl of Malmesbury, the Street Music Nuisance Suppression Bill passed through committee. Several other Bills were advanced a stage.

Monday.—The Burials Registration Bill passed through Committee.—Lord Brougham called attention to the subject of the Spanish Slave Trade, and said that it was with the utmost grief and displeasure that he saw Spain evading and setting at naught the stipulations which had been made between European nations for the suppression of that nefarious traffic, and in giving encouragement to the exportation of negroes to Cuba. Our own West Indian colonies were loud in their complaints of the competition to which they were exposed by the slave-cultivated produce of Cuba, and stated that they suffered more from the increase of Cuban slavery than from the abolition of slavery in the British West Indies. If Spain persisted in her refusal to fulfil her solemn treaty obligations, not only ought our force of gun-boats to be largely augmented, but measures should be adopted for taxing the slave produce of the Spanish possessions in the tropics. The conduct of the Brazilian Government had nobly contrasted with that of Spain on this question, and Mr. Christie himself, although no friend to that Government, readily admitted the fact. He thought that there was a very strong case for repealing the Aberdeen Act, and denied that there was the slightest symptom of a renewal of the slave trade in Brazil, where, from the Emperor down to the smallest planter, every man was against it.—Earl Russell replied that successive Foreign Ministers had made representations on the subject to the Spanish Government, which had expressed its willingness to join with other countries in putting down the slave trade, but that, owing to the obstacles interposed by the planters in the colonies, their endeavours had not yet been attended with success. As to the suggestion to tax the slave-grown sugar of Cuba, such a proceeding would be perfectly inefficacious, whilst it could be brought here through France and other countries. He could only say that her Majesty's Government would not relax their efforts for the purpose of putting down the slave trade.—The Earl of Malmesbury concurred with Lord Brougham, that the Brazilian Government had done all in its power to discourage the traffic in slaves, and expressed the surprise with which he had heard its conduct impugned in the other House of Parliament. The Mutual Surrender of Criminals (Prussia) Bill, the Malta Ballots Suspension Bill, and the Administration of Trusts (Scotland) Bill were read a second time. The Street Music Bill, the Railways (Ireland) Act Amendment Bill, and the Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Bill were read a third time and passed.

TUESDAY.—Foreign Affairs.—The Earl of CARNARVON gave notice that the Earl of Ellenborough would on Tuesday, the 26th, call attention to the changes which had taken place in the state of foreign affairs since the meeting of Parliament. The Sale of Gas (Scotland) Bill, the Local Government Act (1858), and the Naval Discipline Bill were read a second time. The Mutual Surrender of Criminals (Prussia) Bill, the Militia Ballots Suspension Bill, and the Administration of Trusts (Scotland) Bill passed through Committee. The Prorogation.—In answer to Lord REDESDALE, Earl GRANVILLE said the Government hoped to be able to prorogue Parliament at the end of next week, but, owing to the state of private business in their lordships' House, it might be necessary to delay it a few days longer.

THURSDAY.—The College of Physicians Bill, the Inclosure Bill, and the Trespass (Ireland) Bill passed through Committee.—Earl FORTESCUE moved the second reading of the Weights and Measures (Metric System) Bill, which had come up from the Commons, and described the advantages of the measure as likely to be very considerable, alike in a commercial and a scientific point of view.—The Marquis of SALISBURY opposed the Bill on the ground that it was an incomplete and unsatisfactory attempt to substitute a French equivalent for the imperial standard, by the use of decimal points that would not be understood, and which could not touch the multifarious weights and measures that did not come under the denomination of imperial. Believing that the measure would be utterly impracticable, he moved as an amendment that it be read a second time on that day three months.—The Bill was also opposed by the Earl of DONOUGHMORE.—The Duke of ARGYLL contended that the arguments relied upon by the opponents of the measure were inconclusive, and that, so far from the introduction of the proposed system being complicated and hard to understand, it was marked by extreme simplicity as compared, for example, with the system of weights and measures existing in Scotland, than which nothing could be more obscure or difficult of comprehension.—The Earl of HARROWBY also supported the Bill, because it was required by a large proportion of the mercantile community, and its adoption would be permissive, not compulsory. Lord BROUGHAM was of opinion that the measure, if passed, would not only prove a great convenience to the commercial classes, but increase the spread of education by relieving the poor from the trouble of mastering our antiquated and complex system, which occupied time that might more profitably be employed in the acquirement of other branches of knowledge.—The Earl of CARNARVON thought that the Bill to be effective should be compulsory. On a division the amendment was negatived by 34 to 23. The Bill was then read a second time. The Turnpike Acts Continuance Bill, the Militia Pay Bill, the Registration of Deeds (Ireland) Bill, the Justices Proceedings (Sussex) Bill, the Expiring Laws Continuance Bill, the Highways Acts Continuance Bill, the Ionian Act of Parliament Repeal Bill, and the Turnpike Trusts Arrangements Bill were read a second time.—On the motion for the second reading of the Poisoned Flesh Prohibition Bill, Lord WODEHOUSE said that it was necessary in the country to use poison for the destruction of rats, but if the Bill passed no poison could be laid for rats outside a dwelling house, not even in a garden.—The Duke of BUCCLEUCH said that the custom of throwing strychnine about for vermin led to the destruction of shepherd's dogs, which ate the poisoned vermin.—Lord TAUNTON concurred as to the danger arising from the use of strychnine as a poison for vermin.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE said that pheasants were poisoned by eating worms generated in the bodies of poisoned animals. It was a curious but well known fact in natural history that though these worms did not die from the effects of the poison, they communicated it to birds.—Lord WODEHOUSE moved that the Bill be read a second time that day three months. It was very right to pass such a Bill as that of last session to prevent the poisoning of small birds, which were exceedingly useful, and if this were a measure to prevent the poisoning of foxes, without including noxious animals, he should not oppose it. But his opinion was that to accomplish a useful object, they were proposing a measure which would cause serious injury and inconvenience.—Lord PORTMAN said there were one or two points in the Bill which were well worthy of consideration, and it might be possible in committee to meet the objections. If a clause with regard to poisoned flesh had been inserted in the Poisoned Grain Bill of last session he had no doubt that it would have passed. The practice of keepers in his part of the country was to poison rabbits with strychnine and to place them for the purpose of killing other animals, and it was quite possible that children finding the dead rabbits might take them home, and that they might be eaten by the family. On a division, there were for the second reading, 31; against it, 18. The Bill was accordingly read a second time. The Sale of Gas (Scotland) Bill, the Naval Discipline Bill, and the Local Government Act (1858) Bill, passed through committee. The Mutual Surrender of Criminals (Prussia) Bill, the Thames Embankment (Metropolis Improvement) Loan Bill, the Isle of Man Harbours Act Amendment Bill, and the Militia Ballot Suspension Bill were read a third time and passed.

FRIDAY.—Middle-class Education.—In answer to Lord BROUGHAM, Earl GRANVILLE said that Government intended to appoint a Royal Commission to inquire into the subject of Middle-class Schools. The Holy Alliance.—Lord STRATFORD DE REDCLIFFE called attention to the rumours concerning the supposed revival of the so-called Holy Alliance, and inquired whether her Majesty's Ministers have any information thereon which may be communicated to Parliament without prejudice to the public service. He said that the influence and danger of such an Alliance was not confined to the nations in which it originated, and in the present state of European affairs their lordships could not rest unmindful of such proceedings.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY.—Relations with Brazil.—Lord PALMERSTON stated, in reply to Mr. OSBORNE, that there was no present intention to appoint a consul at Rio; and that the consul at Bahia would ad interim transact the consular business there. He also added that the Government did not intend to propose the repeal of the Brazilian Slave Act of 1845. Ionian Islands.—Mr. B. COCHRANE called attention to the discrepancies between the statements made by her Majesty's Government and those of the advisers of the King of Greece respecting the conditions on which the Ionian Islands have been annexed to Greece, and also to the convention respecting the claims of British subjects and others, signed at London in March last.—Mr. LAYARD stated that he hoped the Greek Government would do justice to the pensioners, and that some satisfactory arrangement would be made with the British bondholders. At the same time he felt that her Majesty's Government was not bound to interfere between the Government of Greece and its private creditors. Among other subjects discussed on the question of supply were the alleged ill treatment of a lunatic in the Clonmel Asylum; the resolutions and proceedings of the Union Assessment Committees, and the necessity of assisting their operation; and the unsatisfied claims of British subjects on the Government of Portugal. The House then went into Committee of Supply, and proceeded with the consideration of the remaining Civil Service Estimates.—The vote of 500*l* for the Royal Academy of Music led to an animated discussion, Mr. OSBORNE and others contending that, if the Government were to endow private institutions of this kind, it could not refuse similar assistance to academies of music at Dublin, Edinburgh, and other large cities throughout the United Kingdom, and possibly to schools of cookery, which, it was suggested, were required far more than institutions devoted to the arts. On a division the vote was affirmed by 52 to 42. Several other votes were agreed to.—Mr. CARDWELL stated that the vote for the West Coast of Africa would be taken on Monday, after the vote for the packet service. The resolution on Works and Fortifications were reported. The Report of the Committee of Ways and Means was brought up and agreed to, and a Bill ordered to be brought in. The Public Works (Manufacturing Districts) Bill and the Westminster Bridge Traffic Bill were read a second time. The Turnpike Trusts Arrangements Bill, the Ionian States Acts of Parliament Repeal Bill, and the Harwich Harbour Act Amendment Bill were read a third time and passed. Other Bills were forwarded a stage.

MONDAY.—Casual Poor.—Mr. C. VILLIERS stated, in reply to Mr. Lyall, that he would on Tuesday lay upon the table a Bill to carry out the special recommendations of the Poor-law Commissioners relating to the relief of the casual poor in the metropolis. Denmark and Prussia.—Mr. AYRTON inquired whether her Majesty's Government had intimated to that of Prussia that if the latter insisted upon departing from the treaty which settled the limits of the Germanic Confederation, this country would not hold itself bound by that article of the Treaty of 1815 under which England guaranteed to Prussia the peaceable possession of her Saxon provinces.—Lord PALMERSTON said that no communication of that nature had been made to the Prussian Government, and he did not think it would be expedient to follow the example of that Power. Prussia considered herself entitled to repudiate the Treaty of 1852 on the ground of the nonfulfilment by Denmark of certain obligations which had no relation to that treaty, and her Majesty's Government were not prepared to follow that example by repudiating the Treaty of Vienna because of totally irrelevant transactions that had taken place in 1864.—Sir J. PAKINGTON wished to know what was the exact position of the Treaty of 1852.—Lord PALMERSTON said the position of that treaty was the same as that of any other the conditions of which had been found by the signataries to be inexpedient to enforce. The contracting parties to the Treaty of 1852 had been taking part in negotiations the object of which was to modify its provisions, and in the late Conference all parties were willing, by common consent, to effect such a modification.—On the order for going into Committee of Supply, Mr. OSBORNE called attention to our Relations with Brazil, and condemned the operation of the Aberdeen Act of 1845, which he contended ought to be repealed. Lord Truro had pronounced it opposed to the principles of international law, and its action, combined with the overbearing language of the Government in Parliament, was irritating to the Brazilians in the extreme. Let that treaty be expunged from the statute book, and Brazil would be too happy to enter into a commercial treaty and a postal convention with us; but, so long as it remained in force, so long would it be a source of annoyance equally unfortunate to Brazil and injurious to the trade of this country.—Lord PALMERSTON deprecated discussion at that moment, seeing that Ministers through the Portuguese Government were negotiating the reestablishment of diplomatic relations with Brazil. He did not believe that the Aberdeen Act had any injurious effect upon the commerce of England with that country; and although he admitted that the Brazilian slave trade had ceased since the regulations adopted in 1852, it should not be forgotten that out of a population of seven millions and a half, upwards of three millions were slaves.—Mr. S. FITZGERALD congratulated Lord Palmerston on the moderate tone of his language as contrasted with that of last week, in which he spoke of the conduct of the Brazilian Government as flagitious and disgraceful. He believed that that Government was using every effort in its power to carry into effect the treaty stipulations for the liberation of the emancipados.—Sir H. CAIRNS said that the impression on the part of English capitalists and merchants having an interest in Brazil were almost universally opposed to the policy of the Government. With regard to the Aberdeen Act, as a question of international law, he had never looked upon it with any other feeling than that of amazement.—Mr. NEWDEGATE complained that the Brazilian Government were endeavouring to coerce the House into the repeal of the Aberdeen Act by persecuting English residents in Brazil, and he mentioned in particular the case of Mr. Christie, our late Minister at Rio, and of a Mr. Reeves. He also denounced the corruption of the legal tribunals of the country, and described the internal slave trade as of a most iniquitous and inhuman character.—Mr. T. BARING described the policy of the Government towards Brazil as taunting, irritating, and unfortunate.—Mr. PACKE brought under notice the report of the inspector of reformatories on the state of the St. Bernard's Reformatory at Whitwick, in Leicestershire, and to the recent outbreak among the inmates of that establishment, which he described as a nuisance to the neighbourhood.—Sir G. GREY described the precautions taken by the Government to prevent the recurrence of similar outbreaks.—Lord J. MANNERS and Mr. NEWDEGATE expressed their hope that the institution would be removed from the county altogether.—Mr. HEYGATE saw no necessity for so extreme a course. The House then went into committee on the remaining Civil Service Estimates. The vote for the Packet Service estimate and a vote to pay off Exchequer Bills were agreed to. The vote of 14,355*l*. on account of civil establishments on the West Coast of Africa led to some discussion on the Ashantee expedition, and Sir J. HAY moved the reduction of the vote by 2500*l*.—Mr. ADDERLEY gave notice that, early next session, he would move that the whole subject be referred to a select committee. Ultimately the amendment was withdrawn, and the vote was agreed to.—On the motion of Lord C. PAGET, a supplementary navy estimate, amounting to 220,000*l*., was agreed to for the purchase of the Steam Rams at Birkenhead. The whole of the supplies having thus been voted, the Chairman quitted the chair. On the motion for going into committee on the New Zealand (Guarantee of Loan) Bill, Sir JOHN TRELAWNY moved, as an amendment, that a select committee be appointed to inquire into the relative financial position of Great Britain and the colony, with a view to adjusting any outstanding balances and other matters connected therewith. On a division, the amendment was negatived by 79 to 32, and the Bill went through committee, after an ineffectual attempt of Mr. Morrison to reduce the amount of the guarantee from 1,000,000*l*. to 500,000*l*. The Fortifications (Provisions for Expenses) Bill was read a second time. The Bleaching and Dyeing Works Act Extension Bill, the Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c., Bill, the Portsmouth Dockyard (Acquisition of Lands) Bill, the Militia Pay Bill, the Sheriff's Substitute (Scotland) Bill, and the Bank Notes, &c., Signature Bill were read a third time and passed. Several other Bills were advanced a stage.

TUESDAY.—At the morning sitting the Report of Supply was brought up and agreed to. The Improvement of Land Act (1864) Bill and the Contagious Diseases Bill passed through committee. The Appropriation Bill was brought up and read a first time. Reports of Inspectors of Schools.—On the resumption of business in the evening, Lord PALMERSTON gave notice that he intended on Monday to move that the House, having considered the Report of the Select Committee on the practice of the Committee of Council with respect to the reports of her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools, was of opinion that the resolution of the House on the 12th April should be rescinded. The Prussians in Jutland.—In reply to Mr. WYLD, Mr. LAYARD stated that the Government had received information that Prussian troops had fired upon the Norwegian mail-steamer at Frederickshaven, in Jutland; but it was not stated that there were English passengers on board, or that the vessel was landing passengers. The explanation of the circumstance was that the Prussian forces had mistaken the steamer for a Danish vessel engaged in the landing of troops.—Mr. WYLD said there were several British subjects on board, who were placed in the utmost jeopardy by the firing. Canada.—In answer to Sir J WALSH, Mr. CARDWELL said that it was intended by the new Government of Canada, during the coming recess, to mature a measure for settling the constitution of the provinces by the application of the Federal principle to Canada itself, and the introduction into the union of the maritime provinces of the western territory. When these measures were matured they would be communicated to Parliament. Japan.—In answer to Mr. S. FITZGERALD the Marquis of HARTINGTON said that two companies of a British regiment had been despatched from Hong Kong to Japan, and that the total British force in the latter country, irrespective of marines, was now 800 men. The Kaffirs.—Mr. VANSITTART asked whether there was any truth that we were on the eve of another Kaffir war.—Mr. CARDWELL replied that he had not read a telegram on the subject in the evening papers, and that no information of the kind had reached the Government.—Mr. MAGUIRE moved for a Select Committee to inquire into the present position of the Paper Manufacture of Great Britain with respect to foreign taxation. He contended that owing to the operation of the treaty with France the British papermaker found himself unable to compete with the foreigner, as, although we boasted of having accepted free trade in its widest latitude, we exposed one branch of our industry to all the evils of the protective system. Owing to the export duty on rags the manufacturers of paper were placed at a disadvantage which neither improved machinery nor increased energy could counterbalance. He also read a number of letters from papermakers in various parts of the kingdom, giving a most discouraging account of their prospects and stating that, unless some remedial measures were adopted by the Government, ruin must inevitably overtake them.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said that if Mr. Maguire would renew his motion next session, and the House were disposed to agree to it, the Government would offer no opposition. He did did not deny that there was considerable distress in particular branches of the paper manufacture, such as papers for printing and the middling and ordinary descriptions, which were those most liable to be brought into competition with the foreign article; but there was no ground for asserting that the entire paper trade of the kingdom was on the brink of ruin. Of the remedial measures that had been suggested, one was by making representations to foreign Governments with a view to induce them to remove the export duty on rags. France was the chief rag-exporting country in Europe, and since making his financial statement in the spring he was happy to say that much progress had been made in that direction, and but for the agitation set on foot by the British papermakers themselves, and the motion now before the House, the probability was that before many days or weeks had elapsed France would have made the concession urged upon her. Mr. SURTEES expressed the satisfaction with which he had heard the statement of the Chancellor of the Exchequer.—Lord H. Montagu did not think that Mr. Maguire had made out a case for inquiry.—Colonel DICKSON, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. BLACK, and Sir M. FARQUHAR urged on the Government the importance of granting a committee of inquiry. The motion was then withdrawn. Armour Plated Ships.—Sir F. SMITH moved an address to her Majesty, praying that she will issue a commission to consider the various systems now existing of constructing and armour-plating ships of war for the British navy, as well as for the navies of other maritime Powers, and to report what should be the system to be now adopted for the British navy. He criticised the proceedings of the Admiralty, and complained that no fixed principles of construction and armament had been laid down, whilst the expense incurred by the country in mere experiments was enormous, without any commensurate increase of efficiency to the service. He wished to know whether the Admiralty were aiming at speed, at weight of armament, or at power of resistance.—Lord C. PAGET said that in the midst of constant changes and improvements in the construction and armament of ships, the report of a Commission would come too late. The English armour-plated ships were quite equal, if not superior, to those of any other nation. He could not deny that our ships cost more, but this disadvantage was fully counterbalanced by their superior workmanship and durable qualities. As to the use of steel shot, the matter had not been lost sight of in connection with the construction of guns; and he believed that both in ships and guns we were not at all behind any other Power.—Sir J. HAY thought it would be desirable that a commission should report upon the description of ship that would be most available, first, for our protection at home, and next, for the protection of our commerce abroad. The requirements of ships were, a high rate of speed, great weight of armament, and facility of movement when in action. With these were also combined the questions of draught for our iron ships, and how they were to be coppered. As to targets, guns, and shot, he considered that these were matters over which the Government had been too long pausing.—Mr. LAIRD said that at present we were in so unsafe a position that if we were to go to war with the Federal States of America we should have to use all our dockyard resources to obtain vessels capable of crossing the Atlantic and competing with the so-called fast ships. If we had merely such vessels as those employed in the African squadron the fate of the Alabama would soon overtake them.—Sir S. M. PETO said that the only remedy was a reconstruction of the Admiralty.—Sir J. PAKINGTON opposed the motion on the ground that it would relieve the Admiralty from responsibility.—Sir F. SMITH withdrew the motion.—Sir F. KELLY obtained leave to bring in a Bill for the further prevention of Bribery at Elections of members to serve in Parliament. Casual Poor.—Mr. VILLIERS obtained leave to bring in a Bill to make provision for distributing the charge of relief to certain classes of poor persons over the metropolis. On the motion of the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER leave was given to bring in a Bill to amend an act of the present session relating to certain Stamp Duties. The Criminal Justice Act (1855) Extension Bill passed through Committee. The Book Post Bills (Ireland) Bill and the Cathedral Minor Corporations Bill were read a second time.

WEDNESDAY.—The Inns of Court Bill, the Appeal in Criminal Cases Act Amendment Bill, and the Private Bill Costs Bill were withdrawn.—Mr. COLLINS moved the second reading of the Facilities for Divine Service in Collegiate Schools Bill, sent down from the Lords.—Mr. HARDCASTLE moved that the Bill be read a second time that day three months. He opposed it on the ground that it would enable the masters of the smaller schools to have full religious service morning and evening, and to administer the Lord's Supper to the children separate and apart from their parents; and that, in the case of King Edward's schools, it would have an injurious effect upon Nonconformists, and practically exclude their children from the advantages of these institutions.—Mr. KINNAIRD seconded the amendment.—The Bill was also opposed by Mr. R. MILLS and Mr. NEATE, and supported by Mr. F. POWELL.—Sir G. GREY thought that the alarm which the Bill had excited among Nonconformists had been somewhat exaggerated. Looking, however, at the principle involved, he recommended that the Bill should be referred to a Select Committee and re-introduced next session.

—Mr. Collins expressed his willingness to accede to the suggestion. The amendment and original motion were then withdrawn, and the order for the second reading discharged. The Income Tax Assessment Bill, the Consolidated Fund (Appropriation) Bill, the Stamp Duties Act (1864) Amendment Bill, and the Poor Relief (Metropolis) Bill were read a second time. The Contagious Diseases Corporations Bill, the Corn Accounts and Returns Bill, the Poor Removal Bill, and the Indian Medical Service Bill passed through Committee. The West Indian Incumbered Estates Act Amendment Bill, the Ex Eondis (1,000,000*l.*) Bill, and the Clerks of the Peace Removal Bill were read a third time and passed.—Mr. Monsell obtained leave to introduce a Bill for the Recording of Titles in Ireland.—The Marquis of Hartington obtained leave to bring in a Bill to extinguish certain rights of way through the Land Portgate Ravelin and Glacis, and the Sallyport adjacent thereto, at Portsea Island.

Tuesday.—Passports in France.—In answer to Sir W. Fraser, Mr. Layard said that the French Government had removed all restrictions upon British subjects travelling in France. French visés were not required for the passports of Englishmen, and the passport was only asked for to identify nationality. Although passports were not strictly necessary, he would, however, advise travellers to provide themselves with them. The countries where passports were no longer required were Bavaria, Belgium, Denmark, Holland, France, Italy, Prussia, and Sweden and Norway. Japan.—In reply to a question, Lord C. Paget said that her Majesty's ship Conqueror was sent to Japan on the 21st of December with a limited crew and a force of 500 marines. This step had been taken in accordance with the decision of the Cabinet. The Indian Budget.—In Committee of the whole House, Sir C. Wood made his annual statement in reference to the revenue and expenditure of India. He congratulated the House and the country on the fact that the experience of the past year had more than confirmed the anticipations he had ventured to hold out at the corresponding period in 1863. During the three years ended April, 1862, the equilibrium of Indian finance had been so nearly restored that upon a revenue charge of 49 millions the difference was only 50,000*l.* At the close of the year ended April, 1863, instead of a deficit, the amount showed a surplus of upwards of 1,500,000*l.*, and for the year ended April last a surplus of 257,000*l.*; whilst Sir Charles Trevelyan looked forward to a surplus for the current year of 823,000*l.* This result had been accomplished mainly by the reductions effected in Indian expenditure, and notwithstanding a considerable remission of the extra taxation imposed during the mutiny. In addition to this, a large amount of debt had been discharged, consisting of a temporary loan in this country of one million and a half; India bonds, a quarter of a million; and India debentures, five millions and a half; so that there had been paid off in this country in the course of the last year 7,813,000*l.*, and 1,000,000*l.* in India; or a total of 8,813,000*l.* Further, he had the satisfaction of stating that this had been produced without reducing the estimated balance in the Indian Treasury, which, including 4,500,000*l.* at home, now amounted to 19,000,000*l.* The various sources from which the revenue was derived—opium, salt, customs, and land—were all in a healthy and thriving condition during the year; and there had been an increased expenditure of one million for public works, half a million for the improved survey and assessment for the land revenue with a view to facilitating the purchase and transfer of land, and a further half million for the administration of public justice. He detailed the various measures of internal administration adopted by the Government of India with a view to developing the natural resources of the country, including the construction of public works, the encouragement given to railways, the establishment of the electric telegraph, the impulse imparted to cotton cultivation, and the introduction and successful culture of tea and cinchona. With regard to politics, he said that tranquillity prevailed within our own territories in India. He traced the origin of the late operations against the fanatical tribes beyond the Punjab frontier, from the time of the Mahomedan schismatic, Syed Ahmed, to that of the Akhoond of Swat, their present head, and adverted to the quarrel with the chief of Bootan and his treatment of Mr. Eden, indicating the inexpensive measures to be adopted to bring the chief to reason, by occupying the passes of his territory, and cutting off his communications and supplies. In conclusion, he moved a series of resolutions declaratory of the financial condition of the respective presidencies and territories, showing that the net revenue of the several presidencies for the year ended the 30th of April, 1863, amounted to 36,662,867*l.*, and the charges thereof to 24,968,240*l.* leaving a surplus of revenue of 11,694,627*l.* From the latter were, however, to be deducted interest on the registered debt (8,350,680*l.*), and the charges defrayed in England on account of the Indian territory in the same period, including interest on the capital of railway and other companies (6,515,601*l.*)—leaving the net surplus of Indian income for the year 1,827,346*l.*—Mr. H. Seymour looked upon the statement as, on the whole, highly satisfactory; at the same time, he expressed his regret that greater encouragement was not given by the Indian Government to induce Englishmen to settle in the country.—Mr. J. B. Smith urged the importance of opening up the River Godavery, which was one of the natural highways of India, but which was navigable for 100 miles only out of 2600.—Mr. Crawford directed attention to the excessive export duty on saltpetre, the consumption of which, he said, had fallen away in consequence.—A desultory debate ensued, in the course of which Mr. Vansittart, Mr. Bazley, Mr. Torrens, Sir H. Willoughby, Colonel Sykes, and others expressed generally their satisfaction at the statement of Sir C. Wood, but agreed in condemning the system by which the Indian budget is delayed until the expiring days of the session. The resolutions were ultimately agreed to, and the House resumed. On the motion for going into committee on the Consolidated Fund (Appropriation) Bill, the Chancellor of the Exchequer took the opportunity to rectify the figures of the financial statement for the year 1864-65, as already laid before the House, and explained that the estimated balance of 328,000*l.* had been reduced by the purchase of the iron-clads to the sum of 55,000*l.* At the same time he saw no reason whatever for under-estimating the revenue which he hoped would be realised in the course of the current year. The Treaty of Vienna.—Mr. Ayrton called attention to the balance of power in Europe, for the maintenance of which the army supplies are appropriated, and entered a protest in the name of the people of England against the enormous expenditure which was annually incurred to maintain the Treaty of Vienna, the conditions of which Prussia had violated with impunity, and with a want of faith that constituted her eternal disgrace. He contended that we were no longer bound to guarantee to Prussia the portion of Saxony which that Treaty had given her.—Sir J. Fergusson condemned the foreign policy of her Majesty's Ministers as tending to encourage Prussia to break through her treaty engagements.—Lord Palmerston said that he was by no means prepared to defend the conduct of Prussia, but that the transactions which had taken place between Austria and Prussia on the one hand, and Denmark on the other, could not relieve us from any obligations which we, in common with other Powers, had entered into to guarantee to Prussia, under the Treaty of Vienna, a portion of Saxon territory. The Bill then passed through Committee.—On the order for the third reading of the Ionian Islands (Guarantee of Loan) Bill, Mr. Whalley called upon the Government to give an explicit answer to the question whether Governor Sir George Grey had not attributed the war in New Zealand to the machinations of the Roman Catholic priests.—Mr. Hennessy moved that the Bill be read a third time that day month. He cited testimonies favourable to the character of the Maories, and denounced the war, which, he said, compromised the honour of the country.—Mr. Cardwell reminded the House that the hostile natives occupied a very limited part of the colony, and he read a statement of Governor Grey as to the real origin of the war, the object of which was to put down a conspiracy by a small minority of the natives. On a division the amendment was negatived by 75 to 32. The Bill was then read a third time and passed. The House went into Committee on the Fortifications (Provision for Expenses) Bill, when the Marquis of Hartington made a short explanatory statement, in which he described the progress and condition of the works. The clauses of the Bill were agreed to after considerable discussion, chiefly in reference to the Central Arsenal and the Fortifications of Pembroke, Lord Palmerston stating that nothing would be done in regard to the Central Arsenal without the sanction of Parliament, Sir J. Hay's motion for the omission of Pembroke from the schedule being negatived on a division.

Friday.—The Consolidation Fund (Appropriation) Bill was read a third time and passed. Indian Medical Service Bill.—On the consideration of this Bill, as amended, Mr. Hennessy moved as an amendment an additional clause providing that any person being a natural born subject of her Majesty, who may be desirous of being appointed an assistant surgeon in the Indian army shall be examined as a candidate for such appointment. On a division the amendment was negatived by 31 to 11. The Lords' amendments to the Railways (Ireland) Acts Amendment Bill, and the Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Bill were considered and agreed to. The Defence Act Amendment Bill passed through committee and was ordered to be read a third time on Monday.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Wimbledon Rifle Meeting.—On Friday the firing for the Queen's Cup, the Alexandra, and the Extra Prizes was continued, the first stage of the Queen's prize being concluded with the exception of firing off the ties. On Saturday considerable progress was made in the shooting for the Queen's Prize, the Alexandra, and others; but the only prize decided was the Cup of the Enfield Association, which was won by Sergeant Aldridge of the 4th Dorset. The Owl prize was shot for on Saturday night, and the arrangements made for it, with the various lamps to indicate danger or safety, had a pleasing effect. There were 18 competitors, but only two succeeded in knocking out the Owl's eye. On Sunday morning the Archbishop of York preached in the round tent to a congregation of about 3000 persons. On Monday the great event was the contest between the Houses of Lords and Commons, which took place in the presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales, and an immense concourse of spectators. The House of Lords was represented by the Marquis of Abercorn, the Earl of Aberdeen, the Earl of Airlie, Lord Bolton, Lord Dufferin, Earl Spencer, Earl of Ducie, Earl of Eldon, Viscount Lismore, Lord Suffield, and Lord Vernon. The Commons were represented by Lord Bury, Lord Grosvenor, Captain Wyndham, Mr. Talbot, Mr. Forster, Mr. Duncombe, Lord Elcho, Mr. Dillwyn, Mr. Vivian, Mr. Malcolm, and Mr. Humberstone. The Lords scored 249 at 200 yards, and 219 at 500, making a total of 468; and the Commons scored 228 at 200 yards, and 200 at 500, making a total of 428. The Lords therefore won by 40 points. The highest score was won by the Earl of Ducie who made 27 points. When the numbers were proclaimed, Lord Elcho, on the part of the Commons, called for "three cheers for the Lords, and bad luck to them next year!" whereupon Earl Ducie replied by calling for "three cheers for the Commons, and better luck to them next year." On Tuesday the contest for the Queen's Prize and that for the Ashburton Shield between the representatives of the public schools were decided. The former was won by Private Wyatt of the 1st London Brigade, who scored 60, beating Colonel Halford of the Leicester Rifles by one. The Ashburton Shield was won by Harrow, beating Cheltenham, Rugby, and Marlborough. Earl Spencer's Cup for the best shot of the respective elevens of the Public Schools was won by Corporal Thornton, of Cheltenham College. On Wednesday the chief feature of the shooting was the competition for the Mont Storm prizes, in addition to which the firing off the ties for the other prizes was proceeded with. On Thursday the great event was the shooting in the international match for Lord Elcho's Shield, between eight English and eight Scotch volunteers. The match resulted in a victory for the Scotch by a majority of 25. The English were the victors in the last and previous year; and this is the first time that the shield given by Lord Elcho has been won by his countrymen. The failure of the English party is mainly due to the unusually bad practice made by Lord Bury, who was disabled when taking his first shot by the fall of the pole which supports the wind-screen, giving him a severe blow in the mouth, and knocking out, it is said, one of his lordship's teeth. A fatal accident, the first that has occurred at these meetings, took place during the day. A private in the Coldstream Guards, who was employed as a marker at one of the pool targets for 500 yards, was shot through the body by a sergeant connected with the School of Musketry. He was immediately borne to the surgeon's tent, where it was at once seen that the wound was mortal. The sergeant was taken into custody and sent to London, to be dealt with by the authorities at the Horse Guards. Yesterday morning Mr. Wakley had a long interview with Dr. Westmacott, the surgeon to the Association, and gave it as his decided opinion that the death of the unfortunate man was inevitable. It is understood that this melancholy event will materially alter the programme for the proceedings of to-day. There will be no firing to disturb the wounded man should he still survive, so that every chance for his recovery may be given.

Intervention in America.—An influential deputation from the Society for Obtaining the Cessation of Hostilities in America waited on Lord Palmerston on Friday for the purpose of urging her Majesty's Government to take steps to bring about peace between the belligerents. The deputation consisted of the Marquis of Clanricarde, the Bishop of Chichester, Lord Alfred Churchill, M.P., Mr. Yorke, M.P., Mr. Marsh, M.P., Mr. Repton, M.P., Colonel Grey, M.P., Mr. Danby Seymour, M.P., Mr. Spence of Liverpool, Admiral Anson, Sir Henry de Hoghton, Bart., Mr. Bramley Moore, M.P., and other gentlemen. The deputation having been introduced by the Marquis of Clanricarde, the hon. secretary submitted the resolutions adopted by the Society. Lord Palmerston, in reply, said that two facts were abundantly clear,—viz., that the war was cruelly destructive to the Americans themselves, and the inconvenience caused by it to other nations was excessive. The question remained, whether the Government had any rational ground for supposing that the Federal Government would listen to any proposals of mediation at the present moment. There was an old couplet—

"They who in quarrels interpose,
Will often wipe a bloody nose."

He was not afraid of a bloody nose, but he feared that premature efforts would only have the effect of exasperating the North, and making it more difficult, when the passions were a little calmed, to effect the object all must have in view. The Government was led to think, from all accounts that reached them, that this was not the moment at which any mediatory proposals could be usefully made. Each party was equally confident of ultimate success, and the North especially jealous of interference. If, however, at any future time reasonable ground could be shown for supposing that friendly suggestions would be listened to, her Majesty's Government would be happy to use their efforts to arrive at such a desirable result as that of terminating this unhappy war. Admiral Anson, the chairman of the Society, having thanked his lordship for his courtesy, the deputation withdrew.

THE LATE SIR CHARLES BARRY, R.A.—A memorial tablet to Sir Charles Barry has just been erected in the nave of Westminster Abbey, over the spot where the distinguished architect of the Houses of Parliament lies buried. It consists of a large cross let into a massive slab of black marble about 12 feet in length by 5 feet in width, with the following inscription on the cross:—"Sacred to the memory of the late Sir C. Barry, R.A., F.R.S., architect of the New Palace at Westminster and other buildings, who died on the 12th May, 1860, aged 64 years, and lies buried beneath this brass." The following text is also inscribed round the outside of the marble slab:—"Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord and not unto men, for ye serve the Lord Christ."

EXPERIMENTS AT SHOEBURYNESS.—The artillery experiments that have been going on for some time past have now assumed an unusual degree of interest. The competition between the Whitworth and Armstrong guns has been followed by experiments with the guns of Mr. Lancaster, Mr. Lynell Thomas, Mr. Scott, and other inventors. The select committee have now on the ground four guns, the same in material, length, and calibre, differing only in their rifling, and the committee expect to decide betwixt them in the course of three weeks. In addition to this a 100-pounder gun has been tried, which was found capable of smashing in a target of 6½ feet iron plate, and about three yards of oak backing. This was done at 200 yards, and according to the calculation of the scientific men present, the same effect would be produced at 4000 yards, by merely increasing the charge of powder. On Monday the 600-pounder attained a range of 7372 yards, the weight of the cast-iron shot used being 513 lb., the charge 70 lb. and the utmost elevation 20 degrees 9 minutes. The 7-inch gun competition has resulted so far in showing the superiority of the Lancaster gun over its competitors rifled on the French, the Scott, and other systems.

LAYING THE FIRST STONE OF THE THAMES EMBANKMENT.—On Wednesday Mr. Thwaites, the Chairman of the Metropolitan Board of Works, laid the first stone of the Thames Embankment, in the presence of the Right Hon. W. Cowper and Lord John Manners, the present and late Commissioners of Works, and of a large number of the members and officers of the Board. The stone was laid opposite Whitehall Stairs, in that portion of the Embankment which is now in progress between Westminster and Hungerford Bridges. At the conclusion of the ceremony Mr. Cowper proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Thwaites, and described the work as one of the great undertakings of the day. Lord J. Manners seconded the vote, and a similar vote was passed to Mr. Bazalgette, who was warmly congratulated on the ability displayed by him as engineer of the Embankment.

THE LATE MURDER IN A RAILWAY CARRIAGE.—A clue has at last been found to the track of the murderer of the late Mr. Briggs, and there is now no doubt that he will be brought to justice. His name is Franz Müller, a native of Cologne, 25 years of age, and for some time past he has been employed as a journeyman tailor in the firm of Messrs. Hodgkinson, hosiers, of Threadneedle Street. A few months ago he commenced paying his addresses to the sister of a cabman near the Harrow Road station, and on calling there on Monday week he produced a gold chain, which he said he had bought that morning, and gave the paper box which had contained it to the cabman's child. At the same time he said that he had been very unfortunate, that a cart having passed near his foot he had sprained his ankle, and that he was going to Canada. On seeing the accounts of the murder the cabman examined the box which had contained the chain, and saw that it bore the address of Mr. Death, the jeweller at whose shop it was exchanged. He immediately gave notice to the police, who went on Tuesday to the house at which Müller had lodged at Old Ford, Bow, and there obtained from one of the other lodgers a pawn ticket which he had bought of Müller. The ticket related to the gold chain Müller received from Mr. Death, and which Müller had pledged in a pawnshop in Bow. It was next ascertained that the hat found in the railway carriage had been purchased for Müller by the cabman who gave the information, and by whom it was at once identified. It further transpired that Müller sailed from the London Docks on Thursday afternoon in the sailing vessel Victoria, for New York. The Police Commissioners on learning these facts sent two detective officers, Inspector Tanner and Inspector Thompson, to Bow Street, when the magistrate after hearing the evidence granted a warrant for the apprehension of Müller. Mr. Adams, the American Minister, was present during the examination, and at his request a copy of the depositions was prepared to be forwarded to the Government in America. On Tuesday night at 9 o'clock Inspector Tanner, Sergeant Clarke, Mr. Death, and the cabman started from Euston Square for Liverpool, where they embarked on Wednesday for New York by the City of Washington steamer to arrest the murderer if they overtake the ship, or more probably to await his arrival at New York, as the steamer will reach America at least four days before the Victoria. The Government will send duplicate papers, under the charge of police-officers, for the seizure and extradition of Müller at New York by the steamer of to-day, in case any accident should happen to the City of Washington. It is expected that this second steamer will also arrive at New York before the Victoria. The inquest on the body of Mr. Briggs was resumed on Monday. The evidence of the surgeon who conducted the post mortem examination completely negatived the suggestion that death was owing to natural causes. Mrs. Buchan, of Peckham, the niece at whose house Mr. Briggs had dined on the evening of his death, was also examined, and mentioned that he had been threatened some time before his death by a person to whom he had refused to lend money, and the porter at Hackney Wick station deposed that one of the passengers was in a great hurry to leave the station on the arrival of the train. The inquest was then adjourned to Monday. The police last week had a good deal of trouble in consequence of numerous false alarms of the capture of the murderer, every one of which turned out to be a hoax.

ASCENT OF THE GODARD BALLOON.—On Wednesday evening M. Godard ascended from Cremorne in the new balloon, L'Aigle, in which he recently made a successful ascent in Paris, in the presence of the Emperor of the French. The peculiarity of this balloon is that it is filled on the Montgolfier principle, not with gas, but with air rarefied by the fire of rye straw, which is kept burning in a huge furnace placed in the centre of the car. The balloon, which is 117 feet high and 95 in circumference, ascended slowly from the gardens and proceeded in a direct line towards St. Paul's, passing over the Houses of Parliament and Hungerford Bridge, where a current of air diverted it towards Greenwich, where it descended safely. Ten thousand persons assembled at Cremorne to witness the ascent. M. Godard will ascend again from the same place on Monday.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths in London in the week ending Saturday, July 16, were 1300. The average number in the corresponding week of the 10 years 1854-63, corrected for increase of population, was 1212. The present return is therefore 88 above the average. During the week the births of 955 boys and 919 girls, in all 1874 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1845.

ALDERSHOT.—The troops in camp had a field day on Wednesday in the presence of the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Cambridge, Prince Louis of Hesse, and a brilliant staff. After the inspection was finished Sir John Pennefather led the troops to an assault on a supposed enemy strongly posted on one of the hills. The movement afforded a fine display for all arms of the service, and the men being lightly accoutred, without knapsack or saddlebags, suffered less from the heat of the weather than is usual on such occasions. Including Dragoons, Hussars, Royal Artillery, Royal Engineers, Infantry, Rifles, and Military Train, there was a total of 8750 men on the ground, and 46 guns. The latter included a battery of 40-pounder Armstrong guns, which had not been before seen in military operations at Aldershot. Each gun was drawn by 12 horses, and attracted much attention.

DRIFFIELD.—Isaac Watson, servant of Mrs. Harrison, Driffield Wold, was summoned before the Rev. G. T. Clare, the Rev. R. H. Foord, and Mr. J. Grimston last week, and charged by Mrs. Harrison's manager with refusing to attend church on Sunday, after being requested by his mistress to do so. The defendant was ordered to attend some place of worship, and to pay 9*s.* 6*d.* costs.

GUILDFORD.—The recent outrage in a railway carriage between Weybridge and this town was on Friday brought before a court of Surrey magistrates at Kingston, when Miss Moody, Mr. Stokes, and other witnesses were examined. The prisoner was committed for trial, but admitted to bail in his own recognisances of 50*l.* and two sureties of 250*l.* each. His father and brother gave the required sureties, and he was liberated.

LEICESTER.—On Monday week Mr. Coxwell's balloon was entirely destroyed on the Leicester race-course. It appears that an amalgamated demonstration of the Foresters' Courts throughout the Midland and North-eastern Counties was held on the course, and among the attractions announced for the entertainment of the public was an ascent of Mr. Coxwell's large balloon. At 7 o'clock, the time fixed for the ascent, the balloon having been inflated, was held by a number of men while Mr. Coxwell was arranging the car and rigging, when, by some unexplained cause, the immense mass of silk was blown on one side; the balloon collapsed, and the gas escaped. The public, imagining they had been duped, set up an immense roar, and in a few seconds the balloon was torn to shreds, the police being powerless to control the mob. They next smashed the car, and afterwards set fire to the whole. A tumult took place, Mr. Coxwell was threatened, and had to be taken off the ground under the protection of the police. A man who was taken by the crowd for Mr. Coxwell had his coat torn to pieces. At the Town Hall on Monday the man who committed this assault was convicted and sent to gaol for a month, and one of the other rioters concerned in the destruction of the balloon was committed for trial at the Sessions, Mr. Coxwell being unable to identify more than one of them.

LEICESTER.—Mr. Sydney Turner, who was sent down by the Government to inquire into the state of the St. Bernard's Reformatory, has reported to the Secretary of State that the recent disorders were not due to any laxity of discipline, but rather to the discontent caused by the removal of the licence allowed under the former management of the institution. He believes that the reformatory is much wanted, is capable of being improved, and is worth another year's trial. Under this representation the Home Secretary has expressed himself willing to continue the certificate of the reformatory, but threatens to withdraw it on the next occasion of disorder among the inmates. In the meanwhile Mr. Turner is to visit the establishment at frequent intervals, and report its progress to Government. Four of the ringleaders in the recent riots were tried last week at the assizes, and sentenced to 21 days imprisonment with hard labour.

LIVERPOOL.—The Alexandra, about which so much discussion recently took place in the Court of Queen's Bench, left the Mersey on Sunday for Nassau with a general cargo of merchandise. Her name, however, has been changed, and she is now called the Mary, and is to be a trader between the Mersey and Nassau.

NORWICH.—The stoppage of the East of England Bank was announced on Wednesday. This is a joint-stock bank having its head office in this city, and 20 branches in neighbouring towns. Its liabilities are estimated at more than 600,000*l.*, and it is supposed that the deficiency will be twice as much as the paid-up capital and reserve fund, amounting to 303,584*l.*, the whole of which will also be lost. The Provincial Banking Corporation have taken over the business, commenced operations at Norwich and the various branches, and have arranged to place to the credit of each customer half the amount due to him by the Bank of England Bank.

PORTLAND.—On Tuesday week an insurrection took place among the convicts now undergoing their term of imprisonment. On that day the new dietary had been introduced, which seems to have greatly dissatisfied the convicts. Everything, however, went on well enough after the men had been marched back from their work when a party employed in a quarry refused to work, and attacked one of the civic guards. The impression among the convicts appeared to be that the guards would not make use of the short Enfield rifles with which they were armed, but this proved to be a mistake. Several of the gang rushed upon their guard, attempting to knock him down with their pickaxes and shovels. The officer discharged his weapon, and slightly wounded one of the ringleaders; and by this time he had received assistance from his brother officers, the result of which was that three or four of them fired upon the men, four or five of whom were shot, receiving, however, only slight wounds. This measure had the effect of quelling the disturbance, and the rioters were marched back to the prison and confined in punishment cells. No outbreak has since taken place, but every day large numbers of men refuse to work, alleging as an excuse that sufficient food is not given them to keep up their strength. On Friday a large body of them refused to leave their sheds after dinner and resume work, and it was not until the aid of the military was obtained that they would resume their occupation. Almost every day men are marched back from the quarries hauled to the prison, and it appears that about 250 are now confined in their cells. It was expected that on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday the men would again turn mutinous, as numbers of them were severely whipped on those days, but such was not the case.

SOUTH WALES CIRCUIT: HAVERFORDWEST.—Child Murder.—Mary Prout, spinster, aged 22 years, was indicted for the wilful murder of her illegitimate child Rhoda Prout, at the parish of Amroth. From the evidence it appeared that the prisoner had been confined of the child in the Narberth workhouse, early in April, and had been discharged from the house six weeks afterwards. On May 20 she was seen with the baby in her arms near a pit called Little Pit, and two days after the dead body of the child was taken out of the pit with its skull fractured, apparently by the fall, and other serious injuries on various parts. The prisoner herself confessed that she threw the child into the pit and ran away. Evidence was given showing that several members of her family had been insane, but the medical testimony as to her actual condition pronounced her to be sane in mind. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty, coupled with a recommendation to mercy, and Mr Justice Crompton passed sentence of Death in the usual form, advising her to prepare herself for the worst. The prisoner, who appeared indifferent during the trial, was removed from the dock in a fainting state. The case has excited the greatest interest, as there has been no capital conviction and execution in Pembrokeshire for the past 50 years.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT: AYLESBURY.—The Buckingham Murder.—William John Stevens, 25, tailor, was indicted for the wilful murder of Ann Leeson, at Buckingham, on the 27th February. The prisoner and deceased had been keeping company together, and the prisoner, who was passionately fond of deceased, had got a notion that she was not behaving exactly as he thought she ought to do, and on the 27th February, about 6 o'clock, he followed her as she was going to the pump for water, and caught her in the street, put his arm round her waist, and with his right hand cut her throat from ear to ear. The poor creature ran forward into a baker's shop, and fell into the arms of the landlord, dying in about four minutes. The prisoner immediately ran into the entry of his own house and cut his own throat, from the wound in which he suffered so much that his trial had to be postponed from the last to the present assize. A boy proved that he saw the prisoner draw his hand across the throat of deceased, and directly after saw deceased run into the shop. Five witnesses, policemen and others, were called, and said that the prisoner had on many occasions told them that he had done it; that he wished he was dead instead of dear Annie; and that dear Annie was in heaven. The defence was insanity from jealousy. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty, and Baron Bramwell, after telling them that they could have returned no other verdict, passed sentence of Death upon the prisoner in the usual form.

HOME CIRCUIT: CHELMSFORD.—Child Murder—Emma Howard alias Emma Pudney, 23, a wretched-looking young woman, was indicted for the wilful murder of her child, Charles Isaac Howard, otherwise Pudney. The prisoner lived with her mother at Halstead, and had two illegitimate children, the one that lost its life being about a year and a half old, and the other four years old. She got her living by silk weaving, but at the time the offence was committed she was in a most miserable state of poverty, which had, no doubt, affected her mind, and, coupled with her mental condition in other respects, drove her to the commission of the act. On the afternoon of the 28th March she left her mother's house with her two children, stating that she could not support them, and that it was her intention to go to the union and ask for assistance. In about an hour she returned without the children, and when asked what had become of them, she replied that she hoped they were in heaven. A police constable accidentally passing the river Colne heard a child's voice cry out, "I shall fall! I shall fall!" and on going to the spot he saw the eldest child hanging by both hands from the branch of a tree and up to its neck in water, and the younger child floating in the water apparently dead. He rescued the first, and then got the second out of the water, but it was quite dead. He afterwards went to the house and asked the prisoner if it was true what he had heard respecting her children, and she replied that it was, and that she should go anywhere with him, but wished first to see her children. She then said that she first threw the younger child into the water, and held the other child to look at him while struggling in the river, and then threw him in, when he turned his face to her and called out "Mother, mother!" and she went away. According to the evidence of her mother, she had been for a considerable period before the occurrence in a low and desponding state, and fears were entertained that she would do violence to herself. Since the birth of her last child she had frequently complained of her head, and it appeared that several members of her family had been confined in a lunatic asylum. The jury returned a verdict of Not Guilty on the ground of insanity, and the prisoner was ordered to be detained during her Majesty's pleasure. Before she could be removed from the bar she cried piteously for her dead child, saying "Always a mother, always a mother," and would not be comforted till her living boy was put into her arms, when she embraced him with great affection, clinging to him and saying "Do you know me, dear? My Willie—my Willie—my dear Willie! you do love me, don't you, dear?" It was a most affecting spectacle.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT: LEICESTER.—Alleged Murder of a Son.—John Upton was indicted for the murder of his son William Upton, in January last. The strongest manifestations of popular feeling against the prisoner were made in the court and its vicinity; and at the time of the inquest the officers who had him in charge were obliged to disguise him in woman's clothes to get him away. The evidence showed that the boy was the son of the prisoner by a former wife, and being of a somewhat weak intellect he had difficulty in obtaining employment, which threw him on the hands of his father. In consequence of this there appeared to be a strong feeling of dislike to him on the part of his father and stepmother. In February the boy obtained work from a Mr. Edwards, but shortly some property was missed from Mr. Edwards's house, and as the boy was seen to be possessed of an unusual amount of money, he was taxed with the theft of the goods, and gave a very confused and contradictory explanation of how he came by his funds. His father, having heard of this, went to Mr. Edwards and pressed him very strongly to prosecute his son, but Mr. Edwards refused, and from that time till the discovery of the body in the Leicestershire Canal nothing more was seen of the boy. It was found he had received such fearful wounds upon his head and body that it was clear he had been murdered. A number of witnesses were called; but their evidence entirely failed to establish the accusation against the father of having murdered his son. At length the jury stopped the case, and Baron Bramwell declared there was not a shadow of evidence against the man, who was accordingly acquitted; but, owing to the feeling against him in the town, he was temporarily taken charge of by the police for safety.—WARWICK: Attempted Wife Murder at Birmingham.—Henry Chatfield, 20, bedstead maker, was indicted for wounding Elizabeth Chatfield, his wife, at Birmingham, on the 18th of June, with intent to murder her. It appeared from the evidence that a quarrel ensued between the prisoner and his wife, in which she refused to go home with him. Ultimately he got her home and ordered her to bed. She again refused, when he cut her throat with a razor. The wound was six inches across, and nearly half an inch in depth. She was taken to the hospital, and lay there in a precarious state for a week. The prisoner said he was sorry he had cut his wife's throat, but what he had done was in passion, and not intended. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty, and the judge sentenced him to 15 years' penal servitude.

OXFORD CIRCUIT: WORCESTER.—Attempt at Double Murder.—Walter Jones, jun., was charged with feloniously wounding police sergeant Drew, of the Worcester constabulary. This trial excited considerable interest, on account of the respectability of the prisoner and his family, and the absence of any apparent motive for the offence. He is 21 years of age, and is the son of a medical practitioner of Worcester. He had been placed in the reference office at the railway works. On the morning of the 12th April he went to the shop of Mr. Perrins, gunsmith, and stole a pistol and some ammunition. This was as early as 8 o'clock, and he was next heard of on the racecourse, where, meeting a young girl named Emma Bull, he accosted her, and asked her to walk with him. She refused, on which, pulling the pistol from his pocket, he threatened to shoot her. The girl, alarmed at the sight of the weapon, ran away, when he fired at her. It happened that at the moment Bull had in her hand a piece of an iron ploughshare, which she was holding to her side with her left hand. The ball from the pistol passed through her hand, and, striking the piece of iron, glanced off without doing further mischief. But for the girl having this bit of iron in her hand there can be little doubt that the ball would have entered her body, and in all probability killed her. The girl ran into the city, and her cries alarming several persons, a hue and cry was set up, and the prisoner was chased for some distance through a portion of the suburbs called the Moors. Some of his pursuers, however, gave up the chase on Jones presenting the pistol at them. At last police-sergeant Drew, who had joined in the pursuit, came up with the prisoner in a passage and apprehended him. Jones asked what he had done to be taken into custody for, and Drew answered "Oh, not much, I suppose, but you must come and see." They then walked together a short distance, and on Drew turning his head to see who was behind them, Jones suddenly drew the pistol from his pocket, placed the muzzle against the officer's face, and fired. The bullet passed through the officer's cheek, knocking out some of his teeth, and the shock rendered him senseless for a short time. For some days his life was in danger, but he ultimately recovered, and was able to appear in court at the trial. After he had been thus disposed of, another chase took place, and the prisoner was eventually lodged in gaol and committed for trial. The jury found the prisoner Guilty, and he was sentenced to four years' penal servitude. Two other indictments had been preferred against him, one for stealing the pistol, and the other for shooting the girl Bull, but at the suggestion of the judge, as the case had arisen out of the same transaction, they were withdrawn. This prisoner on the morning before his trial made a most determined attempt to escape from gaol by means of a rope ladder, which he had manufactured from the prison towels, which he must have abstracted from time to time, and managed to conceal, cut up, and plait up into a unique ladder. He then succeeded in picking the lock of the ward gate and possessed himself of a broom which he tied to the end of the rope, and threw over the prison wall, where it lodged under the coping stone, but he was discovered in the act of ascending.

He was born in Edinburgh, called to the Scotch bar in 1811, appointed Crown Counsel in 1825, and Steward of Kirkcudbright in 1830, elected Dean of the Faculty of Advocates in 1841, and in 1842 appointed one of the judges of the Court of Session, under the title of Lord Wood. In 1843 he was also made one of the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary. After having been 20 years on the bench, he retired in 1862.

THE REV. EDWARD WILLIAM GRINFIELD, the venerable annotator of the Septuagint, and the founder of the Old Testament prize at Oxford, died a few days since in his 80th year. He graduated B.A. in 1806, and M.A. in 1808. Shortly after his ordination in 1808–9 he published his first work, entitled "The Crisis of Religion," followed by "An Address to Protestants," "Reflections on Infidelity," "The Connection of Natural and Revealed Theology," "Sermons on the Parables," "The Bulwarks of the English Church," "The Researches of Physiology," "Thoughts on Brougham's Education Bill," "The Doctrinal Harmony of the New Testament," &c. Between 1827 and 1863 he was engaged on his famous "Novum Testamentum Hellenicæ," which cost him 15 years' work at seven hours a day, and in which there are 40,000 quotations, the author's object being to show the connection between the Septuagint and the Greek Testament. In 1848 he wrote "Scholia Hellenistica," and two years later "An Apology for the Septuagint." He was a very laborious and zealous scholar, and a few years back founded the Oxford University prize which goes by his name, for the study of the Septuagint.

Markets.

COVENT GARDEN, July 23.

Notwithstanding the present dry weather, most descriptions of outdoor produce continue abundant. Cherries, Gooseberries, Raspberries, and Strawberries, though scarcer, are still sufficient for the demand. Of Grapes and Pine Apples there is also a good supply, and Black, Red, and White Currants are plentiful. The arrivals of foreign goods comprise Apricots and West India Pine Apples, both of which, especially the latter, are abundant and cheap. Green Walnuts for pickling may now be obtained. Peas are plentiful, as are also Potatos. Asparagus fetches from 4s. to 7s. a bundle. Flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Heaths, Pelargoniums, Mignonette, and Roses.

FRUIT.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, July 18.

We have an unusually large supply of large supply of Beasts, yet choicest descriptions are not very plentiful, and consequently best qualities met with purchasers at a small reduction. There is also a considerable increase in the number of Sheep and Lambs. Prices are lower for all kinds, and many remain unsold. Calves are selling about the same as on Thursday. From Germany and Holland there are 2290 Beasts, 9300 Sheep, 437 Calves, and 100 Pigs; from Spain, 270 Beasts; from Scotland, 210 Beasts; from Ireland, 160; from Norfolk and Suffolk, 300; and 2850 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, July 21.

The number of Beasts is about the same as on Thursday last. Trade is very dull, and although we retain Monday's quotations, they are not generally obtained. There are not quite so many Sheep on offer; the demand is, however, exceeded. Several remain unsold, notwithstanding a disposition to take lower prices. There is more inquiry for Lambs, and choice qualities are selling rather better. Our foreign supply consists of 840 Beasts, 3180 Sheep, and 773 Calves. Milch Cows 95.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, July 18.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was moderate, and disposed of at fully the prices of this day sen'night. The attendance was not large, and business in foreign Wheat was limited at our last week's quotations. Barley brings an advance of 6d. to 1s. per qr. Beans and Peas are each 2s. per qr. more money. For Flour there is some inquiry at the extreme rates lately current.

FRIDAY, July 22.

Since the 15th inst. the weather has been very fine and hot. Our accounts from the country speak more favourably of the Wheat crops, and less so of the Beans and Peas. From the Continent the Wheat crop is well reported of in Italy, Hungary, France, and Germany, but the accounts from Russia are decidedly bad, and also from Ohio, Wisconsin, and Illinois. The Wheat trade during the present week has been less active, but previous prices were fully supported, and in a few markets even exceeded. All kinds of spring corn continue to advance in price, and are quoted rather dearer. Flour has been in fair request at fully late rates. Since Friday last 107 vessels have been reported off the coast. The floating trade has been very firm. Wheat for future shipment is in good demand; in consequence of the numerous arrivals, however, buyers hesitate to pay the extreme rates asked for cargoes off the coast. In Maize a large business has been done at improving prices. Paris, July 21.—There has been very little doing in Wheat and Flour, and prices are declining. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 33s. per 280 lbs. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 28,650 cwts. Wheat must be quoted 9d. per qr. cheaper. The arrivals of English and foreign Wheat and Flour this week have been small, of Barley we have no supply, that of Oats, both English and foreign, is large. The attendance at this morning's market was small. English Wheat maintained the rates of last Monday, but business in foreign was limited, nevertheless extreme prices were insisted upon for Russian qualities. Spring Corn of all descriptions was steady at Monday's quotations.

LIVERPOOL, July 19.—With only a small attendance of country buyers at to-day's market, Wheat nevertheless meets an active inquiry both for consumption and to hold over at an advance of 1d. per cental on last Friday's prices. Flour is not quotably dearer, but good brands are more difficult to buy. Indian Corn is somewhat checked by the high rates demanded. Oats and Oatmeal are both the turn dearer. Beans very steady. Peas and Barley unchanged. Market closes strong.

FRIDAY, July 22.—The market was moderately attended. Wheat quiet, and late rates barely supported in consequence of large arrivals. Flour steady. Indian Corn was in moderate demand, but without change in value. Egyptian Beans firm. Oats and Oatmeal steady.

News of the Week.

PARLIAMENT was prorogued yesterday by commission. The QUEEN'S Speech commenced by regretting that the endeavours made in concert with France, Russia, and Sweden to bring about a reconciliation between Germany and Denmark were not successful, but expressed a hope that the negotiations which have since been opened between the belligerents themselves may restore peace to the north of Europe. It then referred to the cession of the Ionian Islands, the relations with China, and the arrangement of the differences between Turkey and the Principalities. It expressed deep regret at the continuance of the civil war in America, and announced that HER MAJESTY will continue to observe a strict neutrality, and would rejoice at a friendly reconciliation between the contending parties. After an acknowledgment of the supplies voted by the House of Commons for the defence of the dockyards and arsenals, the Speech referred with satisfaction to the state of the manufacturing districts, to the revolt in New Zealand, and to the rapid development of the resources of India. It mentioned with approbation the leading measures which have become law during the session, and concluded with an expression of satisfaction that the general prosperity of the country has enabled Parliament, after making a sufficient provision for the public service, to effect a material reduction in the taxation of the country.

In the House of Lords on Friday Lord STRATFORD DE REDCLIFFE called attention to the recent rumours respecting a supposed revival of the Holy Alliance, and said that as the present state of the Continent was such that any event of that sort must be dangerous to the liberties of Europe, he hoped the Government would revert to the policy of a friendly understanding with France as the best security for the continuance of peace. Earl RUSSELL said that he had no belief in the authenticity of the published despatches, but admitted that there had been transactions in the past month which gave a certain appearance of truth to the substance of those documents. He had no apprehension that any serious danger could arise from the Holy Alliance, and could not imagine that the three Powers, seeing the changes of the times, would ever be so ill advised as to revive it in the face of all Europe. On Saturday the House held a short morning sitting, at which several Bills were advanced a stage. On Monday Earl GRANVILLE moved the second reading of the New Zealand (Guarantee of Loan) Bill, which had come up with the sanction of the Commons. The Earl of MALMESBURY condemned the measure as one of questionable policy, and said that if the colonies had to depend upon their own unaided efforts we should hear very little more of colonial wars. After some discussion the Bill was read a second time. On Tuesday the Earl of ELLENBOROUGH called attention to the great change that had taken place in foreign affairs since February last, and attributed the encroachments of Germany to the ostentatious declarations of HER MAJESTY'S Government that it would give no material aid to Denmark. He contended that every minor State of Europe had its security shaken by what had occurred in Denmark; and that, considering all the recent acts of the great military Powers, the devastation of Circassia, the oppression of Poland, and the ambiguous position of Russia and France towards England, we ought to have every means of national defence in complete preparation. Earl RUSSELL said that he did not intend to palliate the conduct of Austria and Prussia. If both sides would have listened to fair terms, these disputes might have been settled by negotiation; but Denmark had for many years persistently put herself in the wrong, and Germany would listen to no terms whatever. The question of going to war on behalf of Denmark had been decided by the House of Commons, which had approved the course of the Government in abstaining from active intervention, and he denied that the honour of England was at all involved in the contest. After some remarks from Lord STRATFORD DE REDCLIFFE the subject dropped. On Wednesday and on Thursday the House was occupied with the routine business of advancing various Bills through their different stages.

In the Commons on Friday Mr. COBDEN moved a series of resolutions condemning the recent great extension of the Government manufacturing establishments, and enforcing the principle that the Government ought not to be allowed to set up such establishments for the production of articles which could be better supplied by private manufacturers or public companies. After a long debate the motion was not pressed to a division, and the subject dropped. On Monday the Fortifications (Provision for Expenses) Bill was read a third time and passed, after some remarks by Mr. OSBORNE on the defects of our guns both for military and naval purposes. On the order for the third reading of the Indian Medical Service Bill, Mr. HENNESSY moved as an amendment that the order be discharged, on the ground that the Bill gave the Secretary of State for India the power of substituting the old system of nomination for the competitive system of which Parliament and the country generally approved. On a division the amendment was carried against the Government by 46 to 44. On the order for the third reading of the Cranbourne Street Bill, Mr. AYRTON moved as an amendment that the Bill be read a third time that day fortnight. On a division the amendment was negatived by 48 to 14, and the Bill was read a third time and passed. Mr. VILLIERS moved the order for going into Committee upon the Poor Relief (Metropolis) Bill. Mr. BOUVERIE moved as an amendment that the Bill be committed that day month. After a long discussion Mr. VILLIERS expressed his readiness to limit the operation of the Bill to the 1st of April next. On this understanding the amendment was withdrawn, and the House then went into Committee upon the Bill, and agreed to the clauses with amendments. On the order for going into committee on the Mutual Surrender of Criminals (Prussia) Bill, sent down from the Lords, Mr. J. WHITE moved, as an amendment, that the Bill be committed that day month, on the ground that under its provisions Prussia might demand the surrender of political refugees. After a long discussion the debate was adjourned. Lord PALMERSTON moved that in consequence of the recent report of the select committee exculpating Mr. LOWE from the charge of altering the reports of the Inspectors of Schools, the resolution of the 12th April be rescinded. The motion was agreed to. On Tuesday Mr. HENNESSY moved an Address to the QUEEN, praying her to grant fiat to the petition of right of Mr. O'MALLEY IRWIN, or to satisfy his claims without suit. The motion was opposed by the ATTORNEY-GENERALS for ENGLAND and IRELAND, and negatived without a division. The House was shortly afterwards counted out. On Wednesday, on the motion for the consideration of the report of the Standing Orders Revision Committee, Mr. ROEBUCK suggested that the whole question should be deferred till next Session, and moved as an amendment the adjournment of the debate. On a division the amendment was negatived by 51 to 14. The various changes recommended by the committee were then agreed to, with verbal amendments. The Mutual Surrender of Criminals (Prussia) Bill was withdrawn. On Thursday Lord E. HOWARD called attention to the extensive emigration to the United States in connection with the prolongation of the war in America, and suggested that the Government should exercise greater vigilance in putting down the organised system of fraud resorted to by Federal agents both in this country and in Ireland for entrapping British subjects into the United States army. Mr. LAYARD said that the question was a most difficult one to deal with; and that it was impossible for the Government to do more than to reiterate the caution they had given to emigrants respecting the dangers to which they would be exposed on their arrival on the other side of the Atlantic. The Partnership Law Amendment Bill was withdrawn.

From the United States we learn that the Confederate force which recently invaded Maryland, after advancing within a few miles of Baltimore and Washington, has recrossed the Potomac with immense quantities of plunder. During this incursion General LEE defeated the Federals under General WALLACE with great loss, making General TYLER prisoner, and subsequently captured a railway train, in which were General FRANKLIN and his staff.

The Black Prince landed one patient suffering from small-pox at Portland on Thursday. The Hector has joined the fleet since it left Spithead, but has since strained her starting wheel, and cannot steam astern.

ARRIVAL OF DR. LIVINGSTONE.—This distinguished traveller arrived in London on Saturday evening by the express train from Paris. He appeared to be in excellent health and spirits.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—Prince Humbert, son of the King of Italy, is expected in Paris on the 15th August. It is asserted that his Royal Highness will visit the camp at Châlons, and afterwards proceed to England. It is stated that M. Drouyn de Lhuys has addressed despatches to the French Ministers at Vienna and Berlin, to be communicated to M. de Rechberg and Count Von Bismark, touching the negotiations with Denmark. The despatches, which are said to be similar, if not identical in terms, earnestly recommend to both Governments a policy of moderation with a view to an arrangement which it will be honourable for Denmark to accept. La France of Friday evening, in an article headed "The State of Europe," says:—

"Everywhere violence supersedes right. Alliances are formed in the dark in order to re-act against the principles of our age. It is the division between the Western Powers which has rendered these alliances possible. France has no ambitious ideas, and will not concern herself with these impotent efforts of the reaction. She only sees with sorrow that the great Powers remain deaf to the generous advice that they should go forward to meet the formidable complications in which France alone on the Continent has nothing to fear, since she can hold aloof from them so long as her personal interests and her honour are not menaced."

In another article on Tuesday it says:—

"It is not the business of France to protect the treaties of 1815 from violation at the hands of those who forced them upon her. The alleged compact between the Courts of Petersburg, Vienna, and Berlin is tantamount to a confession that to mutilate Denmark, and to keep Venetia and Poland down, their own individual forces are not sufficient, and they require each other's assistance. Such an alliance would not be a threat or a challenge, far from it; it would only be a cry of distress."

A report of the Minister of War was published on Saturday, followed by an Imperial decree, modifying the administration of Algeria. The report says the insurrection was not only caused by fanaticism, but still more by an unfounded hope of surprising the vigilance of the authorities, who were believed to be disarmed, because divided in their action. The report, therefore, proposes to increase the power and responsibility of the Generals commanding divisions, making the Prefects subordinate to them, and intrusting them with the administration of the natives established beyond the limits of the communal districts. In accordance with this report the whole province is to be placed under the absolute authority of Marshal MacMahon, who will leave the Chalons camp to assume his command in the course of next month. Accounts from Algeria state that General Ismail has returned from Beja on the pretext of ill health, leaving his column with 12 cannon, blockaded by the insurgent Arabs. The Government candidates in the department of Ardêche and Dordogne have been elected by a large majority. Orders have been given to send the necessary transports to Mexico to bring back the troops that are to return from that country. The ships will leave France early in August. The Vigie, of Cherbourg, states that four Confederate men of war have been met with by merchant vessels cruising in the chops of the Channel; their names are the General Lee, the Georgia, the Florida, and the New Alabama; and two Confederate war steamers, called the Butterfly and the Paul Jones, have arrived at Ostend. The people of Cherbourg, according to the same authority, are in daily expectation of hearing of an engagement. A commission appointed to report upon the armament of the Kearsarge and the Alabama have reported in favour of men-of-war being armed with fewer guns, but of a much heavier calibre. The Minister of Marine is said to be opposed to the plan.

SPAIN.—The King will leave for Paris on the 14th of August. The Marquis de Santa Cruz and the Duke de Montezuma will accompany his Majesty. Several journals assert that at the last Council of Ministers it was resolved to act energetically in order to obtain satisfaction from Peru. The President of the Chamber of Deputies and the Minister of War have left for La Granja. Señor Mon will proceed to the Asturias shortly. A Royal decree, issued on Wednesday, appoints a committee of directors to erect a statue in honour of Christopher Columbus. It is stated that a Crédit Foncier for Spain is organising in London, with a capital of 300,000,000 reals, and that no privileges will be required from the Government.

PORTUGAL. — Owing to the scanty harvest in Portugal, it is considered probable that within a month certain ports will be opened for the free importation of foreign grain. It is officially announced that the next loan required by the Government will be offered to public competition. The King has conferred the title of Baron upon Mr. Hermann Stern, of the firm of Stern Brothers, London, in consideration of the services rendered by him to the credit of the country.

DENMARK.—M. de Quade and Colonel Kauffmann left Copenhagen last week for Vienna, as the Danish Plenipotentiaries to the Conference. At the sitting of the Folkesthing on Tuesday, the amendment of MM. Jagd and Liebe that "the Folkesthing should pass to the order of the day to avoid occasioning embarrassment to the Government," was rejected. The address was adopted by 60 votes to 21; seven members, among whom was Bishop Monrad, abstained from voting. The Fädrelandet of Tuesday states that a nine months' armistice is said to have been concluded between Denmark and the great German Powers, during which period the occupation of the Duchies by Austria and Prussia will be continued. It adds:—

"Should this news be confirmed, the arrangement must have been made by foreign mediation prior to the arrival of the Danish Plenipotentiaries, which is not improbable."

The Berlingske Tidende of Thursday states that the news published by the Fädrelandet, announcing the conclusion of a nine months' armistice between the great German powers and Denmark, is premature.

THE DANISH DUCHIES.—Captain von Hammer was taken prisoner last week in a creek off the Island of Fanoe, by the Prussian gunboat Blitz. Eight officers, 244 men, two steamers, two coasting vessels, 10 Customs' cutters, and five transport ships fell into the hands of the Prussians. The Prussian garrison in Kiel has been doubled, and patrols traverse the city every night.

WURTEMBURG.—In the Chamber of Deputies on Tuesday, Herr Oesterlein proposed a resolution to the following effect:—Solemnly to protest against the forcible occupation of Rendsburg by Prussian troops, and to request the Government, in conjunction with other States, to oppose this violence, the necessary means for that purpose being granted by the Chamber. This resolution was carried unanimously.

FRANKFORT.—In the recent vote of the Diet on the Austro-Prussian motion requiring the Prince of Augustenburg to substantiate his claims to the throne of Schleswig-Holstein, Saxony, Bavaria, Würtemburg, Darmstadt, and the 13th curia, voted in the minority against the motion, while the Saxon Duchies were in favour of the proposal, although they recognised the claims of the Duke of Augustenburg. General Hake, the commander of the Federal troops in Holstein, at the same sitting, reported to the Diet that the Prussians had informed him of their intention to occupy Rendsburg, and that, in presence of a superior force, he had resolved to withdraw the Federal garrison in order to avoid bloodshed. The Diet resolved to telegraph to General Hake, expressing their approval of his conduct, and requesting him to hand in a formal protest against the occupation. At the sitting of Thursday, convoked at the request of the representative of Prussia, he stated that he was instructed to declare that Prussia has no objection to the return of Federal troops to Rendsburg. The rumour that General Hake had been recalled is contradicted.

AUSTRIA.—The first sitting of the Conference was held on Tuesday at the Ministry for Foreign Affairs. Besides the principal plenipotentiaries of Austria, Prussia, and Denmark, Count Rechberg, Count von Bismarck, and M. de Quaade, there were also present the second plenipotentiaries, Baron Brenner, Baron Werther, and Colonel Kaufmann. At this meeting the Danish Plenipotentiary, M. de Quaade, declared that he was fully empowered to conduct the negotiations, reserving only to his Government the right of ulterior ratification. Nothing further of an official character is known, but it is rumoured in Vienna that Denmark has given up the Duchies, and abandoned the personal union, and that the costs are to be borne by the Duchies. The official Abendpost denies the rumour that Count Rechberg has caused the Austrian Ambassadors in London and Paris to declare that a complete separation of the Duchies from Denmark would be the maximum of the German demands, and that the Apenrade and Tondern line of demarcation was still possible. A Treaty of Commerce has been concluded between Austria and Mexico, securing considerable advantages to the former.

BAVARIA.—Advices from Munich state that a report is current that the young King of Bavaria intends to pass several years in the different States of Europe in the strictest incognito.

ITALY.—In the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on Friday, the Minister of the Interior read a Royal decree proroguing the Session for an indeterminate period. The Minister of Public Works, Count Louis Frederic Manabrea, has left for Vichy. General de la Marmora left Naples on Monday on leave of absence for some time.

GREECE.—The National Asembly in its sitting of Friday censured the conduct of the Minister of War as unconstitutional, in having incurred expenses not authorised by the Budget, and without previously asking the Assembly to vote the necessary credit. A Ministerial crisis is imminent.

IONIAN ISLANDS.—The deputies from Corfu and Zante to the Greek National Assembly belong to the Conservative party. They have stated that they will do all in their power to obtain the adoption by the Assembly of the principle that the King not only reigns but governs.

TURKEY.—The Porte has closed all the Protestant missionary establishments and arrested several converts. The Bible and American Missionary Societies have since been reopened, in consequence of protests addressed to the Porte by the English and American Ambassadors. The Protestant movement is said to be greatly spreading among the Mussulmans. The forthcoming Turkish Budget will show a small surplus.

DANUBIAN PRINCIPALITIES.—The Romanul has been suppressed, in consequence of the publication of further violent attacks upon the Government.

TUNIS.—Advices from Tunis represent the condition of affairs at that place as very unfavourable. The Khasnadar persists in requiring the payment of a tax of 36 piastres. The insurgents have broken up their camp. The troops of the Bey are in the neighbourhood of Tunis. In consequence of the recent attempt to murder M. Beauval, D'Espeiulle, an officer attached to the Emperor's staff, had been ordered to make an inquiry into the affair, and report thereon to His Majesty.

INDIA.—Intelligence has been received in Calcutta by telegraph from Simla, of a battle having been fought in Cabul, in which the Ameer was victorious. Two thousand are said to have been killed on each side.

CHINA.—Major Gordon's force has been disbanded. Sir Frederick Bruce is returning home.

JAPAN.—Advices from Japan state that Sir Rutherford Alcock has arranged quarters for the British troops at Jeddo.

UNITED STATES. — General Lee himself is reported to have led the force which recently invaded Maryland, and which is said to have amounted to 30,000 men. In a battle on Monocacy River, lasting throughout the whole of the 9th, he defeated General Wallace, inflicting severe loss and driving him upon Baltimore. General Tyler and 1000 prisoners were captured.. After the battle on the Monocacy the Confederates marched straight to Washington, and burnt Mr. Francis Blair's residence near the city. On the 11th and 12th they made a demonstration against Fort Stevens, after which two divisions of the 6th Corps, which had arrived from Grant's army, drove them one mile beyond that Fort. During the night of the 12th all the Confederates retired from before Washington, and recrossed the Potomac at Poolesville and Edward Ferry, with enormous stores and a large number of horses. It is reported that the Federals have crossed the Potomac in pursuit. While these events were taking place near Washington, another body of Confederates was in force near Baltimore, destroying railway bridges and telegraphs. They burnt the residences of Governor Bradford and General Cadwallader, near Baltimore, and on the 11th captured two trains, in one of which were General Franklin and Staff. General Franklin, however, has since made his escape. The Confederates are conveying the spoils of their raid through Maryland down the Shenandoah valley to Stainton, from which point the Central Railway has been completely repaired. They are also using the Orange and Alexandria Railway, as well as waggons, to transport their spoils to Richmond. All General Hunter's supplies collected at Martinsburg, valued at 3,000,000 dollars, were captured by the Confederates when Sigel evacuated that place. On the 15th the Militia which had been called out for the defence of Washington were mustered out of service by order of the President, their aid being no longer needed. General Grant having considerably weakened his forces for the relief of Washington, the Confederates at Petersburgh give indications of assuming the offensive. Despatches of the 14th report that General Hill was threatening a flank movement against the Federal left. Demonstrations had also been made against other portions of the Federal line; and it is reported that the Confederates are running trains on the Virginia side of the Potomac to Manassas. Nashville papers of the 13th inst. report that General Sherman has crossed the Chattahoochee, with his whole army, and is immediately in front of the fortifications of Atlanta. There is no news of Forrest or of any other of the Confederate Generals in his rear. It is expected that Johnston, who has been retiring before him, will now offer or accept battle. Nothing is known of General Hunter's position. During the recent alarm for the safety of Washington, the Militia of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts exhibited great indisposition to the President's call for 100-days' men for the defence of the capital. Governor Curtis, of Pennsylvania, openly accused his people of stupidity, or culpable indifference, and Mayor Gunther, of New York, publicly remonstrated against the removal of the Militia, on the ground of apprehended danger to the peace of that city. Secretary Fessenden has arrived in New York, and appealed to the bankers for a loan of 50,000,000 dollars until September 1, to meet the immediate wants of Government; and it is stated that the banks will agree to the loan. He has not made any further announcement of his policy. The American Consul at St. John's has telegraphed to the Governor of Maine that a small party of Confederates had left to depredate on the Maine frontier. Six steamboats have been burnt at St. Lewis by incendiaries; the loss is estimated at half a million of dollars. The Confederate steamer Florida has appeared off the mouth of Delaware, and has captured the steamer Electric Spark and four sailing vessels. Five Federal gunboats have been despatched in her pursuit. The steamer Rouen has been captured. A collision has occurred between two trains on the Delaware and Lakawanna Railway, in Pennsylvania, by which over 100 persons, principally Confederate prisoners, who were being conveyed to the camp at Elmira, New York, were killed or wounded. Gold is at 176 premium.

CANADA.—Mr. Brown and the new Canadian Ministry have proposed a federation of all the North American colonies, with a view to terminate the long existing provincial differences by the establishment of closer relations between Canada and her sister colonies of British North America. The scheme has been well received by the Lower Province, and it is the intention of the Government to hold a convention of delegates from both provinces at Charlottetown, Prince Edward's Island, in a few weeks, and also to send delegates to England, to seek the co-operation of the Imperial Government. The coroner's inquest in the case of the St. Hilaire Bridge disaster, has terminated in a verdict that the accident was owing to the gross carelessness of the engine-driver, who has been committed for trial.

MEXICO.—Intelligence from Mexico announces the proclamation of a general amnesty. It is reported that Uraga and Doblado had given their adhesion to the French.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

FRIDAY.—The Holy Alliance.—Lord STRATFORD DE REDCLIFFE in calling attention to the alleged revival of the Holy Alliance between Russia, Austria, and Prussia, said that such an event must be dangerous to the liberties of the rest of Europe, and arouse fears of those consequences which the efforts of our greatest Ministers had always been directed against—the success of despotism on the one hand, and of extreme democracy on the other. He urged upon the Government the necessity of taking steps to meet these results by cultivating the friendship of allies who were interested in preventing them, and especially of France, our great and able neighbour, who had deserved well at our hands, by husbanding the resources of the country, by placing its armaments upon the most efficient footing, and if we wished to avoid the usual fate of commercial States, by cherishing the traditions and spirit of the people.—Earl RUSSELL admitted the importance of the subject referred to, but expressed his belief that the correspondence which had excited his noble friend's apprehensions was not genuine. As to the probability of a revival of the Holy Alliance, he remarked that the former Holy Holy Alliance never constituted any formidable danger to this country; and although there could be no doubt that the Government and people of England would condemn the principle of such a compact, the practical effects could not in any way concern us. From the period of the French Revolution of 1830 the influence of the Holy Alliance had almost ceased to be felt, and he urged that the circumstances of Europe were so changed, that whatever the Holy Alliance might once have been, its revival was impossible, and need not excite any alarm. He could not believe that the Northern sovereigns desired more than to check the encroachments of democracy in their own dominions. With regard to the application of the principles of the Holy Alliance to the case of Denmark, England had declared her views, which agreed with those of France, but were opposed to those of Austria, Prussia, and Russia. He believed that nothing could be more conducive to the welfare of Europe than a good understanding between France and England, and that the important consequences referred to by his noble friend would cement and consolidate it. But he could not imagine that the other Powers, seeing the changes of the times, would ever be so ill-advised as to revive the Holy Alliance in the face of all Europe. The other business on the paper was disposed of.

SATURDAY.—The House had a morning sitting for a quarter of an hour, when the Highways Act Amendment Bill, the Railway Companies Powers Bill, the Bank Notes &c. (Signature) Bill, the Bleaching and Dyeing Works Act Extension Bill, the Exchequer Bonds (1,600,000*l.*) Bill, and the Thames Conservancy Bill passed through Committee, the latter with amendments. The Contagious Diseases Bill, the Bank Post Bills (Ireland) Bill, the Corn Accounts and Returns Bill, the Westminster Bridge Tragic Bill, the Stamp Duties Act Amendment Bill, and the Portsmouth Dockyard (Acquisition of Lands) Bill were read a second time. The Justices Proceedings Confirmation (Sussex) Bill, and the Poisoned Flesh Prohibition Bill were read a third time and passed.

MONDAY.—The Treaty of 1852.—Lord CAMPBELL asked whether the treaties by which the possession of Schleswig was guaranteed to Denmark, together with the Treaty of 1852, were now to be considered invalid. Till that point was settled it was impossible to do anything to restore the influence England had lost on the continent of Europe. As to the older treaties, though they dated from 1720, yet they were renewed in 1814, and he contended that this country was still bound by them. If their conditions were allowed to be violated the aggressive disposition of the great Powers would have no check, and very grave evils would be the consequence.—Earl GRANVILLE said the more ancient treaties with Denmark had been cancelled by subsequent war between that country and England. As to the Treaty of 1852, it contained no guarantee of any kind, and the only obligation it imposed on this country was to acknowledge the succession of the Danish Crown. It was found in the recent Conference that England was the only Power content to adhere to the treaty; it therefore became necessary to join with the co-signataries in modifying it.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE doubted whether the old treaties had been completely cancelled. He thought they were renewed by the Treaty of Kiel. He trusted there would be no more Conferences on any subject, if we previously declared that under no circumstances would this country enforce the obligations of public law on other Powers.—Earl GRANVILLE, in moving the second reading of the New Zealand (Guarantee of Loan) Bill, explained the exceptional circumstances under which the Government had sanctioned the measure. He believed the security given by the resources of the colony were satisfactory.—The Earl of MALMESBURY opposed the Bill, as a most impolitic measure, and expressed his astonishment that the House of Commons should have passed it. It was an encouragement to all colonies, in the same circumstances as New Zealand, to get up little wars of which England bore the burden.—Lord LYVEDEN said no one approved these wars, but the difficulty was how to keep out of them. He objected to guaranteeing the loan, as it was, in fact, guaranteeing everything the settlers had done to the natives. As to the war itself, he understood the troops engaged in it regarded the service with disgust.—The Duke of CAMBRIDGE regretted the misfortune that had befallen a distinguished regiment during the operations of the war, but denied the imputation that it was caused by the disgust of the troops with the duty in which they were employed. If there were the slightest foundation for such a suspicion he should sincerely deplore it.—Earl DE GREY denied that the war was caused by the policy of the Colonial Government. It originated in the cruel and cowardly murder of a body of English troops, who were surprised in an ambush. Such an outrage could not be allowed to pass unpunished, but the Government wished to bring the hostilities to a close as soon as possible. The colonists bore a considerable portion of the expenditure, and had themselves raised a force of 10,000 volunteers, who had done their duty in a satisfactory manner.—Lord STRATFORD DE REDCLIFFE thought those colonies which had obtained their political independence ought to provide their own expenditure. But there was no necessity for anticipating a time when England would be obliged to abandon her colonies.—Lord TAUNTON did not think that public opinion would permit the difficulties that had arisen in New Zealand to be settled between the natives and the Europeans themselves. The presence of a few British troops might often be a great benefit to a colony, and there were exceptional cases in which the credit of the Home Government might be engaged for its relief.—The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH doubted if New Zealand could pay the charges it would incur next year out of its present surplus revenue.—The Earl of HARROWBY pointed out that the colonies were not allowed to have allies. This country was therefore bound to render them some assistance. The Bill was then read a second time. The Post-office Order Bill was read a second time, after a short discussion on a point of form.

TUESDAY.—The Appropriation Bill, the Weights and Measures (Metric System) Bill, the New Zealand (Guarantee of Loan) Bill, and other Bills passed through Committee. The Fortifications (Provision of Expenses) Bill was read a second time. Foreign Affairs.—The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH called attention to the altered state of foreign affairs since the opening of the session. That change affected not only the dignity of the Danish monarchy, which all the Powers had years ago thought essential to the peace of Europe, but also the validity of treaties, the security of the weaker States, and, above all, the progress of constitutional principles on the Continent. He regretted the decision of the Government and Legislature not to grant active aid to Denmark, and though he had no hopes of influencing that policy, he could not help saying that it was one which none of the more famous Ministers of this country would have adopted, and it would have been possible in no previous reign except that of James I. Such a policy ought not to be followed by any country that desired to be great. The real object of the Prussian Government was to arrest the growth of constitutional liberty in Denmark, and, finding that they could act with impunity, they had brought about the existing state of things. As to the alleged revival of the Holy Alliance, although there might be no foundation for the assertion, still he believed there was a much worse understanding between the three despotic Powers. The first Holy Alliance was a combination of princes against democracy and revolution, and not a conspiracy against their weaker neighbours; but the object of these princes now went much further. It was unreasonable to expect that a British Minister would be always successful in his negotiations, but the country had a right to demand that his proceedings should not render success impossible. The Government had brought in peace estimates, and by their declaration had deprived their diplomacy of its only support. But, having done this, he had a right to complain that they had interfered everywhere and in the most unpleasant manner. He regarded the late Conference as little better than a farce. Its result in transferring Schleswig to Germany destroyed the balance of power, and if the proceedings of the German Powers were to be sanctioned, how was any arrangement hereafter to be effected? The precedent of to-day would be the rule of to-morrow, and there would be no security left except force for the possession of its dominions by any Power. Thus, if the Germans wrested Kiel from Denmark, what security was there that they would not proceed to treat Holland in the same manner? Beyond this, he saw in this matter a declaration of war on the part of the despotic Powers against the advance of constitutional principles in Germany. They saw there how the constitutional movement in Prussia was likely to terminate, and although the policy was a wicked one, it was no doubt clever; but he trusted that its present success would not be permanent, for such things could not be done without retribution, terrible and overwhelming as an avalanche. Under these circumstances, all that this country could do was to rely upon its own strength, and revive that ancient patriotic spirit which did not consider lucre the only pursuit worth following.—Earl RUSSELL said that Lord Ellenborough had left out of consideration the facts that the Duchies were inhabited by two races, and that a population of 40 millions kindred to one of them thought that it was oppressed by the other. That was the chief difficulty. It should also be remembered that the arrangement made by the great Powers in 1852 was one which it was admitted on all hands must depend upon the willing concurrence of all the parties. Instead of there being any such concurrence, a controversy had been maintained ever since the signing of the treaty about the nonfulfilment of her promises by Denmark. It was impossible to say that Denmark had redeemed her pledges, or that she was altogether blameless. If the Government had upheld Denmark on the one hand, they must have compelled her to fulfil her promise on the other. He believed that if the parties directly interested had adhered to their engagements the difficulty might have been settled by negotiation; but Denmark, having for 11 years neglected to fulfil her pledges, a feeling was thereby excited in Germany which Austria and Prussia represented that they could not control. Under these circumstances, whilst France and Russia refused to interfere, it would have been futile for this country to have done so alone, and the determination of the Government had been ratified by Parliament and the country. How, he asked, had England forfeited her honour? We were not bound by any treaty to give material aid to Denmark; but, if any case did arise in which our honour was at stake, he was convinced that the country would rise as one man to defend it. He believed that after this affair of Schleswig was settled, the constitutional progress of Germany would be in no danger, and would not stand in need of aid. Such was the spirit of the times that he believed no sovereign would be so ill-advised as to resist it; but if England had blindly rushed into a war, and set all the Powers in hostile array to each other, we should have inflicted a much heavier blow on the liberties of Europe.—Lord STRATFORD DE REDCLIFFE thought that Lord Russell was rather too severe on Denmark, and, admitting the delicate and complicated character of the question, he could not but feel that this country had suffered some discredit. He regretted the course on which all the great Powers appeared to have entered. Russia was reducing cruelty to a system in all her possessions: and with regard to Prussia, no language could adequately express the censure she deserved. The subject then dropped.

WEDNESDAY.—The Consolidated Fund Appropriation Bill, the New Zealand (Guarantee of Loan) Bill, the Fortifications (Provisions of Expenses) Bill, and other Bills were read a third time and passed.—Lord WODEHOUSE moved the second reading of the Poor Relief (Metropolis) Bill. He said that the object of the measure was to defray the charge of relieving the casual and vagrant poor of London out of a general instead of a union rate.—Earl POWIS and Earl FORTESCUE objected to the machinery by which the Bill was to be carried into operation.—Lord REDESDALE said the Bill had been brought in too late in the Session to be properly discussed. Many of its details were also defective. He therefore moved the second reading that day six months.—The Earl of SHAFTESBURY hoped that the amendment would not be pressed, as the necessity for some measure of the kind during the winter was urgent. The amendment was then negatived without a division, and the Bill read a second time.

THURSDAY.—The LORD CHANCELLOR, in reply to Lord CHELMSFORD, stated that the Prorogation had been fixed for the next day. The Poor Relief Bill went through committee, and, the standing orders having been suspended, was read a third time and passed. The Weights and Measures (Metric System) Bill and the Limited Penalties Bill were read a third time and passed.

FRIDAY.—The Prorogation.—The House met at 3 o'clock for the prorogation of Parliament by Royal Commission. The Commons having been summoned to the bar, the Royal Assent was given to 104 Bills.—The LORD CHANCELLOR then read her Majesty's Speech as follows:—

"MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,

"We are commanded by her Majesty to release you from further attendance in parliament, and, at the same time, to convey to you her Majesty's acknowledgments for the zeal and assiduity with which you have applied yourselves to the discharge of your duties during the session of parliament now brought to a close.

"Her Majesty commands us to inform you that she greatly regrets that the endeavours which she made in concert with the Emperor of the French, the Emperor of Russia, and the King of Sweden, to bring about a reconciliation between the German Powers and the King of Denmark, were not successful, and that the hostilities which had been suspended during the negotiations were again resumed. Her Majesty trusts, however, that the negotiations which have been opened between the belligerents may restore peace to the North of Europe.

"Her Majesty having addressed herself to the Powers who were contracting parties to the treaty by which the Ionian republic was placed under the protectorate of Great Britain, and having obtained their consent to the annexation of that republic to the kingdom of Greece, and the States of the Ionian republic having agreed thereto, the republic of the seven islands has been formally united to the kingdom of Greece, and her Majesty trusts that the union so made will conduce to the welfare and prosperity of all the subjects of his Majesty the King of the Hellenes.

"Her Majesty's relations with the Emperor of China continue to be friendly, and the commerce of her subjects with the Chinese empire is increasing.

"Her Majesty has been engaged, in concert with the Emperor of Austria, the Emperor of the French, the King of Prussia, and the Emperor of Russia, in an endeavour to bring to effect an amicable arrangement of differences which had arisen between the Hospodar of Moldo-Wallachia and his Suzerain the Sultan. Her Majesty has the satisfaction to inform you that this endeavour has been successful.

"Her Majesty deeply laments that the civil war in North America has not been brought to a close. Her Majesty will continue to observe a strict neutrality between the belligerents, and would rejoice at a friendly reconciliation between the contending parties.

"GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS,

"Her Majesty commands us to convey to you her warm acknowledgments for the liberal supplies which you have granted for the service of the present year, and towards the permanent defence of her Majesty's dockyards and arsenals.

"MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,

"Her Majesty has observed with satisfaction that the distress which the civil war in North America has created in some of the manufacturing districts has to a great extent abated, and her Majesty trusts that increased supplies of the raw material of industry may be extracted from countries by which it has hitherto been scantily furnished.

"The revolt of certain tribes in New Zealand has not yet been quelled, but it is satisfactory to her Majesty to know that a large portion of the native population of those islands have taken no part in this revolt.

"It has been a source of much gratification to her Majesty to observe the rapid development of the resources of her East Indian possessions, and the general contentment of the people inhabiting those extensive regions.

"Her Majesty has given her cordial assent to many measures of public usefulness, the result of your labours during the session now brought to a close.

"The Act for extending to women and children employed in various trades the regulations applicable to factories in general will tend materially to preserve the health and improve the education of those on whose behalf it was framed.

"The Act for authorising the grant of Government annuities will encourage habits of prudence among the working classes, and will afford them the means of securely investing the results of their industry.

"The Act for authorising a further advance for public works in some of the manufacturing districts will contribute to alleviate the distress in these districts, and will afford the means of completing many works of marked importance for the health of the population.

"The Act for giving increased facilities for the construction of railways will diminish the expenses attendant upon the extension of those important channels of communication.

"It has afforded to her Majesty the most heartfelt satisfaction to observe the general well-being and contentment which prevail throughout her dominions, and to remark the progressive increase and development of the national resources, and to find that, after sufficiently providing for the public service, you have been able to make a material diminution in the taxation of the country.

"On returning to your respective counties you will still have important duties to perform, essentially connected with the linking together of the several classes of the community, and her Majesty fervently prays that the blessing of Almighty God may attend your exertions, and guide them to the object of her Majesty's constant solicitude, the welfare and happiness of her people."

The LORD CHANCELLOR then formally prorogued Parliament to Thursday, the 13th October.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY.—The Pilotage Order Confirmation Bill, the Poor Removal Bill, and the Stamp Duties Act (1864) Amendment Bill, were read a third time and passed. The Cranbourne Street Bill passed through committee. Vancouver's Island.—In reply to Mr. A. MILLS, Mr. LAYARD stated that a despatch had been received from the Governor of Vancouver's Island, conveying a resolution of the Legislature stating that the offer of the Imperial Government to transfer the Crown lands to the colony did not afford an equivalent for the civil list asked. This was coupled, however, with the expression of a desire to be more or less united with British Columbia in sharing the expense. What the answer of the latter was to the proposal he was not aware, but he had no reason to believe that it would be a favourable one. The Cape Colony.—In reply to Mr. WARNER, Mr. CARDWELL stated that no arrangement had been come to with the Government of the Cape of Good Hope as to the expenses of possible future wars. He had that day received a despatch from the Governor stating that the expectations he had formed with regard to the continuance of tranquillity in the Transkei were well founded; that he would spare no pains to overcome by legitimate means the feelings of discontent entertained by the Kaffir chief, Kreli, and that the commander of the forces agreed with him in the opinion that it was inexpedient to make an advance on the frontier. Government Manufacturers.—Mr. COBDEN called attention to the recent great extension of the Government manufacturing establishments, contending that since we commenced business as shipbuilders, gunmakers, and tailors, the expenditure had enormously increased, while the efficiency of the service had suffered by the experiment. He argued that, so long as we maintained establishments in which we had no customer but ourselves, so long should we continue to produce more than we required. What we wanted was a thorough reform in the buying department, because if we were ignorant of the quality of the raw material, how was it possible that we could produce the best manufactured article? As an illustration of the folly of becoming our own manufacturers and discarding private workships, he stated that iron-clads, cannon, small arms, and clothing had all been proved to be defective, while marine steam-engines and compasses which we obtained from private manufacturers, and which constituted the lungs and brains of our great ships, were always found efficient. In conclusion, he moved—"That the recent great extension of Government manufacturing establishments calls for the attention of the Government. That it is expedient that steps be forthwith taken to place each separate establishment as nearly as possible on the footing of a private manufacturing concern or a public company, by taking a valuation of the fixed and floating capital employed, including the value of the land, and that upon this basis there be an annual stock-taking; when, after making all the customary deductions for depreciation of buildings, machinery, and plant, interest of capital, rates and taxes, and other charges, such a price be charged to the Government departments for articles supplied as shall preserve the capital intact; and that these accounts, with a balance sheet, be laid annually on the table of this House." Colonel BARTTELOT seconded the motion.—Mr. MONSELL contended that the Government establishments were not open to the censure of Mr. Cobden; but that, on the contrary, they were conducted on a good principle, and had been entirely successful.—Alderman ROSE opposed the motion, on the ground that it would leave the Government at the mercy of contractors.—Mr. WHITE gave his complete adhesion to the principles of Mr. Cobden.—Mr. CORRY defended the naval policy of Lord Derby's Government, and said that contract-built ships of the line had proved more expensive than dockyard ships.—Mr. CHILDERS said that so far as the manufacturing establishments of the dockyards were concerned, it was the intention of the Admiralty to take stock hereafter of all the plant in their possession on the first day of the year.—Colonel DICKSON supported the motion, and argued that the whole system of clothing the army might be greatly improved by trusting to private contract.—The Marquis of HARTINGTON showed that in cases where the contract system had been acted upon at a period of emergency it had almost invariably failed. It was to the Government, too, that the credit was due of having introduced the most modern improvements in the machinery for the manufacture of rifles.—After some remarks by Sir M. PETO, General PEEL, and Captain JERVIS, Mr. LAIRD expressed his opinion that construction and repair should be carried on in both public and private dockyards.—Mr. NEWDEGATE thought the House was indebted to Mr. Cobden for having elicited a very useful discussion. The subject then dropped, and the motion for the adjournment to Monday was agreed to.

MONDAY.—Standing Orders.—Some discussion ensued with reference to amending the standing orders respecting the private business of the House, and ultimately a resolution was carried limiting the number of members to serve on private bill committees to four, instead of five, as at present. The further consideration of the subject was adjourned.—In reply to Mr. CRAWFORD, Lord C. PAGET said there was no intention to appropriate any portion of Greenwich Hospital for the reception of worn out and disabled seamen of the merchant service.—Mr. COWPER, in replying to a question from Mr. HARVEY LEWIS, admitted the filthy condition of the Serpentine, the Kensington Basin, and the Ornamental Water in the Regent's Park, but said that it would not be prudent during the present warm weather to disturb the deposit of mud which had been allowed to collect in these haunts for public recreation. Intervention in America.—Mr. LINDSAY asked whether, considering the great sacrifice of life and property occasioned by the war still raging between the Federal and the Confederate States of America, and considering the loss the people of this country have suffered by the war, it was the intention of her Majesty's Government, in concert with the other Powers of Europe, to use their endeavours to bring about a suspension of hostilities.—Lord PALMERSTON assured the House that the Government deeply lamented the sacrifice of life and property in America, and the distress which the continuance of hostilities had occasioned among certain classes of her Majesty's subjects. The Government did not, however, think that in the present state of things any offer of mediation which they might make, either alone or in concert with other Powers, would have the effect of terminating the war. On the order for the third reading of the Fortifications (Provisions for Expenses) Bill, Mr. OSBORNE called attention to an important alteration which had been made in the proposed defences at Portsmouth and Spithead. He stated that the Royal Commissioners had recommended an inner circle of defences and that steps had been taken to build a fort on Stourbridge Shoal between Ryde and Portsmouth, but that the project had since been abandoned in consequence of the impossibility of obtaining a solid foundation. But even supposing this fort to have been built, he contended that we had no gun to arm it with, and that we had expended two millions and a half without being able to provide an efficient weapon either for the army or the navy, and that with regard to the latter we had nothing which could successfully resist an attack from armour-clad ships.—The Marquis of HARTINGTON said that a slight modification of the system of defence at Portsmouth was contemplated, but that in all essential respects the works would be precisely similar to those already recommended by the commissioners and sanctioned by the House of Commons. He denied that we had no guns with which to arm the forts, as experiment had proved that the 600-pounder was a most formidable and efficient weapon.—Captain JERVIS spoke approvingly of the exertions made by Sir William Armstrong, and said that the progress of gunnery had fully kept pace with the improvements made in building ships of war. The Bill was then read a third time and passed.—On the motion for the third reading of the Indian Medical Service Bill, Mr. HENNESSY urged that the measure would give the Secretary of State for India the power of discontinuing the competitive system and returning to the old and corrupt principle of nomination, which Parliament and the public had already condemned. He moved that the order for the third reading be discharged.—Colonel NORTH seconded the motion.—Sir C. WOOD disavowed any intention of making an attack upon the competitive system, and contended that the only object of the Bill was to enable the Secretary for India to obtain the services of those assistant-surgeons of the Queen's army who, having obtained commissions by competitive examination, might desire to volunteer into the Indian army.—Mr. MONSELL, Mr. LYSLEY, and Sir T. E. COLEBROOKE recommended the Government to withdraw the Bill. As at present worded it would entirely do away with the competitive principle.—Colonel SYKES said that there were already 200 vacancies in the army for assistant-surgeons for which candidates could not be found. On a division the motion of Mr. Hennessy was carried against the Government by 46 to 44. The Bill was therefore lost. The Defence Act Amendment Bill was read a third time and passed. On the order for the third reading of the Cranbourne Street Bill, Mr. AYRTON moved, as an amendment, that it be read a third time that day fortnight.—Mr. F. PEEL opposed the motion, and on a division the amendment was negatived by 48 to 14. The Bill was then read a third time and passed.—Mr. VILLIERS moved that the House go into committee on the Poor Relief (Metropolis) Bill. An animated discussion ensued, in the course of which exception was taken to power being given to the Metropolitan Board of Works to levy a tax for the relief of "destitute wayfarers, wanderers, and foundlings" in the metropolis. The opposition, however, was withdrawn upon an undertaking being given by Mr. Villiers that the duration of the Bill should be limited to the 1st of April next. The Bill then passed through committee. The Naval Discipline Bill was read a second time.—Mr. WHITE opposed the second reading of the Mutual Surrender of Criminals Bill, on the ground that it was directed against political exiles, and that it was a very suspicious circumstance that the Prussians, who had just aggrandised themselves by robbery and murder, should at this particular moment ask for such a measure. It was true that the House of Lords had passed the Bill, but that, in his opinion, was no recommendation in its favour.—Mr. LAYARD and the ATTORNEY-GENERAL denied that the Bill had any political bearing, and contended that it was precisely similar to the extradition treaties already in force with France, Italy, and other States.—Lord R. CECIL apprehended that the Bill would have a far wider scope, and that it would apply to deserters, who were in many cases political exiles.—Mr. S. FITZGERALD said that a man might be a political refugee in this country, and, having been convicted of some crime in his absence, might under this Bill be demanded from the British Government. There ought, he thought, to be a provision in the Bill to guard against such a contingency as that.—Lord PALMERSTON said that the treaty and the Bill required that proof should be given to satisfy her Majesty that if the offence charged had been committed in this country, it would, according to law, justify a remand.—Mr. LOCKE was opposed to straining a point in favour of Prussia, who was doing all she could to put down liberty upon the Continent; and it was the duty of Parliament to guard against her invasion of our shores to seize upon political refugees.—Mr. FERRAND moved the adjournment of the debate, arguing that the Bill was a flagrant and atrocious violation of the sacred right of asylum.—After some further discussion hostile to the principle of the measure, Lord PALMERSTON consented to the adjournment of the debate, and it was adjourned accordingly.—The Bribery at Elections Bill was withdrawn.—Lord PALMERSTON moved "That this House, having considered the report of the Select Committee appointed to inquire into the practice of the Committee of Council on Education, with respect to the reports of her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools, is of opinion that the resolution passed on the 12th day of April last with reference to such reports ought to be rescinded, and the said resolution is hereby rescinded." He stated the circumstances under which the resolution had been passed, and said that, as the Select Committee had reported directly at variance with that resolution, he thought it would be but an act of generosity and justice to Mr. Lowe to rescind it.—Mr. HOWES (the Chairman of the Select Committee) and Mr. WALTER supported the motion.—Lord R. CECIL said he was still of opinion that the Committee of Council were not justified in mutilating the reports of the Inspectors of Schools; but that he had no objection to the rescinding of the resolution, in order that it might not be considered that the personal honour of Mr. Lowe was affected. The resolution was then agreed to.

TUESDAY.—At the morning sitting, the Naval Discipline Bill passed through Committee. The Poor Relief (Metropolis) Bill and the Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Acts Amendment Bill were read a third time and passed. The Lords' Amendments of several Bills were considered. In the evening, Mr. HENNESSY moved an address to her Majesty, to grant her fiat to the petition of right of Mr. George O'Malley Irwin, or to satisfy his claims without suit. He said that the case was one of the most extraordinary that had been ever brought before Parliament, in which a party had suffered injustice owing to the culpable neglect of officers of the Crown. He gave a detailed narrative of the facts of the case, and said that the Crown had no right to refuse a petition of right that the question might be brought before a jury.—Mr O'HAGAN said he had taken pains to ascertain the real facts of the case, which, if there was any truth in Mr. Irwin's representation of it, involved imputations upon distinguished persons, living and dead. He then stated the real facts, supported by documents, the contents of one of which, written by Mr. Irwin himself, were inconsistent with the case he now set up. The case had been investigated when persons were alive who were cognisant of the facts, and he cited opinions of high legal authorities adverse to it.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL said that a petition of right was a remedy applicable to particular cases only, which did not include such a case as that in question. He showed the absurd consequences of the doctrine that a petition of right was a matter of pure right that could not be refused. The fiat was to be exercised under the advice of the law officers of the Crown.—Mr. MALINS said he felt bound to say, after the statement of Mr. O'Hagan, that the case of Mr. Irwin became perfectly ridiculous.—After some remarks by Mr. HADFIELD and Sir G. GREY, the motion was negatived without a division. The House was counted out at nine o'clock.

WEDNESDAY.—Standing Orders.—The adjourned debate on the proposed alterations in the standing orders for the regulation of private business, as suggested by Colonel PATTEN and the Committee of Revision, was resumed. After a long discussion on the details of the new machinery, Mr. ROEBUCK moved the adjournment of the debate, so that the whole subject might be discussed next session in the absence of a full house.—Lord PALMERSTON expressed himself in favour of adjournment, but said that if Colonel Wilson Patten chose to proceed he would vote with him. On a division, the motion for adjournment was negatived by 51 to 14. The discussion was continued until 5 o'clock, and the various changes recommended by the Committee were eventually agreed to with verbal amendments. The Lords' amendments to the Thames Conservancy Bill, were considered and agreed to. The motion for going into committee on the Mutual Surrender of Criminals (Prussia) Bill was discharged on the motion of Sir G. GREY. The ATTORNEY GENERAL for IRELAND obtained leave to bring in a Bill for the recording of titles in Ireland; Mr. BOUVERIE obtained leave to bring in a Bill to establish courts of conciliation, and Mr. BARING obtained leave to bring in a Bill to amend the Salmon Fishery Act (1861).

THURSDAY.—Mexico.—Mr. LAYARD, in reply to Mr. DUNLACE, stated that her Majesty's Government had intimated to that of the Emperor of the French that when the Archduke Maximilian should notify to the European Powers that he was in possession of the capital, it was their intention to advise the Queen to recognise his Government as the de facto Government of Mexico. The Lords' amendments to the Railway Construction Facilities Bill and the Pier and Harbours Orders Confirmation Bill were considered and agreed to; but the Lords' amendments to the Railway Companies Powers Bill were disagreed to. The order for committing the Partnership Law Amendment Bill was discharged and the Bill was withdrawn.—Lord E. HOWARD called attention to the subject of Emigration to the Federal States, in reference to the prolongation of the war now raging in America. He described the organised manner in which Federal agents both in England and in Ireland were entrapping young men under the pretence of finding them employment on railways, and enlisting them in the army, and called upon the Government to take some steps to prevent a disgraceful violation of the law, by means of which thousands of Queen's subjects were lured to their destruction.—Mr. LAYARD said the noble lord had done good service by calling attention to the subject, but that the question was a most difficult one to deal with. In fact, it was impossible for the Government to do more than to reiterate their warnings to emigrants as to the dangers to which they would be exposed on their arrival in the Federal States.—Mr. HENNESSY urged the Government to prevent, if possible, the kidnapping of young men in the South of Ireland.—Mr. LINDSAY said that persons disposed to emigrate to the Federal States should know that the value of the dollar had fallen from 4*s.* to 1*s.* 6*d.*, and that the Federal army had been reduced since the war from 2,300,000 men to 1,000,000.—Mr. P. TAYLOR defended the Northern Government, which was determined, he said, to put down slave-holding rebels.—Lord J. MANNERS, after a remark upon the inappropriateness of Mr. TAYLOR's speech, suggested that some warnings might be given to emigrants to America by the Emigration Commissioners.—Mr. FERRAND thought the working classes would be deeply grateful to the noble lord for the words of caution and warning he had addressed to them. The subject then dropped.

FRIDAY.—The House met about half-past 2, and were almost immediately afterwards summoned to the House of Lords to hear the Royal Assent given to various Bills, and to hear the Royal Speech on the Prorogation.

DINNER TO HER MAJESTY'S MINISTERS AT THE MANSION HOUSE.—On Wednesday evening the Lord Mayor entertained her Majesty's Ministers at dinner at the Mansion House. In returning thanks for the toast of Her Majesty's Ministers, Lord Palmerston spoke as follows:—

"I beg to return our cordial thanks for the very kind manner in which you have received the toast of our health. We are conscious that if we have experienced on this occasion an expression of goodwill and approval, it must be from the conviction which, I trust, is impressed on the minds of all who hear me that to the best of our ability we have done our duty. No set of men can do more—no set of men ought to do less. You have been pleased, my Lord Mayor, to remark that in spite of the fatigues of a rather long session, we are here at your festive board not much the worse for the labours we have gone through. But this, at least, I will say, that you have exhibited a kind foresight and regard for wearied statesmen, and you have waited until the end of a Session which we might have expected to be exhausted in our strength, to be wearied in our minds, to be enfeebled in our constitutions, and have summoned us to a feast which would repair the labours we had undergone, which should fit us to rush into the country to enjoy the pleasures and partake in the active exertions which a country life may entail. I can assure you that her Majesty's Ministers are always delighted to assemble at the festive board of the chief magistrate of the city of London, not simply from social, but also from most important political considerations. For in a country like this, the strength of which depends upon the union of all classes, it is a great advantage that opportunities should be given by which those who are charged with the conduct of affairs should have the means of making acquaintances and contracting friendships with those who are actively engaged in the commercial pursuits upon which the strength, the wealth, and the prosperity of the country so much depend. It is satisfactory, no doubt, to all to know that the prosperity of this country is great, so that her Majesty's Government and the Parliament may congratulate themselves in having contributed to that most fortunate result. It was said of a French statesman of a former period that, having consulted the leading mercantile men of his country how he could best help them, he was told, 'Let us alone.' Well, we have not left the mercantile classes alone, but instead of meddling officiously and injudiciously with laws to promote their welfare by direct interference with their concerns, we, on the contrary, have not left them alone, because we have been employed sedulously and successfully in striking off those shackles and fetters with which the less wise policy of former periods had encumbered and hampered them. My Lord Mayor, you have drunk 'The Army and Navy,' but peace has its victories as well as war. There are other countries which, in these times and in former periods, have sent forth their legions armed for the purposes of aggression to overthrow institutions, to conquer nations, to subdue rival communities, and to inflict misery and desolation wherever their footsteps trod. We have achieved triumphs, we have made aggressions; but we make them of a very different kind. The capital and the skill of Englishmen are spread over the whole surface of the globe; wherever skill and capital can contribute to the happiness of nations, there you will find Englishmen conquering not men, but the difficulties of nature, overthrowing not human institutions, but those obstacles which nature has opposed to the intercourse of men, contributing to the wealth, happiness, and prosperity of the nations by whom they are employed and in whose territories their operations are carried on. Well, my Lord Mayor, that is a proud and a satisfactory reflection for Englishmen to make, and I may be permitted to say that the commercial community of England is mainly the cause of those triumphs. It is by the successful industry and commerce of the merchants of England that that wealth is accumulated and that influence created by which those difficulties over the difficulties of nature for the benefit and happiness of mankind have been achieved and are now in progress among the nations."

Earl RUSSELL acknowledged the toast of the House of Lords, and amidst much laughter said:—

"It may appear to some as if your lordship had paid me a compliment which was hardly appropriate, when I remember that the House of Lords has not shown that degree of confidence which I thought I had some right to expect in the management of the foreign affairs of the country. I am happy, however, to think that this alarm of the House of Lords, which, in fact, was confined to those Lords who were in distant parts of the country, has been very much exaggerated. I am happy to think that you, my Lord Mayor, agree with me that never did this country stand in a prouder position, never was its influence greater with all foreign countries than at the present moment."

THE WIMBLEDON RIFLE MEETING.—Notwithstanding the unfavourable opinion of the surgeons the marker who was shot last week in the back is still living, and there are now some hopes that his life may be saved. On Friday the competition was brought to a close, the Earl of Dudley's prize being won by Lieut. Burt, of the 1st Warwick; the first Mont Storm prize by Sergeant Brook, of the 12th Middlesex; Lord Vernon's prize, by Eden, Inns of Court; and the Wimbledon Cup, by Sergeant Martin Smith, of the Victorias. On Saturday the distribution of prizes took place, and in the evening there was a review of about 10,000 volunteers by his Royal Highness the Commander in Chief. The prizes, in the absence of the Minister of War, were distributed by Lady Elcho. Previous to the distribution Lord Elcho addressed the volunteers, congratulating them on the success of the year's meeting, which had only been attended by the one misfortune—the accident to the marker, whose wound had excited commiseration in all quarters, her Majesty herself having sent a telegram that day to know his condition. In consideration of his state the sham fight which was intended became a mere review; and in order to prevent his being disturbed no guns were fired or bugles sounded. This rendered the closing spectacle of the meeting rather tame, but all present acquiesced in its propriety.

CORPORATION EXPENDITURE.—On Tuesday a report of the coal, corn, and finance committee of the Corporation of London was published, directing the attention of the Court of Common Council to the enormous sums of money which the court has of late voted for extraordinary purposes. The committee state that by the 10th of October next the City's cash will be overdrawn by a sum which they estimate at upwards of 43,320*l*, caused by an excess of expenditure over and above the ordinary income of the Corporation. The committee complain that a standing order of the Corporation, which requires that all votes for extra expenditure shall be submitted to the Committee before they are agreed to, has been neglected, or this serious deficit would not have happened.

GREAT SALE OF SHAKESPEARE'S WORKS.—The valuable library of the late Mr. George Daniel, of Canonbury, has been on sale during the last seven days at the rooms of Messrs. Sotheby & Co., in Wellington Street, and has excited extraordinary interest. Tuesday was chiefly devoted to the works of Shakespeare, comprising the four first folio editions, all of the first class, and much finer copies than can ever again occur for sale. The separate plays, also in quarto, as originally published during the lifetime of the poet, presented a remarkable feature, all being of the first editions, and of the highest degree of rarity. The following prices were obtained for these literary treasures:—The first folio of 1623 realised 682 guineas, and was bought for Miss Burdett Coutts; the second folio, 148*l*.; the third folio, 46*l*.; the fourth, 21*l*. 10*s*. Of the separate plays, the first edition of the Tragedy of Richard II., the first copy ever brought to public auction, realised 325 guineas; the first edition of Richard III., the only copy which has ever occurred for sale, 335 guineas; Love's Labour Lost, first edition, 330 guineas; Henry IV., second edition, 110 guineas; Romeo and Juliet, first complete edition, 50 guineas; Henry V., first edition, 220 guineas; Merchant of Venice, first edition, 95 guineas; Much Ado about Nothing, first edition, 255 guineas; Midsummer Night's Dream, first edition, 230 guineas; Merry Wives of Windsor, first edition, 330 guineas; Othello, first edition, 155 guineas; Lucrece, first edition, 150 guineas; Venus and Adonis, second edition, 240*l*.; Venus and Adonis, small edition of 1596, of which the only other known copy is in the Bodleian, 300 guineas; Sonnets, first edition, 215 guineas; Richard II., second edition, 103 guineas; Troilus and Cressida, first edition, 109 guineas. The day's sale amounted to 5871*l*. 5*s*.

THE MAIN DRAINAGE WORKS.—On Monday the Metropolitan Board of Works invited the members of metropolitan vestries and other friends to inspect their works at the outfalls on both sides of the river. They proceeded by steamer to Barking Creek, and entered one of the chambers of the great reservoir on the north side—the only one of the four which is not yet brought into use, and then went across the river to Crossness, and inspected the reservoir on the south side. These reservoirs being now finished will be brought into immediate use. The diversion already amounts to one-third of the whole metropolitan sewage.

NEW TRAFFIC REGULATIONS FOR THE CITY.—The new bye-laws, orders, and regulations for the City traffic, were published on Tuesday by order of the Lord Mayor; Sir George Grey, the Home Secretary, having approved of the alterations made at his suggestion by the Court of Aldermen. The following is a copy of the revised regulations:—

"Every omnibus, metropolitan stage carriage, van, or other carriage, licensed for the conveyance of passengers, at separate fares, passing eastward through St. Paul's Churchyard and proceeding to, or whose destination as stated on such vehicle, or in its licence, shall be London Bridge, shall, when it reaches the south-east corner of St. Paul's Cathedral, pass down Cannon Street, and thence over London Bridge; and every such carriage making the reverse journey shall traverse the like route; and the driver of every such omnibus, metropolitan stage carriage, van, or other carriage licensed for the conveyance of passengers at separate fares, shall drive the same pursuant to this regulation. 2. No person shall drive any cart, waggon, dray, or other vehicle for the conveyance of goods, wares, and merchandise, through the streets, between the hours of nine in the morning and six in the evening, laden to a greater height than 16 feet, measuring from the ground, or laden to a greater width than seven feet, or the breadth between the outsides of the wheels of which vehicle (except it shall have been in use before or on the 28th of July, 1863) shall be greater than seven feet. 3. No person shall draw any cart, waggon, or other vehicle wholly or partially laden with timber, scaffolding, or other poles, logs of wood, masts, spars, or other articles or things, whether consisting of wood, metal, or any other material, exceeding 25 feet in length, or eight feet six inches in breadth, through any street between the hours of nine in the morning and six in the evening."

THE DECORATIONS OF ST. PAUL'S.—On Friday the ceremony of uncovering the first of the mosaic paintings at St. Paul's Cathedral, forming part of the intended embellishments of the interior, took place in the presence of several noblemen and gentlemen forming the committee for raising funds for the decoration of the cathedral. It is a mosaic, designed by Mr. Alfred Stevens, and carefully executed by M. Salviati, of Venice. It is placed in one of the eight spandrels formed by the great arches of the dome under the whispering-gallery, and occupies a space of nearly 300 superficial feet, although, as seen from the floor of the cathedral, the effect of distance renders it hard to believe in its real dimensions. The design is intended to represent the Prophet Isaiah in a vision, with two attendant angels, and is one of a series of groups with which it is proposed to adorn the eight spandrels in that part of the edifice illustrative of the Prophets. It represents the Prophet seated, and turning half round towards the right, as if scanning some mystery which is indicated by a tablet held by an angel, while on the left another angel exhibits a separate revelation. It is executed upon a gold ground, which greatly enhances its effect, and has occupied M. Salviati two months, the cost being about 700*l*.

MURDER AND SUICIDE AT SOMERS TOWN.—On Monday afternoon it was discovered that a carpenter named Brown had murdered a married woman called Rosetta Bishop, who had been living with him as his wife, in one of the small streets in Somers Town, and that the murderer had committed suicide. It appeared from inquiry in the neighbourhood that on the night of Tuesday, the 19th, there was a fearful quarrel between them. The other lodgers in the house heard the striking of blows, accompanied by screams of murder; but the same circumstance had occurred so frequently before that little or no notice was taken of it. As the woman had not been seen in the neighbourhood since that night, some of the neighbours made inquiries of Brown about her, but he merely stated that she had gone away from him altogether, and had threatened to take proceedings against him. On the Sunday following her disappearance, the first-floor lodgers, believing that he had no one to attend to him, invited him to dinner, and mentioned the peculiar smell which appeared to proceed from the cellar. Brown in reply, stated that the smell arose from some uncooked meat which the missing woman had left locked up. On Monday afternoon one of the lodgers of a house having command of a back view of Brown's premises had occasion to fetch some water, when, to her amazement, she saw some one hanging between the two folding doors of the kitchen. She gave the alarm, and assistance being promptly obtained, the body of Brown was cut down, but life was extinct. The odour of decomposition which had previously been observed had now become intolerable, and on the police searching the premises they found the body of the woman in the coal cellar with her skull fractured, and in such a decomposed state that it was evident that the murder must have taken place several days before. The head was gaping with wounds and covered with worms, while portions of the brains and the skull were found wrapped up in the hearth-rug, and there were evident signs that some of the brains had actually been thrown upon the fire. The police have since found the axe with which the unfortunate woman was struck down, still stained with blood, in the waterbutt, where the murderer had thrown it. They also found that he had intended to bury the corpse in the kitchen, as the hearthstone was found loose, as if it had been taken up, but as the house drain ran below, it was of course impossible to place the body there. At the inquest which was opened on Thursday the evidence showed that the murdered woman was the wife of a painter at Gloucester, from whom she had been separated for many years. She had led a dissipated life for some time past, and had given the man Brown frequent cause for jealousy by her intrigues with other men in his own house and elsewhere. It appeared also that Brown was in possession of title-deeds of houses which appeared to belong to her, which, as the Coroner remarked, might show that the murder arose from a more sordid motive than jealousy. The inquest was ultimately adjourned to Tuesday, the Coroner stating that he should issue his warrant for the interment of the woman, but should not order the burial of Brown, in case the jury should feel it their duty in his case to return any special verdict.

THE LATE MURDER ON THE NORTH-LONDON RAILWAY.—On Friday the Government obtained a second warrant for the apprehension of Müller and sent it out in the steamer of Saturday, in case any accident should happen to the City of Washington. The evidence on which this warrant was issued was taken in public, and was much fuller than has before been given. It is noticeable that a gentleman, a friend of Mr. Briggs, saw him in the carriage at the Bow Station, the last time he was seen alive. There were then two other persons in the compartment. Unfortunately this witness had a second-class ticket and did not get in beside his friend. This evidence was considered to show that there must have been two persons concerned in the murder, and this idea was supposed to be strengthened by the apprehension of a man at Stafford, whose appearance corresponded with the description of the murderer, and in whose pockets were found a duplicate for a gold watch and a pocket-book, in which the name of Müller occurred. Inspector Williamson saw the prisoner on Friday night, and at once found that he was not the man. He remains in custody however on a charge of felony. The police have since found in the house in which Müller lodged a life preserver with marks of blood. It was the property of a fellow workman, and had been taken by Müller without his knowledge. The coroner's inquest was resumed on Monday, but the proceedings were of a merely formal nature. Mr. Lee, a friend of Mr. Briggs, repeated the evidence which he had previously given before the magistrate to the effect that he saw and talked with Mr. Briggs on the night of his murder at the Bow Station, and that there were then two persons in the compartment with him, neither of whom attempted to get out. The inquest was then adjourned for a fortnight.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths in London in the week that ended on Saturday, July 23, were 1399. The average number in the corresponding week of the 10 years 1854-63, corrected for increase of population, was 1266. The present return is therefore 133 above the average. During the week the births of 976 boys and 894 girls, in all 1870 children, were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1831.

ALDERSHOT.—Two soldiers were drinking at a beer-house on Aldershot Moor, on Saturday, when a quarrel arose between them. One of the men was a private of the 75th Regiment, named Hutchins, and the other was called Barlow. During the altercation Barlow struck Hutchins, and with one blow behind the ear felled him to the ground dead. He was at once arrested, and has been committed for trial. He has hitherto borne a good character in his regiment, and at a late competition in camp with athletic games carried off several prizes.

BIRKENHEAD.—The Earl of Shaftesbury, after some correspondence with the Rev. Dr. Baylee, the Principal of St. Aidan's Theological College, has withdrawn his name from the list of Vice-Presidents of the institution, in consequence of a circular which has lately been issued intimating that "any Wesleyan wishing to become a minister of the Church of England can be admitted to St. Aidan's College without the preparatory examination, and on advantageous terms." Lord Shaftesbury has expressed his opinion that such a mode of "touting" for candidates for holy orders is as derogatory to the character of the Church of England as it is offensive to the Wesleyan community.

DURHAM.—John Croudace and Thomas Allison, who were convicted at the assizes last week of garotte robberies at Sunderland, and sentenced, the former to five years' and the latter to ten years' penal servitude, with 20 lashes each, underwent the punishment of flogging at the County Prison on Saturday. The instrument of punishment was manufactured by a sailor, who is undergoing imprisonment in the gaol, expressly for the purpose. The cat is ingeniously composed of nine thongs of stout leather, in each of which are nine knots, and these being connected to a flexible handle, the power, wielded by strong hands, is terrific. At every stroke the knots cut deeply, making flesh and blood fly in every direction. The prisoners were firmly tied up in a reclining position, the lower part of their shoulders exposed, the higher and lower part of their backs being protected by padding. The two warders alternately inflicted ten lashes each on each of the prisoners. The first lash was received with comparative equanimity by each prisoner; but on the second, the yell of agony which burst forth is represented as indescribable, and their cries continued during the remainder of the punishment. The prisoners were then taken down and removed to the prison infirmary in a state of complete prostration. Although the other prisoners did not witness the punishment, they could hear the shrieks of the sufferers in their cells, and it is hoped that the contemplation of the punishment may have a salutary effect on them.

LIVERPOOL.—A fatal collision took place between two steamers on Saturday night, at the entrance to the Mersey from the Crosby Channel. Between 10 and 11 o'clock the steamer Golden Pledge, belonging to Messrs. Klingender & Co., and fitted out in the Birkenhead docks with the intention, it is understood, of running the blockade of the Confederate States, went down the river with a clearance for Havana. She was heavily laden, and having her coals on board for the voyage, was very deep in the water. About half a mile outside the Rock Lighthouse, she was run into by the steamer Cognac, from Cadiz, belonging to Messrs. Harrison. The Golden Pledge received such serious damage that she almost immediately sank. The two engineers and one fireman went down with the vessel. The captain, the mate, and another man saved themselves by clinging to the Cognac, and 10 others were saved by a waterman's boat, which was towing at the stern of the ship at the time of the disaster, but most of them had to swim for their lives until they were picked up.

MANCHESTER.—On Tuesday morning a shocking murder and suicide were committed in a house in Great Ancoats. The occupiers of the house were James Gilbert, a pavier and wellsinker, with his wife and five children. About 6 in the morning a policeman heard cries of "murder" issuing from Junction Street, and on going in that direction met one of the girls of the family, who called out that her father had stabbed her mother. On entering the house the officer saw the wife at the top of the stairs, with her throat cut from ear to ear. The stairs were covered with blood, and the unfortunate woman only survived a few minutes. The officer proceeded upstairs, where he found the husband sitting on the side of a bed, with his throat cut, and a stream of blood flowing from the wound. He also died soon afterwards. A woman living in the neighbourhood had arrived before the policeman, but the murderer threatened to take her life if she interfered, and she left the house to obtain assistance. The deceased woman had been drinking for a week past, which is said to have led to the dreadful tragedy. The husband had been heard to say he would hang himself or cut somebody's throat. He was about 50 years old, and the wife was about 40. They had five children, the two eldest of whom had left the house, owing to their father's threats. The three others were in the house at the time of the murder. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against James Gilbert, and that he afterwards committed "suicide, while in an unsound state of mind."

THE LORD LIEUTENANCY.—It is stated that the Earl of Carlisle, in consequence of ill-health, is likely to yield to the opinion of his medical advisers by withdrawing for a time from public life. It is thought that the Duke of Devonshire will be his successor in the Viceroyalty; and, in the event of his declining, the Marquis of Lansdowne and the Earl of Bessborough are mentioned.

SUSPENSION OF FATHER DALY.—The Rev. Peter Daly, of Galway, has been suspended by the Pope, on the report of his bishop, for attending a soirée of the Mechanics' Institution.

THE CASTLETON MURDER.—At the Mayo Assizes on Friday, Michael Morrison and Michael Clarke were indicted for the wilful murder of Lawrence Conlan, at Castlebar, in July 1863. These prisoners were tried for this offence at the last assizes, but the jury did not agree. The deceased was a member of the constabulary, and was returning home from the house of a friend in Castlebar on the 22d of July, 1863, when he was overtaken by the prisoners, who brutally murdered him by kicking him in the street, and by stabbing him in the neck with a knife. Morrison was tried first, and was found guilty, with a recommendation to mercy. Baron Deasy sentenced him to be hanged on the 25th of August. Michael Clarke was then tried and found Guilty, but as he did not absolutely strike the fatal blow the jury recommended him to mercy. Sentence of death was passed on him, but the judge informed him that the recommendation would be forwarded to the Lord Lieutenant, and that his life would probably be spared, but that the least punishment he should expect would be perpetual penal servitude.

ILLEGAL MARRIAGE.—At the Monaghan assizes on Friday, before Baron Fitzgerald, the Rev. John M'Loughton, Roman Catholic priest, was indicted for the second time for assisting to celebrate an illegal marriage between Daniel Peterson and Susanna Quinton, in Enniskillen. The prisoner was indicted at the last assizes, but his trial was postponed, and the case removed by certiorari from Fermanagh to Monaghan. It will be remembered that Miss Quinton was a ward in Chancery and a Protestant; Peterson was an attorney's clerk and a Roman Catholic; and their marriage was performed, without the knowledge of the young woman's friends, by a priest of whom they aver they know nothing. The jury found a verdict of Not Guilty. Their verdict does not affect the nullity of the marriage.

ALLEGED WIFE POISONING.—A remarkable case of alleged wife poisoning was tried at the assizes for Tyrone on Friday. The prisoner was William M'Nickle, and he was arraigned for the second time on this charge. It appeared that he had been married to his wife about three years, and that shortly before her death she had been confined of a child. During her illness a nurse made some gruel for her, which she left in charge of the prisoner while she went to the well for water. After partaking of this gruel the prisoner's wife died in great agony, and it was proved that her death was caused by arsenic. A dog which ate some of the gruel was at once removed by the prisoner and destroyed, and when it was discovered and examined six weeks afterwards, arsenic was found in its body. Under these circumstances, the prisoner was tried for murder, but the jury disagreed, and, after being locked up several hours, were discharged.

CONVICTION OF A PRIEST FOR FORGERY.—At the Tralee Assizes on the 16th, the Rev. John Jerrine [illegible], a Roman Catholic priest, was tried for having obtained money from several persons by falsely pretending that he was authorised by the Roman Catholic primate, Dr. Dixon, to collect money for the erection of a new church and school-house. He was also charged with forging the signature of Dr. Dixon to a document purporting to authorise him to collect money for the same purpose. He pleaded Guilty; and in mitigation of punishment stated that he had been curate of two parishes for 16 years, during which he had expended 1300*l.* of his own money in building three chapels for the accommodation of the parishioners. He therefore thought he was perfectly justified in endeavouring to collect the three or four hundred pounds with which he could enter some religious community. After an impressive address from Judge Ball, he was sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment.

SUSPECTED MURDER NEAR GLASGOW.—A woman named Jane Sneddon, 37 years of age, who gained a livelihood as a farm-worker, was murdered last week at Hamilton Farm, near Rutherglen. She was a woman of dissolute habits, and lodged occasionally in the house of a collier at Eastfield, but had no fixed place of residence. On the morning of the 20th she complained to her landlady that she had been severely injured on the previous Saturday. She said that she had been indulging in liquor on that day, and while lying in a partially intoxicated state in a piece of vacant ground between New Row, Hamilton Farm, a shameful assault had been committed upon her person, whereby she was wounded to the great effusion of blood. The unfortunate woman, it appears, lay on the ground a considerable time after the committal of the act, and then succeeded in reaching her lodgings. She did not inform her landlady that she had been assaulted till Wednesday, the 20th, and in the course of the day she gradually sank and died. About half-an-hour before she expired she stated that the assault had been committed by a collier called Thomas Cunningham. On receiving this statement the county police lost no time in apprehending Cunningham, who is a lad only 19 years of age. On Friday he was taken before Sheriff Bell on the charge of murder, and committed to prison for further examination.

ETON AND WESTMINSTER BOAT RACE.—The contest between oared boats, between the public schools of Eton and Westminster, took place on Thursday from Chiswick to Putney. The weather was fine, and there was a large assemblage of spectators on both banks of the river. The race was keenly contested, but Eton got the lead soon after the start and kept it to the close. Westminster made repeated and desperate efforts to reverse the position, but was overmatched.

Law.

HOUSE OF LORDS: The Yelverton Marriage (Yelverton v. Yelverton or Longworth).—The judgment of the House in this long litigated case was delivered on Thursday morning. It was an appeal from the decision of the Scotch courts of law declaring the marriage of Teresa Longworth, the respondent, with the Hon. Major Yelverton, the appellant, legal. The law lords present were the Lord Chancellor, Lord Kingsdown, Lord Wensleydale, and Lord Chelmsford. The Lord Chancellor read his judgment, and said there was nothing in the evidence which rendered it improbable, and much that made it probable, that a secret marriage had taken place between the parties in Scotland. He believed that the respondent agreed to go and cohabit with the appellant provided that a religious ceremony took place in a Roman Catholic chapel in Ireland. He believed the cohabitation which took place in Ireland was in consequence of what took place in Scotland, and he therefore agreed with two of the judges of the court below, that there was a marriage validly constituted in Scotland between the appellant and the respondent, and that they did then, and do now, stand in the relation of man and wife. In conclusion his lordship said that Lord Brougham, who was unable to attend to give judgment in person, agreed with him in favour of the marriage. Lord Wensleydale said that he had come to the conclusion that there had not been a legal marriage in Scotland, and that there had not been a promise of marriage in Ireland. He therefore moved that the decision of the court below be reversed. Lord Chelmsford thought that the conduct of the respondent at Roscrea was fatal to her case, for she would never have required the Roman Catholic ceremony to be performed if she felt that the Scotch marriage was legal. He did not consider the declaration of the appellant to Father Mooney "that he was a Protestant Catholic" was sufficient to constitute that marriage legal. The subsequent conduct of the parties was not sufficient to legalise the alleged Scotch marriage, even in Scotland not having taken place until after the Irish marriage. Having weighed the evidence carefully, he came to the conclusion that the respondent had entirely failed to establish her marriage, and that the interlocutory decision of the Court of Session ought to be reversed.—Lord Kingsdown said that he did not think there had been a promise of marriage in Scotland. He considered that the religious ceremony in Ireland was intended to have no legal effect, but simply to calm the conscientious scruples of the lady. Under all the circumstances he was of opinion that the respondent had entirely failed to establish her marriage.—The Lords being thus divided, 3 to 1, the Lord Chancellor then gave judgment that the judgment of the Court below be reversed, and that the actions against the appellant be stayed, but without costs. [A contemporary says—"The result of the judgment was anxiously waited for by Mrs. Yelverton at the office of her agent. On being made aware that the decision was against her she swooned, and for some time remained unconscious, passing from one fainting fit into another. Restoratives were administered, and after a short interval the poor lady rallied, and was then carried in a semi-prostrate state to a brougham, and conveyed to the residence of her uncle in Cambridge Terrace, Hyde Park." The Morning Post has the following:—"A minute of reference to oath has been lodged by Mrs. Yelverton, the practical result of which is to prevent the judgment being made final in Scotland until the parties to the suit have been examined on oath. Their evidence given in Ireland is considered most important."]

WESTERN CIRCUIT: EXETER.—The Charge against General Hutchinson.—The grand jury having ignored the bill preferred against Major-General Walter Nelson Hutchinson, for feloniously killing and slaying George M'Coy, at Devonport, the General took his place in the dock to be tried under the coroner's inquisition. He was dressed in private clothes, and on being arraigned pleaded Not Guilty. Mr. Lopes, who appeared for the Crown, said that Major-General Hutchinson was charged on the coroner's inquisition with what was called the manslaughter of a man named M'Coy, who was proceeding from the Breakwater in Plymouth Sound, when a ball directed from the Citadel struck his boat, and he was killed. Upon this a coroner's inquisition was held at Devonport, and a verdict of Manslaughter returned against General Hutchinson, as the Commander-in-Chief at Plymouth, by whose orders the artillery practice was carried on. Subsequently a bill was prepared, which had been ignored by the grand jury. He had since had the opportunity of consulting the authorities upon this subject, and was of opinion that the charge could not legally be brought home to the General, and he therefore should not offer any evidence on the coroner's inquisition. As, however, several communications which had been sent to the General in respect to the practice from the towns of Devonport and Plymouth had not been attended to, it was to be hoped that the death of this man at any rate would have the effect of causing the authorities for the future to take efficient measures to prevent similar fatalities. His lordship, addressing the jury, said—The course which the learned counsel has taken is the usual course. Where the grand jury have ignored a bill it is not usual to proceed further upon the coroner's inquisition. And not only is it not usual, but it would lead in some cases to a public scandal were it otherwise, because at the same assizes one jury might say that there was not enough evidence against a person even to put him on his trial, whilst another jury might find him guilty. The learned counsel, in my opinion, has in this case acted rightly, and I have had an opportunity of reading the depositions. As no evidence is offered against him, and as you have no opportunity of finding a man guilty without evidence, there is only one verdict you can return. The jury immediately returned a verdict of Not Guilty. His Lordship: Let him be discharged. General Hutchinson then bowed and left the dock.

OXFORD CIRCUIT: The Murder of a Policeman at Willenhall.—Thomas Lockley, 24, locksmith; John Edwards, 26, labourer; George Lockley, 21, labourer; Joshua Stanley, 26, brass-caster; and Joseph Willetts, 19, locksmith; were charged with the Wilful Murder of William Lyons, a police-constable, at Willenhall, on the 8th of May. It appeared from the evidence that the prisoners had been drinking and creating a disturbance in a public house, the landlord of which threatened to send for a policeman if they did not leave his house. On their departure they met deceased, to whom the prisoner Lockley used abusive language. The officer told him that he would lock him up if he did not go on. A struggle ensued, in which all the prisoners appeared more or less to have taken part. The deceased officer attempted to handcuff Thomas Lockley, who thereupon threw a brick at his head, fracturing the skull and causing such injuries that paralysis of the right side ensued, and he died on the next day. The defence was that deceased was not acting legally in the execution of his duty in endeavouring to handcuff Lockley, and that at most, therefore, he and his companions were only guilty of manslaughter. The jury found George Lockley, Thomas Lockley, Edwards, and Stanley, Guilty of Manslaughter, and Acquitted Willetts. Mr. Justice Shee sentenced Thomas Lockley, who threw the brick which gave the fatal blow, to eight years, six years, and Joshua Stanley, who had been recommended to mercy, to five years' penal servitude. The fifth man, George Lockley, his brother, to six years, John Edwards to [illegible] Willetts, who was acquitted, was then indicted for stealing the policeman's truncheon, but counsel for the prosecution considered that the ends of justice had been secured, and decline to offer any evidence. A verdict of Not Guilty was then recorded, and the prisoner was discharged.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT: NOTTINGHAM.—The Fiskerton Murder.—Richard Parker, butcher, aged 29, was charged with the wilful murder of his mother, Elizabeth Parker, at Fiskerton, on the 10th of May last, and also with shooting his father with intent to murder him. The prisoner, who was on bad terms with his father, went to the house drunk and threatened to fight him. The father called him a rogue and a villain, and ordered him to leave the house. The prisoner then went into the house and got a double-barrelled gun, upon which his mother induced the father to go away. He went towards the stable, closely followed by the mother, when the prisoner fired both barrels in succession. Both the father and mother were severely wounded, but the former recovered, and the latter, after lingering for some time, at length died of her wounds. The jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder, with a recommendation to mercy on account of the prisoner's being in liquor. The Judge: Prisoner, have you anything to say? Prisoner: Yes, my lord, I am not guilty of wilful murder. I had no intention of murder; it was an accident. The Judge: I quite agree with the jury. I firmly believe that you fully intended to murder your father as well as your mother. The recommendation of the jury I will forward to the proper quarter. Mr. Justice Blackburn then passed sentence of Death in the usual form.

DERBY: Murder of a Husband.—Mary M'Morrow was indicted for the murder of her husband, on the 23d June, at North Wingfield, by setting fire to his clothes as he lay asleep and drunk on a squab in their sitting-room. The man died from the effects of the burns about a fortnight after the act had been perpetrated. It was urged in defence that the man had fallen into the fire whilst in a state of intoxication, but this was disproved by many witnesses, and his coat, which the prisoner had burnt to create the belief that he had fallen into the fire, was found to be burnt on the left side instead of the right. The prisoner was found Guilty of Manslaughter. Mr. Justice Keating sentenced her to seven years' penal servitude, and said that the Jury had taken a merciful view of the case. Burning a Man with a Hot Poker.—Eliza Hoyland, aged 48, a publican, pleaded Guilty to the charge of burning Thomas Shooter, at Chesterfield, with a poker. It appeared that the man was a tramp, and was in the house of defendant very drunk and refused to leave. The prisoner threatened that if he did not pay what was due and go she would apply a hot poker to his person, and she put the poker in the fire for the purpose. It was also stated that the man gave considerable offence by the indecent state of his clothes, and that his condition and conduct were disgusting. As he refused to go the prisoner at length got a man to put him on the ground, face downwards, and while in that position she carried out her threat, and put the hot poker against his flesh through an aperture in his trousers. A surgeon deposed that he found appearances of burning and excoriation, but he did not think the poker could have been red hot, or the burns would have more serious. The prisoner excused her conduct on the grounds already mentioned, and expressed her sorrow. Mr. Justice Keating severely commented on the offence, and sentenced her to three years' penal servitude. She seemed utterly astonished and overcome by the sentence.

Obituary.

THE DOWAGER COUNTESS AMHERST died a few days since at Bournemouth, in her 73d year. She was the eldest daughter of the third Duke of Dorset, and married first in 1811 the Earl of Plymouth; and secondly, in 1839, the first Earl Amherst. Her ladyship had no issue by either marriage.

LADY HARRIET ELLERTON died on the 27th inst., after a lingering illness, at her residence in Connaught Place, Hyde Park. She was the youngest daughter of the seventh Earl of Scarborough, and was twice married, first to the Rev. Frederick Manners-Sutton, and secondly, in 1837, to Mr. J. L. Ellerton.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR WILLIAM BRERETON, R.A., K.C.B., K.H., died on Wednesday last in the Albany, Piccadilly, in his 78th year. He obtained his commission as second-lieutenant in 1805. He served in Spain from 1809, and was present at the defence of Cadiz and of Fort Matagorda, at the siege of San Sebastian, the battles of Barossa, Vittoria, the Pyrenees, Orthes, and Toulouse; in the retreat from Burgos, at San Munos, near Salamanca, Helete, St. Palais, Sanveterre, Aire, and Tarbes. In the campaign in the Netherlands he was present at Quatre Bras and at Waterloo. He was subsequently second in command of the expedition under General d'Aguilar against the forts of the Bocca Tigris, and the city of Canton. In the Crimean war he was on board H.M.S. Britannia, under the command of his relative, Vice-Admiral Dundas, and directed the rockets fired against the forts of Sebastopol in 1854. For a short period he held the command of the Irish Constabulary, and for a time was commandant of the 4th Brigade of the Horse Artillery. In 1838 he was made a Companion of the Bath, having the year previous been made a Knight of the Guelphic Order. In 1861 he was nominated a Knight Commander of the Bath, in recognition of his services. He also contributed largely to his military renown by his writings on the improvement of artillery. He received the silver war medal, with six clasps, and the Crimean medal and clasp for Sebastopol.

MAJOR-GENERAL HARDINGE, K.H., brother of the late Viscount Hardinge, and the late Sir Charles Hardinge, Bart., died on the 20th inst., at 32, Hyde Park Square, after a short illness, in his 74th year. He was the fourth son of the Rev. Henry Hardinge, and was born in 1790. He entered the Army at an early age, and obtained his commission in 1806. He served in the Peninsula from 1812 till the end of the war in 1814, including the battle of Vittoria, siege of San Sebastian, battles of Orthes and Toulouse, affairs at Orma, Tolosa, Bidassoa, and Tarbes. He served also in the campaign of 1815, and was present at Ligny and Quatre Bras. He was made a knight of the Royal Hanoverian Guelphic Order in 1825, in recognition of his services, and received the silver war medal and four clasps for the Peninsula. He attained the rank of Major-General in 1858.

ADMIRAL BERTIE CATOR died on the 23d inst., at the Palace Hotel, Buckingham Gate, in his 77th year. He entered the Navy in 1800, under his uncle, Captain Albemarle Bertie. He was actively employed in the capture of privateers in the Mediterranean, and was captured by two French frigates while in charge of a transport, on its way from the Cape of Good Hope to the Mauritius, but was exchanged shortly afterwards, and was then placed in command of the Bombay Anna, the East India Company's ship, in which he assisted at the capture of the Isle of France in 1810. He commanded the Actæon on the coast of America in an attack on the barracks, &c., in Lynn Haven Bay, in 1813, and took part in various other services afloat. After gaining post rank he was not employed afloat, and accepted the retirement of 1846, attaining the rank of Rear Admiral in 1851, and that of Admiral in 1862.

COLONEL FIELDING BROWNE, C.B., died at his residence, 82, Gloucester Crescent, Regent's Park, on the 22d inst., in his 80th year. He entered the Army in 1800, and accompanied the 40th Regiment to the Peninsula in 1808. He commanded the regiment at the assault of Badajoz, and was rewarded with the gold medal. He served also in the expedition against New Orleans, and commanded the regiment at the battle of Waterloo. He was appointed a barrack master in 1836, and after serving about 20 years at Malta returned to England, and had since been employed in charge at Regent's Park, St. John's Wood, and Kensington. Besides receiving the gold medal for Badajoz, he received the silver war medal with seven clasps for the other battles and siege.

MR. DIVETT, M.P. for Exeter, died on Tuesday, at Bystock, near Exmouth, after a long illness. He was the son of Mr. Edward Divett by the daughter of Mr. John Kensington. He was born in 1797, and was educated at Eton. He was first returned for the city of Exeter in 1832, and has ever since continuously represented the city in the Liberal interest. He was a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for Devon; and chairman of the South Australian Banking and Land Company. He married in 1836 the daughter of Mr. George Ross.

MR. SERJEANT MEREWETHER, who was for 17 years Town Clerk of the City of London, died on the 22d inst. at his residence, Castle Field, near Calne, at the age of 84. He was called to the bar in 1809, and at the time of his death, as for many years before, held the rank of a serjeant-at-law, with a patent of precedence. He was a D.C.L., and attorney-general to the late Queen Dowager. For many years he held the office of Recorder of Reading, and went the Western Circuit. At one time, when he practised much before Parliamentary Committees, he is said to have realised an income of 5000*l.* a year. He was elected to the office of Town Clerk of London, at a salary of 2000*l.* a year, in 1842, when he was 62 years of age, and relinquished his professional practice in order to devote himself exclusively to the discharge of his duties. He resigned the office in his 79th year, from considerations of failing health and advanced age, and was allowed a pension of 1000*l.* a year from the Corporation. He was a man of fine presence, with much suavity of manner and a dignified bearing, and it is generally acknowledged by the civic authorities that the office was never more worthily sustained than by him. Serjeant Merewether had a large family, five of whom survive, his eldest son being Mr. Henry Merewether, Q.C., and Recorder of Devizes. It is remarkable that his death was preceded by a few hours by that of his brother, the Rev. Francis Merewether, Rector of Cole-orton, Leicestershire, at the age of 80.

MRS. WOOD, formerly better known as Miss Paton, the vocalist, died on Thursday at Bulcliffe Hall, Bretton West, near Wakefield, where she had resided for the last 12 months. She had retired from public life for many years, and was latterly a teacher of music at Leeds. It was at Drury Lane and Covent Garden, that as Miss Paton, she first won her fame as a vocalist, and gained a hold upon the admiration of the public, which never ceased until her retirement from the stage. Her repertoire extended through the whole range of English opera, in which there was scarcely a piece which she did not adorn by her attractive singing and dramatic talent. She was at the height of her reputation as a vocalist when she was married to Lord William Lennox. The union, however, did not prove a happy one, and no very long time elapsed before a separation, followed by a divorce, took place. She subsequently married Mr. Wood, himself a vocalist of considerable talent. She still, however, continued to maintain the position she had achieved as the first of English female vocalists, gradually contracting her public engagements, however, until she finally retired from the stage, and took up her residence at Wakefield, where she lived for several years. She afterwards removed to Leeds, where she for many years exercised the profession of a teacher of music.

MR. WILLIAM KEMMIS, formerly Crown solicitor, and solicitor to the Treasury in Ireland, died on the 20th inst., at his house in Kildare Street, Dublin. He assisted in person at the trials of 1798, and himself conducted, with great discretion, skill, and ability, every remarkable trial from 1801 to the end of the disturbed period of 1848, and received the thanks and approbation of each Attorney General and Administration under whose directions he acted. In 1859 he retired from his official duties, after a service of more than half a century. His death makes a vacancy in Irish society that will not easily be replaced, and removes an historical link between the past and present century.

Of Grapes and Pine Apples there is also a good supply, and Black, Red, and White Currants are plentiful. Peas are plentiful, as are also Potatos. Flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Heaths, Pelargoniums, Mignonette, and Roses.

Messrs. Pattenden & Smith report that the demand continues good, and fine samples difficult to be met with of last year's growth. The late advance is fully maintained. The plantation accounts are very favourable, and the crop bids fair to be of extraordinary good quality. Rain is much wanted.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, July 25.

The number of Beasts is considerably smaller than on Monday last, yet there is a fair supply. A better clearance is effected, but it is difficult to obtain much higher prices, except for a few choicer descriptions. The supply of Sheep and Lambs is very small. The trade is not very brisk, but prices are better for all descriptions. Choicest Calves are rather dearer. From Germany and Holland there are 2240 Beasts, 7590 Sheep, 306 Calves, and 220 Pigs; from Spain, 140 Beasts; from Scotland, 68 Beasts; from Ireland, 90; from Norfolk and Suffolk, 100; and 2510 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, July 28.

We have a short supply of Beasts. The demand is pretty good, and Monday's quotations are well maintained. The number of Sheep and Lambs is about the same as on Thursday last. There is a better demand for them, and Monday's advance is freely given. Choice Calves are not quite so plentiful, and prices for all kinds are rather higher. Our foreign supply consists of 690 Beasts, 2480 Sheep, 658 Calves, and 140 Pigs. Milch Cows, 70.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, July 25.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was small, and met a slow sale at the prices of this day sen'night. The market was tolerably attended, nevertheless foreign Wheat was neglected, and taken only in retail at the rates of last week. Grinding Barley was 6d. per qr. cheaper. Beans were fully as dear. Peas were 1s. per qr. dearer. The Oat trade was quiet, and sales could only be effected by submitting to a reduction of 6d. per qr. Flour remained steady:

FRIDAY, July 29.

With the exception of about three hours' rain on the 25th, and a little on the 26th, the weather since the 22d has continued fine and warm. Accounts of the Wheat crop vary much, and have seldom been more contradictory. We think that with a continuance of fine weather the crop, particularly on Wheat land, will prove better than seems to be generally anticipated, but the samples will be more variable, and probably there will be much thin Wheat with a lighter average weight. The breadth of Barley is large, but without rain the proportion of grinding will probably be large. Oats promise but moderately, and Beans and Peas badly. During the above named interval the Wheat trade has been dull throughout the kingdom, and in the majority of the principal markets a decline of about 1s. per qr. has resulted. Generally Oats, Beans, and Peas have continued to have an upward tendency of prices, but owing to the large arrivals of Oats here their previous value has been barely maintained. Barley has undergone little alteration in prices. Flour has been less in request, but we do not alter our quotations. Since Friday last 73 vessels have been reported off the coast. Paris, July 28.—The business has been limited during the week, but holders were very firm, and with a little demand even an advance of about 9d. per 280 lbs. has been obtained to-day in a few instances. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 34s. 9d. per 280 lbs. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 29,700 cwts. Very little has been done in Wheat at 6d. to 1s. per qr. higher rates. The arrivals of English Wheat are small and of Oats large, as also of foreign Wheat, Barley, Oats, and Flour. The attendance at this morning's market was almost confined to factors and agents; the English Wheat fresh up being held for Monday's prices remained unsold at the end of the market, but rather lower rates would have been accepted for foreign ex ship, had buyers come forward. Beans and Peas continue to improve in value. Prices of Oats are unaltered. Malting Barley is inquired after, but Grinding neglected.

The Furnishing of Bed Rooms.

HEAL AND SON have observed for some time that it would be advantageous to their customers to see a much larger selection of BED ROOM FURNITURE than is usually displayed, and that to judge properly of the style and effect of the different descriptions of Furniture, it is necessary that each description should be placed in separate rooms. They have, therefore, erected large and additional Show Rooms, by which they are enabled not only to extend their show of Iron, Brass, and Wood Bedsteads and Bed Room Furniture, beyond what they believe has ever been attempted, but also to provide several small rooms for the purpose of keeping complete suites of Bed Room Furniture in the different styles.

Japanned Deal Goods may be seen in complete suites of five or six different colours, some of them light and ornamental, and others of a plainer description. Suites of Stained Deal Gothic Furniture, Polished Deal, Oak, and Walnut, are also set apart in separate rooms, so that customers are able to see the effect as it would appear in their own rooms. A Suite of very superior Gothic Oak Furniture will generally be kept in stock, and from time to time new and select Furniture in various woods will be added.

Bed Furnitures are fitted to the Bedsteads in large numbers, so that a complete assortment may be seen, and the effect of any particular pattern ascertained as it would appear on the Bedstead.

A very large stock of Bedding (Heal & Son's original trade) is placed on the Bedsteads.

The stock of Mahogany goods for the better Bed Rooms, and Japanned Goods for plain and Servant's use, is very greatly increased. The entire Stock is arranged in eight rooms, six galleries (each 120 feet long), and two large ground floors, the whole forming as complete an assortment of Bed Room Furniture as they think can possibly be desired.

Every attention is paid to the manufacture of the Cabinet work, and they have just erected large Workshops on the premises for this purpose, that the manufacture may be under their own immediate care.

Their Bedding trade receives their constant and personal attention, every article being made on the Premises.

They particularly call attention to their Patent Spring Mattress, the Sommier Elastique Portatif. It is portable, durable, and elastic, and lower in price than the old Spring Mattress.

News of the Week.

A PRELIMINARY treaty of peace and an armistice were signed on Monday at Vienna by the plenipotentiaries of Austria, Prussia, and Denmark. The bases of the treaty of peace are the unreserved cession of Schleswig, Holstein, and Lauenburg, with the enclaves of Jutland, to Austria and Prussia, and a rectification of the Schleswig frontier in the interest of Germany. The armistice has been concluded for three months, terminable at six weeks' notice from either party; and during its continuance Jutland is to be occupied, and the government of the province administered by the allies.

The French papers, almost without an exception, condemn the unexampled severity of the two great German Powers in despoiling Denmark of a third of her territory without regard to race, origin, or nationality. They condemn the proceeding as an abuse of power, and contend that the conditions of peace are contrary to equity and the principle of nationalities. They express their belief that Austria and Prussia have compromised themselves in the face of public opinion in Europe, that the bad effect of their ambition will recoil upon the whole of Germany, and that the wrongs of Denmark will ultimately be avenged by the outbreak of a more serious quarrel between them and the minor Powers of the Confederation, which are already resenting their conduct in the Duchies as a violation of the rights and privileges of the Federal Diet.

Advices from Tunis state that the insurrection has been brought to a close by a timely concession on the part of the Government. A reduction of taxation has been agreed upon, in consequence of which the principal tribes who were in revolt have sent in their submission, whilst the chief of the insurgents has been permitted to leave the Regency and go into voluntary exile.

From the United States we learn that President Lincoln has issued a call for 500,000 volunteers, to serve for 12 months. Should that number not be forthcoming a draft is to be enforced. The Confederates are engaged in an attempt to blockade the James River, with the object of cutting off General Grant's communications by water. Gen.

GRANT is said to have contracted his lines, though he is still proceeding with the siege of Petersburg. The capture of Atlanta by General SHERMAN is reported, but no official confirmation of the fact has been received. General JOHNSTON, who has hitherto commanded the Confederates in that quarter, has been superseded by General HOOD. A Confederate victory is reported from Fort Hudson on the Mississippi, where the Federal troops under the command of General ELLIOTT were attacked and routed with great slaughter. A strong Confederate force has invaded Kentucky, and is marching northwards. A conspiracy has been discovered in the Mississippi Valley, with the object of forming a separate Confederacy in the North West, and several of the Secessionists at St. Louis have been arrested. There are vague rumours of dissensions in the Federal Cabinet, from which it is said Mr. STANTON will shortly retire. An attempt to open negotiations for peace has been made on the Canadian side of Niagara, by Mr. CLAY and Mr. HOLCOMB on the part of the South, and Mr. HORACE GREELEY on the part of the North. The Confederate agents asked Mr. GREELEY to procure them a safe convoy to Washington to consult with the President personally on terms of pacification. Mr. LINCOLN replied that he would grant them a safe passage if duly accredited by their Government. The Confederate agents said they had no special, but only a general mission; upon which Mr. LINCOLN sent his private secretary to Mr. GREELEY, with a message addressed to whom it might concern, stating that he could only negotiate upon the terms of a thorough restoration of the Union and the abandonment of slavery. The negotiations were thereupon abruptly terminated, the Confederate agents refusing to enter upon a negotiation of which the basis was pre-arranged by the opposite party.

By the Bombay mail we learn that the VICEROY held a Durbar at Simla on the 15th of June, at which he addressed the chiefs of the Hill States in their own tongue, commending them for their loyalty to the Imperial Government, and urging upon them the duty of extending to their dependants and ryots the same beneficence of rule which they themselves experienced, and of encouraging the spread of education among their families and people. A great battle was fought on the 9th of June near Bameean, in Cabul, between the troops of the AMEER and those of his brother, AFZUL KHAN, in which the latter were utterly defeated, with loss of all their guns, ammunition, and camp equipage.

Home News.

THE COURT.—The Queen and Royal family, with the Prince and Princess of Wales, continue at Osborne. On Thursday, the 28th, her Majesty went on board the iron-cased cupola ship Royal Sovereign, lying off Osborne, accompanied by Princess Louisa and Prince Louis of Hesse. The Queen embarked in the Fairy at Osborne pier at six o'clock, and the yacht having been laid alongside the Royal Sovereign, her Majesty and the Royal party went on board, and were received by Captain Sherard Osborn and the officers of the ship and Captain Cowper Coles, who explained to her Majesty the construction and arrangement of the cupola and of the various parts of the ship, of which her Majesty expressed great admiration. The Queen remained on board for some time, and then, returning to the Fairy, cruised towards Ryde before returning to Osborne. Princess Louis of Hesse cruised with her Majesty. The Dean of Westminster and Lady Augusta Stanley arrived on a visit to her Majesty. On Friday morning the Prince and Princess of Wales and the infant Prince arrived from Goodwood on a visit to her Majesty. The Prince and Princess, the young Prince, and suite are occupying Osborne Cottage. On Saturday the Right Hon. C. P. Villiers arrived at Osborne, and had an audience of the Queen. In the afternoon her Majesty and Princess Louis of Hesse drove out. On Sunday the Queen and Princess Louisa attended evening service at Whippingham Church. The Dean of Westminster preached the sermon. The Prince and Princess of Wales attended the morning service. On Monday the Prince of Wales and Prince Louis of Hesse went to the Royal Victoria Hospital at Netley, where the Prince of Wales laid the first stone of the monument to the Crimean medical officers. On Tuesday the Queen and Princess Louisa drove out. The Prince and Princess of Wales and Prince and Princess Louis of Hesse cruised in the Fairy. On Wednesday the Queen, accompanied by the Princess of Wales and Princess Louis of Hesse, drove out. Earl Granville arrived on a visit to her Majesty. On Thursday Prince Leopold, accompanied by Prince Louis of Hesse, went to Bishop's Waltham and laid the foundation stone of a new infirmary. Earl Granville left for London. In the evening the Prince and Princess of Wales took a cruise in the Fairy to witness the Yacht Club race for the Queen's Cup. The Prince of Wales was expected to leave Cowes yesterday morning in the Victoria and Albert on a cruise to Torbay and the Western ports. His Royal Highness will return this afternoon.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO THE ROYAL SOVEREIGN.—It is well known that Captain Coles's plan was first taken up and pressed upon the notice of the Government by the Prince Consort; that his Royal Highness at once saw the advantages of the principle advocated by Captain Coles; and that, if the country is at last in possession of a ship armed on this principle, it is mainly due to his Royal Highness's early efforts in its support. The knowledge of this fact gave a melancholy interest to the Queen's visit to this noble ship on Thursday, and her Majesty repeatedly expressed to Captain Coles, who was on board by her special desire, the deep interest she had taken in his success, and her gratification to find it admitted on all sides to have been most complete.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES will return to town on Monday from Osborne. On Tuesday morning the Prince will inaugurate the statue of the Prince Consort at the Licensed Victuallers' Asylum, and in the evening their Royal Highnesses will take their departure by railway for Abergeldie. The royal carriages and stud left town for Scotland on Wednesday last.

THE CABINET.—A Cabinet Council was held on Saturday at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury in Downing Street. Another Council was held on Monday.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—The election for Exeter terminated on Thursday in the return of Lord Courtenay, the Conservative candidate, by a majority of 26; the numbers being—for Lord Courtenay 1096, for Mr. T. D. Coleridge 1070. It is said that Mr. Mowbray, the Conservative member for Durham, will not offer himself for re-election, but will come forward for the northern division of the county, in opposition to Sir H. Williamson. The Hon. H. Walpole will offer himself for East Norfolk in the Conservative interest in opposition to the Hon. Colonel Coke, the Liberal sitting member. Mr. Kelk, one of the contractors for the International Exhibition Building of 1862, will contest Ipswich in the Conservative interest in opposition to Mr. Adair. It is said that the Hon. Colonel Rowley will retire from Harwich, and that Colonel Capper will offer himself in the Conservative interest.

NEW AUSTRALIAN BISHOPRIC.—The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge has voted a sum of 1000*l.* towards the endowment of the proposed new Bishopric of Grafton and Armidale. The new see will be formed out of the present extensive diocess of Sydney, and it is expected that a Bishop will be nominated in the course of a few days.

BISHOP COLENSO.—The Dean of Natal, the Archdeacon, Canon Callaway with several rectors, vicars, chaplains, and churchwardens of the diocese of Natal, have signed the following declaration:—"We, the undersigned clergy and lay members of the Church of England, being satisfied that Dr. Colenso has widely departed from the faith of the Church, and that he has been righteously deprived of his office by the Metropolitan, hereby declare our fixed resolve that we will no longer acknowledge him as our bishop."

THE CHANNEL FLEET.—Admiral Dacres' division of the fleet, consisting of the Edgar, Warrior, Black Prince, Prince Consort, and two rams, left Torbay on Friday evening for Ireland. On its arrival at Queenstown, the Lord Mayor of Dublin sent a letter to Admiral Dacres, inviting him to visit Dublin.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The King of the Belgians arrived in Paris on Thursday morning from Vichy, and proceeded to the Hôtel Bristol. It is expected that his Majesty will remain in Paris about a week. The Earl of Clarendon arrived in Paris last week, and on Friday evening dined at the Hotel of the Minister for Foreign Affairs. On Saturday evening his lordship left for Wiesbaden. The Emperor has addressed a letter to Marshal Vaillant, dated Vichy, July 31, concerning the rebuilding of the Opera House and the Hôtel Dieu Hospital. His Majesty says that the Opera House is already in an advanced state, but the first stone of the Hôtel Dieu has not yet been laid. Marshal Vaillant is therefore instructed to urge the Prefect of the Seine to commence shortly the works of the Hôtel Dieu, as his Majesty, on moral grounds, considers that it is in the highest degree important that a building devoted to pleasure should not be constructed before an asylum for the suffering. The decision of the Emperor with reference to the Suez Canal has been published. The total indemnity to be allowed to the company for surrendering the stipulations of the 20th of July, 1856, and for relinquishing certain territories, is fixed at 84 millions, to be paid in 15 yearly instal-ments. The Court of Cassation has annulled the ... of the Court of Appeal in the prosecution directed ... M. St. Cheron, and has decided that the transmission ... periodical political correspondence for insertion ... ing newspapers does not of itself constitute ... The Constitutionnel of Saturday publishes an ... signed by M. Limayrac, alluding to the change ... opinion which has taken place in Germany ... Prussia and Austria, because those Powers ... altered their policy. It says:—

"Austria and Prussia at first acted in the name of ... federation; now the Diet is not even represented ... Conference at Vienna. The competence of the Diet ... the Succession Question is misunderstood. The ... Prussia and Austria with regard to the Succession Question ... given rise to certain rumours of arrangements which ... satisfy territorial ambition without taking into consideration ... wishes of the population. Germany is, above all, anxious ... the wise and equitable principle of regulating the question ... with the assistance of the parties interested is not ... This was perhaps ... and good political foresight; but it appears not to be ... in that light at Vienna and Berlin. It is on that ground ... The terms imposed on Denmark by the two ... Powers are considered by the Paris journals ... unexampled severity. The France denominates ... Draconian. The Pays publishes an article, signed by its ... secretary, severely censuring Austria and Prussia ... despoiling Denmark of the Duchies of Schleswig-Holstein, and Lauenburg, without regard to ... origin, or nationality. It adverts to the sympathy ... shown by France to Germany, and says:—

SPAIN.—The Madrid journals assert that the Queen ... on Wednesday signed the nomination of several new ... Councillors of State. Vice Admiral Lobo has left ... way of the Antilles, to join the Spanish squadron ... the Pacific. A Council of Ministers took place ... Thursday, at which administrative measures were ... discussed.

DENMARK.—The President of the Council on Friday ... at a private sitting of the Rigsraad, communicated ... the members that an armistice had been concluded ... Vienna. A motion was brought forward on Friday ... supported by a considerable number of the members, ... the effect that the silence with which the announcement ... ment was received on the previous day should not be ... construed into an approval of the conduct of the ... Government. Furlough has been granted to ... recruits who are now undergoing their preliminary ... drill. The troops stationed at Fulinen are returning to ... Copenhagen.

THE DANISH DUCHIES.—Herr Niëper, the Former ... Civil Commissioner for Holstein, left Altona on Sunday ... for Hanover, having been summoned thither by a ... gram from the King.

SAXONY.—At the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies ... at Dresden on Monday, a question was addressed to ... Baron von Beust, as to what steps the Saxon Government ... ment had taken with reference to the recent events ... Rendsburg, with a view to uphold the honour of the ... Confederation, and especially of Saxony and her ... against "Prussian arrogance." In reply, Baron von ... Beust read a declaration made by the Saxon representative ... tive at the last sitting of the Federal Diet. The ... Chamber thereupon passed the following resolution:—

"That the occupation of Rendsburg by Prussian troops ... which has taken place by the abuse of an overwhelming force ... is a violation of the rights of the German Confederation, and an ... outrage upon the honour of the German Federal troops. The ... Chamber hereby enters a protest against this act of violence ... on the part of a German Federal power."

BAVARIA.—The Bavarian Government has instructed ... its representative at Frankfort to propose that the Diet ... should demand the immediate withdrawal of the ... Prussian troops who recently occupied Rendsburg, and ... the restoration of the previous state of things in the ... town.

WURTEMBERG.—At the sitting of the Chamber of ... Deputies on Saturday, the various requests contained in ... the address, especially with respect to the organisation ... of justice and the revision of the constitution, were ... passed by 85 to 1. The motion of Herr Oesterlen ... expressing want of confidence in the Linden Ministry ... was rejected by 78 to 13 votes. The Chambers were ... prorogued on Tuesday.

FRANKFORT.—In the sitting of the Federal Diet ... on Thursday the representative of Electoral Hesse ... brought forward for decision the memorial of Prince ... Frederick William of Hesse, who, in referring to his ... hereditary rights in Denmark, also raised claims to the ... Duchy of Lauenburg.

PRUSSIA.—It is stated that Prussia has addressed ... notes to the Cabinets of Paris, London and St. Petersburg, purporting to give reassuring explanations respecting the occupation of Rendsburg. The semi-official Neue Preussische (Kreuz) Zeitung of Thursday says:—

"The preliminaries of peace having been signed, the Federal execution in Holstein must enter a new phase, since there no longer exists any object for its continuance. Common declarations may therefore be expected to be made by Austria and Prussia at the Federal Diet."

AUSTRIA.—The preliminary Treaty of Peace and an armistice for three months were signed on Monday at Vienna by the Austrian, Prussian, and Danish Plenipotentiaries, at the Ministry for Foreign Affairs. The following are stated to be the bases of the proposed peace:—Lauenburg, Schleswig, and Holstein to be ceded to the two great German Powers. The Island of Arro to remain with Denmark; Alsen, however, and the islands in the North Sea to go with Schleswig, together with the Danish enclaves in Schleswig, the town of Ribe excepted. A rectification of the Jutland frontier will therefore take place. During the armistice Jutland will be occupied, and the Government of the province administered by the allies. A circular note has been addressed by the Austrian Government to its representatives abroad giving an analysis of the preliminaries of peace, and stating that all questions relative to the future disposal of the Duchies will be arranged by Austria in concert with the Federal governments, as such questions affect the general interests of Germany. According to the Oesterreichische Zeitung of Thursday, one of the paragraphs in the preliminaries of peace unconditionally grants to Austria and Prussia full liberty to dispose of the Duchies. The Abendpost (evening edition of the official Wiener Zeitung) says:—

"Lauenberg, Schleswig, and Holstein have been relinquished by Denmark, without any reserve. At the same time a rectification of the Schleswig frontier was determined upon in the interest of Germany. It is to the harmony existing between Austria and Prussia that Germany owes the realisation of her dearest wish, and to the same cause Europe owes it that a general conflict has been averted. Complete success was obtained by the moderation displayed by the great German Powers, and the conviction arrived at by Denmark of their future sincere and loyal alliance. The great German Powers did not wage war for the purpose of conquest, or to realise imaginary tendencies to nationality, but had in view the enforcement of positive and legitimate claims. The Elbe districts are separated from Denmark both by land and sea. These results will be sanctioned for ever by an honourable peace. Austria and Prussia do not wish to have any differences with the remainder of Germany, but they will respect the privileges and the well-established rights of the German Federal Diet."

Count von Bismark has left Vienna for Gastein to meet the King of Prussia.

ITALY.—A daring act of brigandage has been perpetrated in open day within seven miles of Florence. The carriage of Mrs. Beste, wife of Mr. Digby Beste, an English gentleman residing at Florence, was stopped on the afternoon of the 28th ult. as she was taking a drive on the high road to Faenza. The brigands fired twice, wounding one of the horses dangerously; they then tore from Mrs. Beste the jewels she had on, and carried off her son to the hills, retaining him for a ransom of 12,000 scudi (2800*l*.). The money was not paid, but the son was sent back about 4 o'clock the next morning. By some misapprehension of the signal agreed upon with his scouts, the chief of the brigands thought that they had received the ransom, and released the youth in the woods, at a distance of five miles from Mr. Beste's villa—giving him a pass to save him from molestation from others of his band, and desiring him to thank his parents for the money, which would pay their journey to Austria. The chief told him that he himself was a deserter from the Papal camp; that one of his band was a German, the others of Romagna and the Venetian States, and that they were 25 in number. Another Jewish boy, named Michael Cohen, 10 years of age, has been kidnapped by a priest at Rome with the view of being Christianised. The priest went to the boy's father, a shoemaker, to get a pair of shoes mended, and when the repairs were completed the boy was ordered to take them home, accompanied by the priest. Instead of going to his house the priest went straight to the "Catecumeni" and there left the boy, who in vain asked to be sent back to his master or parents. All the efforts of the latter to have their son released, or even to see him, have been vain. The Israelite community at Rome complained to the authorities, but without success, being told that the saving of a soul was a matter of far greater importance than the rights of a father.

TURKEY.—Despatches from Constantinople say that the city is crowded with Circassians. The emigration is costing the Ottoman Government large sums of money. The missionary question between Sir Henry Bulwer and the Porte has been settled. The missionary stations will be reopened, and the converts will for the present be sent to the provinces.

TUNIS.—Advices from Tunis state that the Arabs having gathered in their harvest, advanced in force upon Tunis. When they had arrived within two leagues of the capital the army of the Bey surrendered without an engagement. The leader of the insurrection then declared the desire of the insurgents to remain faithful to the Bey, their only wish being the dismissal of the Ministry and the abolition of the unjust tax. The Government thereupon resolved to make concessions, and reduced the capitation tax from 36 to 20 piastres, and abolished other taxes. An arrangement was then concluded between the Government and the insurgents. Fourteen of the principal tribes have already given in their submission. Ben Ghadani, the chief of the revolt, has been permitted to leave the Regency. The Bey is said to be enrolling fresh troops, principally Europeans.

INDIA.—By the Bombay mail of the 9th July we learn that Sirdar Mahomed Afzul's army has been signally defeated in Cabul by the troops of his brother, the Ameer Shere Mahomed Ali Khan. The engagement took place on the 2d of June, near Bameean, the leader of Afzul Khan's army having attempted to surprise that of the Ameer, in which he was frustrated, the latter being fully prepared. The action was long and bloody, and Afzul Khan's troops eventually fled in wild disorder, leaving their guns, ammunition, and camp equipage on the field. The loss on both sides was very heavy. The Viceroy held a Durbar at Simla on the 15th of June for the reception of the chiefs of the Hill States between the Sutlej and Jumna. His Excellency addressed the assembled chiefs in their vernacular language with great fluency and vigour, urging them to extend to their dependants and ryots the same beneficence of rule and management which they enjoyed themselves; to confine their revenue demands to that which is fair to them; to allow no exaction or oppression to have place; and to remember the value of knowledge, and the importance of education to themselves and also to their people. The epidemics of cholera and fever, which recently devastated Bombay, have greatly abated.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—The Diamond Company's first steamer arrived at Falmouth on Saturday with news from the Cape to the 23d June. All danger of a Caffre war is believed by the Commander of the forces to have passed away, and the continuance of peace is considered certain. The few troops remaining in Cape Town are to be forwarded to the frontier, their places being filled by the 10th Regiment, now in Caffraria. Parliament was still sitting in Graham's Town. Several Government measures have been thrown out, among which was the Bill for establishing a Deeds Registry Office in Graham's Town, and that for the creation of a supreme court in one of the eastern divisions. Sir Philip Wodehouse has announced his intention of annexing the territories between the Kei and the Bashee to British Caffraria, and of giving out the land to settlers on military tenure.

UNITED STATES.—President Lincoln has issued a proclamation calling for half a million additional soldiers, and a draught for deficiencies on all quotas not completed by the 5th of September. The term of service for the draughted men will be one year. A Confederate force, estimated at 5000 men, is said to have recrossed the Potomac, 15 miles above Harper's Ferry. The Confederates are endeavouring to blockade the James River by planting heavy batteries below City Point, with a view to cut off Grant's communications by water. General Grant's lines are said to have been somewhat contracted; but the siege of Petersburg is to be vigorously prosecuted. Several encounters took place between Hunter's forces and the Confederates in their retreat from Maryland, during which the Federals captured four guns and a large amount of stores. The pursuit has now been abandoned. It is reported that General Averill, on the 19th ult., attacked 5000 Confederates under Early, near Winchester—killed and wounded 300, and captured 200 prisoners and four cannons. The Confederate General Lilley was made a prisoner. There were rumours of a severe engagement being in progress near Leesburg on the 20th, but no accounts have yet been received. A battle was fought before Atlanta on the 21st, in which Sherman defeated Hood, who had superseded Gen. Johnston. Hood fell back to the fortifications, leaving his killed and wounded on the field. Sherman took 4000 prisoners. The Federal loss amounted to 1500 men. It has since been reported that Sherman has occupied Atlanta; but no official confirmation has been received. Forrest with 10,000 men is marching upon Sherman's communication. He reached Huntsville on the 16th ult. General A. J. Smith, sent from Memphis in pursuit of Forrest, has had several encounters with the Confederates in Mississippi, in which he claims the advantage. A Louisville despatch of the 17th states that a Confederate force, from 5000 to 15,000 strong, commanded by General Ducker, had invaded Kentucky, and was marching northwards. Preparations for the defence of Louisville were actively progressing. General Canby is reported to be fortifying Morganzia, Louisiana, for a base of supplies, in contemplation of immediate operations in the Red River region. The Confederates, in heavy force, hold a strong position on the Atchafalaya River, 9 miles west of Morganzia. Confederate accounts state that a large Federal force, under Gen. Elliott, was attacked near Port Hudson on the 5th, and routed with great slaughter, the roads for miles being strewn with dead negroes, horses, and arms. Confederate despatches from Charleston assert that the Confederates have driven the Federals from John and James Island to Morris Island. The Confederate batteries have driven the Federal gunboats in the Stone River out of range. One Monitor has been seriously damaged. Secretary Fessenden has declined the terms offered by the banks for the loan of 50,000,000 dols. The quota of New York city under the President's last call is 23,140—upwards of 5000 more than was estimated. It is rumoured that a conspiracy has been discovered, extending throughout the Missi-sippi Valley, to form a separate Confederacy in the North-West. Several prominent Secessionists at Saint Louis, who were implicated, have been arrested. The Washington correspondent of the New York Herald says that the Secretary of State has determined to make a formal demand upon the British Government for the surrender of the "pirate Semmes." The New York Times and Herald publish despatches stating that Mr. Horace Greeley and President Lincoln's secretary, Mr. Hay, as representatives of the President, have had several interviews with Southern politicians at the Niagara Falls, in Canada, relative to peace negotiations. It appears that Mr. C. C. Clay and Mr. J. P. Holcomb, semi-official representatives of the Southern Government, communicated to Mr. Greeley that they were willing to proceed to Washington for the discussion of peace propositions, although not accredited by the Confederate Government for that purpose. President Lincoln replied, in a letter addressed "to whom it may concern," that the Federal Government would receive and meet on liberal terms any proposition embracing the restoration of peace, the integrity of the Union, and the abandonment of slavery, coming from the authority controlling the rebel army. Messrs. Clay and Holcomb thereupon emphatically declined visiting Washington, on the ground that Mr. Lincoln's answer precluded negotiations by prescribing beforehand the conditions of peace. If, they said, peace could only be secured by submission to terms of conquest, the generation was yet unborn that would witness the restoration of peace. Several of the war steamers sent in pursuit of the Florida have returned to port unsuccessful. The following Manifesto relative to the civil war, was issued by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Confederate States, after a secret debate of several hours, on the 10th of June:—

"The Congress of the Confederate States of America, acknowledging their responsibility to the opinion of the civilised world, to the great law of Christian philanthropy, and to the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, for the part they have been compelled to bear in the sad spectacle of war and carnage which this continent has for the last three years exhibited to the eyes of afflicted humanity, deem the present a fitting occasion to declare the principles, the sentiments, and the purposes by which they have been and are still actuated. They have ever deeply deplored the necessity which constrained them to take up arms in defence of their rights, and of the free institutions derived from their ancestors, and there is nothing they more ardently desire than peace, whensoever their enemy, by ceasing from the unprovoked war waged upon them, shall permit them to enjoy in peace the sheltering protection of those hereditary rights and those cherished institutions. The series of successes with which it has pleased Almighty God in so signal a manner to bless our arms on almost every point of our invaded border since the opening of the present campaign, enables us to profess this desire of peace in the interest of civilisation and humanity, without danger of having our motives misinterpreted of the declaration being ascribed to any unmanly sentiment, or any mistrust of our ability fully to maintain our cause. The repeated and disastrous checks, foreshadowing ultimate discomfiture, which their gigantic army, erected against the capital of the Confederacy, has already met with, are but a continuation of the same providential successes for us. We do not recur to these successes in any spirit of vain boasting, but in humble acknowledgment of that Almighty protection which has vouchsafed and granted them. The world must now see that some 8,000,000 people, inhabiting so extensive a territory, with such varied resources and such numerous facilities for defence as the benignant bounty of nature has bestowed upon us, and animated with one spirit to encounter every sacrifice of ease, of health, of property, of life itself, rather than be degraded from the condition of free and independent States, into which they were born, can never be conquered. Will not our adversaries themselves begin to feel that humanity has bled long enough; that tears and blood and treasure enough have been expended in a bootless undertaking, covering their own land, no less than ours, with a pall of mourning, and exposing them far more than ourselves to the catastrophe of financial exhaustion and bankruptcy, not to speak of the loss of their liberties by the despotism engendered in an aggressive warfare upon the liberties of another and kindred people? Will they be willing by a longer perseverance in a wanton and hopeless contest to make this continent which they so long boasted to be the chosen abode of liberty and self-government, of peace and a higher civilisation, the theatre of the most causeless and prodigal effusion of blood which the world has ever seen—of a virtual relapse into the barbarism of the ruder ages, and of the destruction of constitutional freedom by the lawlessness of usurped power? These are questions which our adversaries will decide for themselves. We desire to stand acquitted before the tribunal of the world, as well as in the eyes of omniscient justice, of any responsibility for the origin or prolongation of a war as contrary to the spirit of the age as to the traditions and acknowledged principles of the political system of America. On this continent, whatever opinions may have prevailed elsewhere, it has ever been held and acknowledged by all parties that government to be lawful must be founded on the consent of the governed. We were forced to dissolve our Federal connexion with our former associates by their aggressions on the fundamental principles of our compact of union with them, and in doing so we exercised a right consecrated in the great charter of American liberty—the right of a free people, when a Government proves destructive of the ends for which it was established, to recur to the original principles and to institute new guards for their security. The separate independence of the States, as the sovereign and coequal members of the Federal Union, had never been surrendered, and the pretensions of applying to independent communities, so constituted and organised, the ordinary rules for coercing and reducing rebellious subjects to obedience was a solecism in terms as well as an outrage on the principles of public law. The war made upon the Confederate States was, therefore, wholly one of aggression. On our side it has been strictly defensive. Born freemen and the descendants of a gallant ancestry, we had no option but to stand up in defence of our invaded firesides, of our desecrated altars, of our violated liberties and birthright, and of the prescriptive institutions which guard and protect them. We have not interfered, nor do we wish in any manner whatever to interfere, with the internal peace and prosperity of the States arrayed in hostility against us, or with the freest development of their destinies in any form of action or line of policy they may think proper to adopt for themselves. All we ask is a like immunity for ourselves, and to be left to ourselves in the undisturbed enjoyment of those inalienable rights of 'life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness,' which our common ancestors declared to be the equal heritage of all the parties to the social compact. [illegible] them forbear aggressions upon us, and the war is at an end. If there be questions which require adjustment by negotiations, we have ever been willing, and are still willing to enter into communication with our adversaries in a spirit of peace, of equity, and of manly frankness. Strong in the persuasion of the justice of our cause, in the manly devotion of our citizen soldiers and of the whole body of our people, and above all in the gracious protection of Heaven, we are not afraid to avow a sincere desire for peace on terms consistent with our honour and the permanent security of our rights, and as earnest aspiration to see the world once more restored to the beneficent pursuits of industry, and of mutual intercourse and exchanges so essential to its well-being, and which have been so gravely interrupted by the existence of this unnatural war in America. But if our adversaries, or those whom they have placed in power, deaf to the voice of reason and justice, steeled to the dictates of prudence and humanity by a presumptuous and delusive confidence in their own numbers, or those of their black and foreign mercenaries, shall determine upon an indefinite prolongation of the contest, upon them be the responsibility of a decision so ruinous to themselves, and so injurious to the interest and repose of mankind. For ourselves, we have no fear of the result. The wildest picture ever drawn by a disordered imagination comes short of the extravagance which would dream of the conquest of eight millions of people, resolved with one mind 'to die freemen rather than live slaves,' and forewarned by the savage and exterminating spirit in which this war has been waged upon them, and by the mad avowals of the supporters of the worse than Egyptian bondage that awaits them in the event of their subjugation. With these declarations of our dispositions, our principles, and our purposes, we commit our cause to the enlightened judgment of the world, to the sober reflections of our adversaries themselves, and to the solemn and righteous arbitrament of Heaven."

THE YELVERTON MARRIAGE CASE.—Mrs. Teresa Yelverton has addressed the following letter to the daily papers in reference to the recent judgment of the House of Lords:—

"Sir,—In this momentous crisis of my miserable fate, may I ask of the press and the public to suspend for awhile their judgment, and not to believe that the opinion of some of the law lords has finally deprived me of the status of wife. The case, as I am well advised, has not by any means terminated, a reference to oaths being competent, and the inherent right of parties seeking to establish a marriage. Even the opinion given on Thursday by their lordships is merely an opinion until it is affirmed, or in legal phrase extracted, by the High Court of Session in Scotland; and prior to that the examination on oath will take place, which in justice and fairness should have been granted when applied for by my counsel, the Lord Advocate. I believe it is the first principle of English justice, on which we pride ourselves over all nations, that a man should not be condemned unheard, and that he should be allowed to question face to face his accusers. Yet this is exactly what I have been deprived of, but which at this stage of the case I can, and do, demand. The reason why the Scotch Court did not have recourse to the examination of parties was simply that the Scotch lords, being so much more familiar with their own law than Englishmen can be supposed to be, were at no loss to discern a marriage on the written evidence before them; and the Scotch horror of perjury ever induces them to defer to the last extremity the examination of the parties themselves. The practical result of this reference to oaths would be, that should one party prove sufficient to establish a marriage—or the other fail to show that none had taken place—the Court of Session would refuse to endorse the opinion given in the House of Lords, and the whole case might be again brought before them. Hence, I appeal to the public through your medium to suspend their judgment until this last ordeal shall have been tried, and that the more especially as the Irish verdict of a jury and four judges, declaring me the wife of Major Yelverton, still stands unannulled. Had the action raised against me been one of nullity, or an action to prove that the marriages, Scotch or Irish, were neither of them legal, I should not assuredly have wasted six years of my life, my health, and fortune in the contention to be the wife of a man who refused to recognise me in that capacity. But the form of action raked up from obscure barbarism, and held forth as a means of escape to an unfortunate and desperate man, is such as to load me with infamy and drag me down to the depths whence there is no degradation deeper for a woman. A hundred years ago there was such an action in England, called jactitation, resorted to by men to rid themselves of the claims of those they had dishonoured. No woman with a soul above a slave's would submit in silence to such contumely. By this action they have left me but the alternative which the noble Wallace gave to his men—'To do, or die.' I hold my honour as a precious gem, which it is my duty to defend with my life, and by every power and strength of mind that God has given me; and as I am an honest woman in the sight of Heaven, I will so defend it till the last pulsation of the heart, and never desist until I have cast the foul slander from my hitherto untarnished fame.—I am, &c., "TERESA YELVERTON."

THE RECENT VOLUNTEER REVIEW.—The Commander-in-Chief has made an official report to the Secretary-at-War of the condition of the Volunteers whom he reviewed on Saturday week on Wimbledon Common. Amidst much praise his Royal Highness points out some defects, and dwells on the necessity of giving increased attention to company and battalion drill. He also suggests that if there were fewer large gatherings of Volunteers—not more than three or four in the course of a season, when the members would be able to leave their employments in larger numbers and perhaps for a whole day, instead of a few hours, the regiments would then be better filled up and the movements more extended than it is possible to make them now.

THE WOUNDED SOLDIER AT WIMBLEDON continues to progress favourably, although the bullet having fallen back into the cavity of the chest, has not been capable of detection. The military surgeons entertain fair hopes of his recovery on account of his constitutional powers. Last week an effusion of blood took place into the left side of the thorax, impeding respiration, and pushing the heart to the right side. This effusion has not since apparently increased, and the patient is tolerably free from pain.

AUSTRALIAN BIRDS IN LONDON.—A barrister writing from Stone Buildings, Lincoln's Inn, has addressed the following letter to the Times, which publishes it under the title of "A Fact for the Acclimatisation Society":—"Three Australian love birds were observed in the garden of Lincoln's Inn in the summer of 1862, having doubtless escaped from some bird fancier in the neighbourhood. They were repeatedly seen during the summer and autumn both in this garden and in the garden of Lincoln's Inn Fields, but disappeared in the winter. In May last year three similar birds appeared again in Lincoln's Inn. They built a nest in one of the plane trees in Lincoln's Inn Fields, and laid seven eggs, but forsook the nest upon being disturbed by the too curious gardener. Last winter they again disappeared, but were seen occasionally in the early spring: this year both in this garden and in that of Lincoln's Inn Fields, looking rather melancholy upon the leafless trees. For the last month they have again taken to their old quarters in these gardens, and appear perfectly at home and happy, barring a few squabbles with the sparrows. They may generally be seen with the sparrows searching for food in the grass, their bright green plumage and long tails contrasting agreeably with their dusky friends' mean appearance. I am not aware whether they have built a nest this year, but think there is little doubt that they are the same three birds which first appeared here in 1862. The above facts may interest some of your readers. It is clear that Australian love birds must be more hardy than is generally supposed; and it is rather a puzzle how these three managed to get food during the winters of 1862 and 1863.

THE LUDGATE HILL VIADUCT.—On Tuesday an alarming accident occurred on Ludgate Hill, causing serious injuries to three working men, two of whom now lie in a precarious state. For some days past workmen have been engaged in raising the huge iron girders which are to form the viaduct for carrying the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway across that great thoroughfare. The span of the bridge is about 65 feet, and each girder weighs 15 tons and is nearly 70 feet long. The work, being attended with danger in a place where the traffic is so great, has been chiefly done during the night. In executing it a powerful derrick erected in the middle of the street, is employed, by means of which and of a crab each girder is gradually raised about 18 feet from the ground, and then swung into position. By Monday four of the six iron beams had been so raised, and placed across the street, and on Tuesday morning, shortly before 6 o'clock, a fifth was being lifted into its place. For that purpose eight men were working the crab at the south side of the street. They had raised the girder about 8 feet from the ground, when some of the tackle fouling the crab snapped, and the whole mass, which was at that moment swung obliquely across the street, fell with a crash, striking in its fall three of the men working the crab. They were taken to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, where one of them was found to be suffering from concussion of the brain and a large scalp wound, another from a scalp wound and injuries to the back and loins. The third, who was less badly hurt, was removed to his own home in the course of the day. The other two remain in the hospital, and are reported to be in a dangerous condition. The girder happened to descend upon a mass of woodwork at the bottom of the derrick, which had the effect of breaking its fall, otherwise the three men would probably have been crushed to death. In the course of the morning the girder was raised into position, and now, with two others, spans the street, a sixth remaining to be raised. The work in its present state is extremely unsightly, justifying in that respect some of the worst apprehensions formed of it; but it is said that the iron work of the sides will be of a very ornamental character, and when completed will go far to redeem the bridge from the charge of disfiguring the city. On each side there will be a light outer bridge for foot passengers, communicating, by means of a staircase in the abutment, with either side of Ludgate Hill. This will be a great public convenience, for at certain periods of the day the attempt to cross that crowded thoroughfare is almost a hopeless task. The great bridge over the Thames is also approaching completion, and, according to present expectations, the line will be opened to the Ludgate station early in October.

THE WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.—The 121st Conference of the Wesleyan Methodists took place last week at Bradford. The first business was to complete its "Legal Hundred," by supplying the vacancies caused during the year by the death or superannuation of the constituent members in the English and Irish conferences. The conference having been thus legally constituted, the elections of president and secretary for the year 1864-65 were proceeded with and confirmed. The votes were distributed as follows:—For President: Rev. W. L. Thornton, M.A., 268; Rev. William Shaw, 42; Rev. W. Arthur, M.A., 18; Rev. John Bedford, 7. For Secretary: Rev. John Farrar, 262; Rev. John Bedford, 21; Rev. W. M. Punshon, 13.

New Roman Catholic Church at Kensington.—Arrangements have been made for the erection of a new Roman Catholic church in Kensington. At present all the accommodation which the Roman Catholics have in Kensington is for 200 persons. The site for the new church will cost 3000*l*.

Penny Omnibuses.—The omnibuses running between Westminster and Oxford Street, and Camden Town and Oxford Street, have commenced carrying passengers at 1*d*. each. This reduction has been occasioned by the appearance of a new line called the "Shakespeare" omnibuses between Camden Town and Westminster.

Penny Parcels Delivery.—A company is forming under the title of the Express Penny Parcels Delivery Company, with a capital of 50,000*l*., in 10*l*. shares. The prospectus states that the difficulty of having parcels delivered with regularity and despatch at reasonable rates has long been felt, and this company is formed to meet that growing want of the metropolis. It is true that, at present, there exists the London Parcels Delivery Company, but that company, in addition to parcels, carries goods of heavy weight, luggage, &c., and consequently the delivery is both slow and expensive. The new company proposes to convey parcels at the uniform rate of one penny for each parcel under 7 lb., and twopence under 14lbs., and there will be an hourly delivery during the ordinary business hours of the day. The company will, at first, limit its operations to the metropolis and its suburbs, within a radius of 12 miles from the chief office, and it is already promised the support of the principal wholesale houses and leading tradesmen both in the West End and the City, who by the present system are obliged to keep carts of their own at a very heavy expense. In order to facilitate the operations, stamps will be issued for the various offices; but engagements for the collection of money will be entered into where required.

Mule and Donkey Show.—A great show of mules and donkeys is about to follow the late successful Horse Show at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, under such patronage as will doubtless conduce to its success. The chief object of the promoters is not only to improve the breed of donkeys and mules, but also to encourage their proper and humane treatment. The Prince of Wales, Miss Burdett Coutts, the Earls of Clarendon and Harrowby, and the Rev. Mr. Jackson, rector of Stoke Newington, and a large number of the metropolitan clergy, as well as many prominent members of the Royal Society for Preventing Cruelty to Animals, are its leading supporters. The directors of the Agricultural Hall, having all the fittings used at the Horse Show still remaining, have granted the use of the hall, with its ring, at a nominal sum; and Mr. Douglas, the manager of the Horse Show, has undertaken the arrangements. Prizes are to be offered, and donkey races are to take place in the oval, so that the tempers of the animals may be judged. The entries are already very numerous, and as an incentive the Prince of Wales has entered an Egyptian donkey, a very fine specimen of the tribe. The Marquis of Exeter, Mr. S. Gurney, M.P., Colonel Somerset, Sir H. Stracey, and others have also entered some foreign donkeys; and Lord Clarendon will exhibit a splendid pair of mules. The costermongers of the metropolis will be fully represented, and the show is to open on Monday next, the 8th inst.

The Murder and Suicide at Somers Town.—The adjourned inquest in this case was resumed on Tuesday, when no new facts of any importance were elicited, except that a woman called Loader, who lodged in the house, had stated to a neighbour that she saw the murdered woman bleeding on the ground, and two teeth driven down her mouth. On being examined on this evidence, she at first said she did not recollect saying anything of the kind, and afterwards positively swore that she had never said anything of the kind. She admitted however that she heard the screams of the murdered woman, followed by a cry of murder, a blow, and a fall. The jury returned a verdict to the effect that Rosetta Bishop died from the effects of blows of a hatchet given to her knowingly and maliciously by James Brown, and that James Brown had been guilty of the crime of felo de se by hanging himself wilfully while in a sound state of mind. The Coroner then issued his warrant for the man's burial within 24 hours in unconsecrated ground and without Christian ceremony. The witness Loader was then directed to be brought into court, when the Coroner said he was requested by the jury to censure her most severely for not having called the attention of the police to the fact, clearly established, that she had seen the poor woman covered with blood, and heard her screams. He had also to tell her that her evidence throughout had been most unsatisfactory and prevaricating, and that she was deserving of the severest censure for her conduct throughout this dreadful affair.

Execution at Newgate.—On Monday morning Frederick Bricknell, a young man who was employed as a waiter at a public-house in the New Cattle Market, Islington, was executed in front of Newgate for the murder of a young woman in the same service because she slighted his addresses. The crowd outside was by no means so great as on many previous occasions, though it stretched to St. Sepulchre's Church and far towards Smithfield. There was a greater number of women and boys present than usual, but their behaviour was, on the whole, decent and orderly. The prisoner, who had conducted himself since his condemnation with great propriety, met his death firmly, and died without a struggle.

Incendiary Fire at Paddington.—A destructive fire broke out a few days since in the Artesian Saw Mills at Paddington, which appeared to be the work of an incendiary. On Tuesday, an elderly man named James Boxball, who had charge of the stables, was brought before the magistrate at Marylebone, on the charge of having set fire to the premises. The evidence consisted chiefly of the fact that the premises were safe before he came in the morning, and soon after he left they were discovered to be on fire. The prisoner was remanded.

Great Fire at Fulham.—On Thursday the villa of Colonel M'Murdo, Inspector-General of Volunteers, on the banks of the Thames, at Fulham, with all its valuable furniture and collection of pictures, was entirely destroyed by fire. The villa had a thatched roof, and it is supposed that a spark from the kitchen chimney, or from a passing steamer, must have fallen upon and ignited it. The plate and jewels were deposited in two massive iron safes which fell into the body of the fire, but as the safes were red-hot yesterday it is not yet ascertained whether the contents are preserved. Colonel M'Murdo and the family being absent, it is not known whether the premises were insured.

Keston Common on Fire.—On Sunday a fire broke out amongst the furze on Keston Common, near Hayes, Kent, and the flames, fanned by the strong wind, spread with great rapidity, until at length a stretch of country, about two miles in extent, was in a blaze.

The Public Health.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths registered in London in the week that ended Saturday, July 30, were 1607. The average number in the corresponding week of the ten years 1854-63, corrected for increase of population, was 1302. The present return is, therefore, 305 above the average. During the week the births of 1011 boys and 940 girls, in all 1951 children, were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1859.

Provincial.

Aylesbury.—The execution of William John Stevens, for the wilful murder of Ann Leeson, at Buckingham, took place yesterday morning in front of the county gaol, in the presence of about 7000 persons. He acknowledged the justice of his sentence and died penitent.

Birkenhead.—In reply to the charge of "touting" for candidates for holy orders against St. Aidan's College by Lord Shaftesbury, the Rev. Dr. Baylee, the Principal, says, in a letter to the Times:—

"1. We have never received any students into this college on any other charges than those stated in our published prospectus. 2. We never proposed to do so either to Wesleyans or to any others. 3. The circular put into the papers was neither drawn up nor published by any of the authorities of this college. 4 During the last 18 years I have received some hundreds of applications from Wesleyans and other dissenting ministers requesting some additional facilities to enable them to prepare for holy orders, and I have never done so in a single instance. I have already explained to Lord Shaftesbury the circumstances connected with the circular to which his lordship referred. They were these:—A Wesleyan minister entered this college last term as an ordinary student. He asked me for some prospectuses to circulate among his friends. I gave them to him, and in some cases he on his own authority sent that paper to individuals. When application was made to me by Wesleyan ministers, I replied in every case that we could not receive the students on any other than our published terms, and although we have had nearly 100 applications, we have not made a reduction of terms, nor offered peculiar advantages to a single student. At our recent council meeting I drew up a notice to the same effect, to be appended to our ordinary advertisement. The insertion of that 'circular' in the papers was the work of some person unfriendly to this college. I think I may safely leave it to the judgment of the public whether we have been making any improper efforts to obtain pupils."

The Wesleyan papers on the other hand state that the following circular was recently issued by Dr. Baylee:—

"Any Wesleyan minister wishing to become a clergyman of the Church of England can be admitted to St. Aidan's College without preparatory examination, and on advantageous terms. The particulars may be known on application to the Principal, St. Aidan's College, Birkenhead."

Bishop's Waltham.—On Thursday the young Prince Leopold visited this town from Osborne, accompanied by his brother-in-law, Prince Louis of Hesse, and laid the foundation stone of a new Infirmary, established chiefly by the exertions of Mr. Arthur Helps, Clerk of the Privy Council, for the use of the sick poor of the neighbourhood. After a prayer had been offered up by the Bishop of Winchester, his Royal Highness laid the stone with a silver trowel in a workmanlike manner. After the ceremony their Royal Highnesses were entertained at luncheon in the Palace grounds. Mr. Arthur Helps, who presided, in proposing the Queen's health, said that it was principally through her Majesty that the building had been projected, and that the principal funds had been derived from the proceeds of the work containing the Addresses and Speeches of the Prince Consort, of which he might say, without betraying any secrets, that some sentences of that work were her Majesty's own. The health of the two Princes having been drunk, Prince Louis of Hesse briefly expressed the warmest thanks of Prince Leopold and himself for the kind way in which they had proposed and received the toast. During these festivities the town presented a very gay appearance. Nearly every house was decorated with flags, flowers, or evergreens. Several triumphal arches were erected across the principal streets, formed of evergreens and flowers, tastefully designed, and surmounted with banners with appropriate inscriptions.

Brixham.—A quarryman employed at Berry Head a few days since, perceived, after blasting, an aperture 12 feet or 14 feet overhead, which has since been found to lead to an extensive stalactite cavern, extending in several directions and for considerable distances. Many of the stalactites have assumed beautiful and curious forms. It is understood that a scientific exploration of the cavern will shortly be made.

Chesterton.—An old man called George Walker was found brutally murdered in front of a hut in which he had lived, near this town, on Thursday week. On the following day a man was apprehended at Tunstall, while offering in pledge a watch which exactly corresponded with the description of that taken from deceased. His name is Brough, and on being taken into custody he confessed that he was the murderer. Other evidence was adduced at the inquest which would have been sufficient to convict him of the crime without his confession. He is a young man, 24 years of age, a collier, and has resided in the neighbourhood all his life with his family. He has borne a good character hitherto, but he has the appearance of being feeble in intellect and weak in body, and is a most miserable looking creature, and most unlikely to be a murderer. He was committed for trial at the next Stafford assizes on the charge of wilful murder.

Clifton.—The directors of the Suspension Bridge have announced that it will probably be open for traffic early in October. Great progress is making with the roadway. The framework of the bridge is painting, and a portion of the railings for each side of the footpaths has arrived, and its erection will shortly be commenced. The road leading to the bridge on the Leigh or Somersetshire side is finished, and that on the Clifton side is in a forward state.

Cowes.—The annual regatta of the Royal Yacht Squadron commenced on Tuesday with the race for the Prince of Wales's Cup, which was witnessed by the Queen, the Princess of Wales, and other members of the Royal family, while the Prince went out in the Fairy to witness the match. The race was contested by the Arrow, cutter, 94 tons; the Terpsichore, cutter, 42 tons; the Alerte, cutter, 56 tons; the Phosphorus, cutter, 49 tons; and after a gallant contest between the Arrow and the Alerte was finally won by the Arrow. On Wednesday the cutter race for the Club Cup was contested by the Mosquito, Volante, Surf, Marina, Astarte, Vindex, and Arrow, but as neither vessel completed the course within the prescribed time, the race was null and void, and must be sailed again. So far as it was completed the Arrow was again victorious, followed at a considerable distance by the Mosquito and Astarte. On Thursday the Queen's Cup was sailed for by the Ursuline, Viking, Aline, Albertine, Intrepid and Vestal, and was won by the Albertine. The Aline came in first, but the Albertine won by time. The Prince and Princess of Wales went out in the Fairy to witness the conclusion of the race.

Durham.—On Saturday morning a fatal explosion occurred at Moorsley Colliery, belonging to the North Hetton Coal Company, in this county. One of the six boilers employed on the colliery burst, and was carried in four pieces high up into the air and over the tops of the pitmen's houses, to a distance of 290 to 300 yards. yards. The bricks and broken steam pipes were scattered in all directions. The two firemen who were attending the boilers were killed, and a child who was sitting in its grandmother's cottage, 60 yards distant, was also killed by a piece of the steam-pipe falling through the roof. Several children playing about the village streets were scalded, and the houses occupied by the pitmen were damaged by the explosion.

Liverpool.—The Federal frigate Niagara arrived in the Mersey on Wednesday afternoon, and after coaling, left yesterday for a cruise. Salutes were exchanged between her and her Majesty's ship Majestic.

Southampton.—On Monday the Prince of Wales laid the foundation-stone of a monument in the grounds of the Royal Victoria Hospital at Netley, to the memory of the officers of the Army Medical Department who died in the Crimean war. The monument has been designed by Mr. T. Hayter Lewis, architect, of John Street, Adelphi. It will be a plain monumental cross in the style of the beginning of the 13th century, 56 feet in height. The lower part will consist of a series of arches forming an octagonal arcade, supported on 16 coupled columns of Derbyshire marble, the principal part of the erection being of Portland stone. Under this arcade will be placed marble tablets, explaining the object of the memorial, and recording the names of the medical officers who fell in the Crimean war. This will be surmounted by a smaller arcade, also of an octagonal form, the column thence tapering up gradually to a large cross. The site chosen is close by the river front of the grounds, and nearly opposite the medical officers' quarters. The contract for the erection of the monument has been taken by Messrs. Myers & Son, of London, who built the hospital, and the work will be executed under the management of Major Ravenhill, R.E. The Prince, who was accompanied by Prince Louis of Hesse and Prince Leiningen, was received on his arrival from Osborne by a large assemblage of military and naval officers, the medical staff and the medical students of the hospital. Dr. Gibson then read an appropriate address to his Royal Highness, who replied as follows:—

"It gives me great pleasure to respond to your request to inaugurate this well-deserved tribute to the memory of those medical officers who lost their lives in the performance of their onerous and important duties in her Majesty's service throughout the war in the Crimea. It is also particularly agreeable to me to assist in the foundation of your memorial near this building, connected as it is with the magnificent hospital in the creation of which my beloved and lamented father took so deep an interest, and in the maintenance of which the Queen also feels a like interest. The site chosen seems to be peculiarly appropriate, as, although the main object of the establishment of this noble hospital was for the relief of the sick and wounded of the army returning from the colonies, there is connected with it a medical school for the special instruction of young medical officers who are to have the future care of our soldiers in all climates and in all parts of the world wherein our troops may be called upon to serve. The names of those medical officers inscribed upon the memorial will thus be inseparably connected with our great military hospital and our army medical school."

A prayer having been offered up by the chaplain, the Prince appended his signature to a copy of the address, which was deposited under the foundation stone with copies of daily papers and a photograph of the monument. This stone was then lowered with the usual formalities. The Prince was subsequently entertained at luncheon before he returned to Osborne.

SUNDERLAND.—A telegram was received on Friday, by the owner of the barque Ouse of this port, stating that that vessel had put into the port of San Roque, near Gibraltar, in consequence of the master and crew having been poisoned. Three of the men had died, and the cook was taken into custody on the charge of mixing poison with their rations. Another telegram was received in Sunderland on Saturday, stating that, after a full examination into the circumstances, the cook was acquitted of the charge. Fresh hands were shipped, and the Ouse had sailed for Alexandria. No details relative to the cause of the men's death have yet been received; but it is believed that their food itself was bad, as very bad meat is often put on board ships in the northern ports for the use of the crew. The inspector of meat at this port recently died of fever, produced by the effluvium from some casks of provisions which he seized before they could be got on board a vessel.

TOWCESTER.—On Wednesday the ceremony of cutting the first sod of a new line of railway, to which considerable local importance is attached, was performed by Lady Palmerston, who owns large property in the neighbourhood, in a field lying within a short distance of this town. The line will commence at the Blisworth Station of the London and North Western, and will have running powers over the Banbury Line, as far as Towcester. It will there branch off to Greensnorton, and proceed through Bradden and Woodford to Fenny Compton, where a junction will be effected with the Oxford and Birmingham system of the Great Western. From that point the intended line will proceed through Kyneton to Stratford-on-Avon, where facilities will be gained for communication either with Worcester, Hereford, and South Wales, or, on the other hand, with Gloucester and Bristol. The total length of the line will be 32 miles and a few chains; the estimated cost, 300,000*l*. On arriving at the spot where the first sod had been already marked out, Lady Palmerston, lifting it upon a silver spade, deposited it in a light wheelbarrow, ornamented tastefully with silver, and bearing an inscription stating it to be the gift of Mr. T. R. Crompton, the contractor to the line. Her ladyship took up the wheelbarrow and propelled it steadily to the end of a long plank amid the warm applause of the spectators. Having accomplished her task, Lady Palmerston said:—

"I thank you very kindly for the flattering manner in which you have received me to-day, and I trust that the works now commenced will be found useful, and for the advantage of Northampton and its neighbourhood."

The three cheers given for Lady Palmerston were promptly followed by three others for the noble lord himself. Lord Palmerston, in returning thanks, expressed the great pleasure which he and Lady Palmerston felt in presiding at the commencement of a work which promised to be of so beneficial a character. Irrespective of other considerations it was, he said, a good social example for ladies in a high position to show that they could sometimes take to digging the soil. He trusted that the crop in this instance would be more permanent and more solid in its yield than agricultural operations occasionally were. The company then adjourned to a large marquee, where luncheon had been provided for about 250 guests. In returning thanks for the toast in honour of Lady Palmerston, Lord Palmerston said—

"I am requested by Lady Palmerston to tell you how sensible she is of the kindness which you have displayed towards her. She has made one speech to-day, and, like the celebrated orator, 'Single-Speech Hamilton,' who also made a very good speech, she ought not to be called on for a second the same day. But I am sure you may rely on the sincerity of the interest which Lady Palmerston takes in this railway, because her interests are bound up and identified with yours. She is a Northamptonshire lady, and she came here to-day not as a stranger, to promote an undertaking upon general principles of material advantage, but as one of yourselves, to help forward an enterprise that has for all a mutual interest."

His lordship, in subsequently acknowledging the toast of his own health, spoke at some length on the national advantages of railways, and created great merriment by the following illustrations of the great changes they have effected:—

"Let any man take a goods train of the present day, carrying, I will not say how many tons of commodities, at a rapid pace from a seat of manufactures in one part of the island to the nearest port of embarkation, and compare that with the old broad-wheeled waggon, with its six horses, all with docked tails, wincing in agony at the bite of the flies, and in vain seeking relief from the little bit of net that covered them, while the driver walked beside them, sometimes taking the advantage of a pony. The abolition of this slowest of all conveyances necessarily exercised a great influence upon the price of commodities. If any man will compare the present facilities for conveying manufactures to market with those which existed before railways were invented, he will see what an enormous stimulus they have given to the industrial prosperity of the land. Neither ought we to forget the social advantages which railways have conferred. They have rendered this island as regards facilities of communication between man and man almost one great capital. In former times many were born and lived and died in a country village without even knowing whether London was not paved, as some said, with gold. Now there is hardly a village within reasonable distance of the metropolis which at some time or other, probably on the occasion of some great national exhibition, has not contributed sight-seers from the provinces. The difference between the two periods may be exemplified in this way:—Formerly when a gentleman asked a friend in London to come down to him in the country, the friend came with things to last him for a fortnight or three weeks, and took perhaps a week on the journey. Now, if one gentleman meets another, say in St. James's Street, he says, 'I shall have some good shooting next week. Will you come down to me and spend a few days?' His friend replies, 'Oh, by all means I shall be charmed. What is the station nearest your house?' The first speaker rejoins, 'Why, I am not very well off at present in regard to railway communication—the nearest station is 16 miles from my house. But it is a good road, you will get a nice fly, and you can come very well.' Upon this the invited guest says—'Did you say it was Tuesday you asked me for?' 'Yes,' says the country gentleman, 'I think you told me you were free.' 'The fact is,' answers the friend, 'I have a very bad memory, and now I think of it I am very sorry, but I have a particular engagement for that day—some other time I shall be happy to go to you.' And so away he goes, and offers himself as a visitor to some other friend, who has got a station within one or two miles of his house."

Mr. Knightley, M.P., in returning thanks for the toast of the County Members, made the following remarks on Lord Palmerston's position in the Government, amidst the cheers and laughter of the company:—

"He congratulated the company upon the success with which the proceedings had passed off, and particularly upon the presence of guests so distinguished as Lord and Lady Palmerston, whom they desired, if possible, to see oftener in that part of the country. Somehow or other the country always drew a great distinction between Lord Palmerston and the rest of the Ministry. Whenever a good measure was brought forward—and a great many good measures had been introduced by the Government—it was always put down to the credit of the noble lord. Whenever anything went wrong, and in that establishment as well as in others mishaps would from time to time occur, the particular "kettle of fish" was always attributed to the cooking of one of his subordinates. A game of "chuck-farthing" was perpetually going on, in which if "heads" came down the noble viscount won, and if "tails" descended it was his colleagues who lost. Not that any unfair play could be charged against the noble lord; on the contrary, he invariably deprecated anything like a distinction being made. The country, however, was not to be shaken in its opinion. Somehow or other it always determined to give Lord Palmerston all the halfpence, and to give his colleagues all the kicks."

THE IRISH CHURCH.—The Lord Lieutenant has appointed the Rev. W. Alexander to be Dean of Emly, and has conferred the Deanery of Clonfert on Dr. Graves, who is to hold it in connection with his present office of Dean of the Chapel Royal.

FATAL EXCISE AFFRAY.—A few nights since at midnight the constabulary seized an illicit still and a quantity of whiskey near Ennis, in the county of Clare. About 200 of the country people immediately turned out, many of them jumping out of their beds in their shirts, and attempted to get back the booty. They closed in on the police, who were only six in number, and fearing that his men would be disarmed and killed, the head constable, Mr. Roger M'Loughlin, after repeated warning, ordered two of his men to fire. One person was mortally wounded. This fatality put an end to the affray, and the police carried off the whiskey. A coroner's jury has since returned a verdict that the police "were not justified in firing on the occasion." The owners of the still, Michael and Francis Sheedy, father and son, were taken before the Ennis magistrates on Friday, when the elder prisoner was ordered to pay the mitigated fine of 12*l*., or be imprisoned for six months, and the younger to pay 6*l*., or to undergo three months' imprisonment.

COMMUNICATION IN RAILWAY TRAINS.—The Board of Trade has issued the following circular to the secretaries of the different railway companies:—

"Whitehall, July 5.

"Sir,—I am directed by the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade to request you to state to the directors that my lords have had under their consideration the complaints, frequently urged on their attention, of the danger existing or apprehended from the want of means of communication between the different portions of a railway train while in motion. Several instances have occurred of carriages having taken fire, or having been thrown off the rails, the passengers in which had no means of making their perilous situation known to the servants of the company in charge of the train. Recent occurrences, also, of a criminal nature in passenger railway trains have excited among the public a very general feeling of alarm. Under these circumstances, my lords are desirous of calling the attention of railway companies to this subject, with a view to the consideration by them of the question how far by means of increased facilities for communication between different portions of a railway train while in motion, or other improved regulations, it may be practicable to obviate the evils complained of and to allay the sense of insecurity at present prevalent among railway passengers. My lords are very sensible that without the cordial co-operation of the railway companies any attempt to introduce improvements in the system of railway management would be attended with doubtful success. Several expedients have been suggested as calculated in some degree to further the desired object. One expedient for guarding against offences in railway carriages which has been proposed is that of placing windows between the compartments of each carriage. As these windows might be provided with curtains, the privacy of the carriages would not ordinarily be interfered with. As an expedient for providing means of communication between the guard and the passengers, it has been suggested that every vehicle forming part of a passenger train should be furnished with footboards and handrails which would admit of the guard (or, in case of emergency, other persons) passing along the train. It appears to my lords deserving of consideration, whether this expedient, guarded, of course, by carefully framed regulations to prevent abuse, might not be generally adopted with very beneficial effects. The use of a cord running along the train, by means of which the guard can attract the attention of the engine-driver, has now existed on some lines so long as to prove that there is no difficulty in its application. I am to request that my lords may be favoured with the opinion of the directors as to the practical value of arrangements of the nature specified, and also with any suggestions which the directors may think adapted to accomplish the ends which my lords have in view. I am also to request that my lords may be informed what means are in practice on your line for effecting communication between portions of a train while in motion, and whether, with a view to the application of such means to the carriages of the company passing on the line of another company, any regulations of a general and compulsory character are deemed expedient.—I am, &c., "JAMES BOOTH."

FATAL ACCIDENT AT THE MARGATE STATION.—On Monday afternoon, as the London train was entering the Margate station, it ran into the Deal train, then waiting to be despatched. It appears that the down train reaches the Margate platform on the same line of rails as that on which the up train departs. The train from London was overdue 15 minutes, and the Deal train had collected its passengers, and only awaited the arrival of the London train to proceed on its journey. In the ordinary course of things the engine from the down train would have been attached to the carriages of the Deal train, and drawn them out of the station. But the down train, when it rounded the curve by which the terminus is approached, was seen to be coming at a frightful pace, and the certainty of a serious collision became apparent. Nothing could be done by the station-master or his servants, and the train dashed into the terminus at a speed which was sufficient to reduce to fragments the carriages of the Deal train, and also to smash the powerful buffer fixed at the end of the platform. Such was the force of the collision that the first-class carriage was driven up to the roof of the station, where it remained, supported by the second and third class, forming a complete pyramid. The buffers were broken off the carriages, two of which were shattered to pieces, and the permanent way torn up for some distance. The task of rescuing the passengers from the mass of ruins occupied more than an hour, when it was found that there were three cases of most serious injury, besides others more slightly hurt. Mrs. Locke, the wife of a respectable tradesman in the town, had both her thighs fractured, all her left ribs broken, with severe scalp wounds, and the left eye frightfully contused. She survived her injuries only two hours. An aged woman, a laundress named Goodchild, had her ribs fractured, and also sustained such severe injury to her back that she is in a very dangerous state. A woman named Taylor had her left arm broken, with other injuries. A gentleman from Faversham was a good deal hurt, though able to be removed to his residence, and a woman named Roguist, a visitor at Margate, was removed to the nearest house in a state of extraordinary nervous excitement, but it is hoped that she has received no serious injury. There were several other persons more or less hurt, but not sufficiently so to render it necessary to call in medical assistance. The accident would have been attended with much more serious consequences if it had not been that the carriages of the Deal train received the first shock of the collision. It is thought that otherwise the engine of the down train must have dashed completely through the station, when the destruction of life and property must have been dreadful. With respect to the cause of the collision, it is stated that when the train left London it was in charge of two guards, one of whom absented himself without leave at Ramsgate, and consequently the full power of the breaks could not be applied, so that the engine driver necessarily lost the command over the train as soon as he entered the steep incline leading to the Margate terminus. The inquest on Mrs. Locke was opened on Wednesday and adjourned.

ACCIDENT AT THE MANCHESTER STATION.—On Saturday as the passenger train from Stalybridge was approaching the incline near the Victoria station it came in contact with an engine and tender, which were standing partly on a branch line, but were not clear of the main one. The engine of the passenger train, as well as the engine and tender causing the obstruction, were much damaged. All the passengers were shaken, but only one of them complained seriously. The guard was bruised on his head and chest, and considerably shaken

Law.

Midland Circuit: Cambridge.—The Cambridge Murder.—William Marion Wallis was indicted for the Wilful Murder of Maria Hunt, at Cambridge, on Feb 28 last. There were also two other indictments against him—one for an assault on Maria Hunt, with intent to murder, and another for an assault upon Sally Harris Walker, with intent to murder. The trial excited very great interest from the peculiar circumstances of the case, the position of the parties, and the nature of the evidence. It will be remembered that the deceased, an old lady of 70 years of age, resided with another old lady, named Walker, at Prospect Cottage, Cambridge. On Sunday night, February 25th, the servant was going through the passage with a warming-pan in her hand, when she encountered a man with a black mask over his face, who rushed at her, knocked the candle out of her hand, and seeing the warming-pan beat Mrs. Hunt with it in a most violent manner. When the police arrived they found both ladies lying on the floor covered with blood, but the poor old lady dead. A number of circumstances of a highly suspicious character appeared to connect the prisoner with the outrage, and he was arrested. On March 15 Mrs Hunt died, and the prisoner was then charged with the capital offence. The evidence against him consisted of the depositions of the deceased lady taken shortly before her death, and the facts stated in court by the survivor. But it was of course purely circumstantial, no direct proof to fix the guilt upon the prisoner being available. Mr. Baron Channell in summing up the case carefully adverted to this fact, and the jury returned a verdict of Not Guilty on the ground of insanity. Lincoln.—Shooting with Intent.—Martin Hurst was indicted for shooting at Emma J. Ibson, at Corringham, on the 17th of June, with intent to murder her. The two young women were both schoolmistresses, and had been on excellent terms, assisting each other in private tuition, and visiting each other frequently. For some time before the crime prisoner appeared to be angry with or jealous of the prosecutrix, but the cause of this alteration of feeling was by no means clear. On the day in question the prisoner, while walking with the prosecutrix and some young ladies, drew a pistol from her pocket, and deliberately discharged it at the head of her friend. The forehead of the prosecutrix was scorched by the powder, but she had suffered no further injury. These facts having been clearly proved, the jury found the prisoner guilty of intending to do grievous bodily harm. Mr Justice Keating said that the absence of sufficient motive for the crime did not excuse it, and sentenced the prisoner to penal servitude for four years. The prisoner seemed in a highly excited state during the trial. The Fleet Workhouse Murder—David Bloy was indicted for the wilful murder of Simon Cote, at Fleet, on the 3d of December, 1860. The prisoner and deceased were sleeping in the same ward in the workhouse at Fleet, when the prisoner, who appears to have previously secreted a knife in his bed, went to Cote's bedside and cut his throat, falling down himself immediately after in an epileptic fit. There was no provocation for the act, and no previous quarrel. The prisoner had been for some time under medical care. He was subject to epileptic fits, and, although regarded as mad and so returned to the Lunacy Commissioners, was considered harmless and not put under restraint. About three weeks before the attack upon the deceased the prisoner had exhibited the first symptoms of violence in tearing his bed clothes upon his recovery from an epileptic fit. After cutting Cote's throat he became decidedly mad, and had only just recovered sufficiently to be put upon his trial now. Cote's wound went on well for a short time, but erysipelas supervened and caused his death. The jury Acquitted the prisoner on the ground of insanity, and he was ordered to be detained in confinement during her Majesty's pleasure. York.—The Knaresmire Murder.—John Foy was indicted for the wilful murder of Thomas Palfreman, on the 21st of May. The deceased was an amateur pugilist, and on the evening in question was drinking in a publichouse with a number of his friends and supporters. Foy and four other Irishmen were also present, and in the course of the evening Palfreman challenged him to fight for a shilling a side. Foy accepted the offer, and they fought some time, when the fighting became general. At length Palfreman cried out that he was stabbed, and on examination it turned out that he had received two wounds with a knife, one in the abdomen, and the other in the side, piercing the liver. He died in about 40 hours. On the morning after the fight, a blood stained pocket-knife was found in the place. The prisoner Foy had been seen with a similar weapon in his possession, and he was also near deceased at the time he was stabbed. The jury found him Guilty of Manslaughter, and he was sentenced to 20 years' penal servitude.

Home Circuit: Maidstone.—Extraordinary Charge of Riot.—Thomas Cole, Edward Beeney, Alfred Taylor, and Henry Butcher, four young men, surrendered to take their trial upon an indictment for misdemeanour in having riotously assembled and disturbed the public peace at Tunbridge Wells on the 2d of July. It appeared that a medical man in the town had made a complaint to the Home Secretary of the defective sanitary arrangements there, which had led to disease. An inspector sent down from the Home Office reported that this was not the case, and the lower classes, feeling indignant at the aspersion on their town, burnt the doctor in effigy and broke his windows. On the case being opened, Baron Martin suggested that it was a case for arrangement, and in the end the prisoners were dismissed on their own recognisances, and an engagement to pay 20*l.* for the damage done. Sinking a Ship.—Heinrich Kohn, a German ship carpenter, was charged with having entered into a conspiracy with other persons to sink the ship Alma, on which policies were effected to the extent of 30,000*l.* There was no doubt that the ship sank, the crew being taken off by another vessel; and the principal evidence against the prisoner was his own statements to parties on board the ship that rescued them. But as the vessel was foreign, the prisoner a foreigner, and the sinking of the ship took place on the high seas, the only charge that could be brought against him was that of having entered into a conspiracy with others for the purpose while the ship was at Ramsgate; and the jury not being satisfied with the evidence adduced, returned a verdict of Not Guilty. Forgery—William James Epps, 47, a very respectable-looking man, described as a commission agent, was charged with feloniously forging an acceptance to a bill of exchange for 2*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.* with intent to defraud. This case excited some interest on account of the position of the defendant, who was formerly proprietor of one of the principal hotels in the town, and who, at the time the offence was committed, was the proprietor of a restaurant, and also carried on the business of a seedsman at Maidstone. It appeared that the prisoner, who at the time was in pecuniary difficulties, had a foreman named George Beard, and that he produced to this person the bill of exchange in question, and asked him to put his name to it as the acceptor. He did so, and at this time there was no address to the bill, but subsequently the name of Rottingdean, Sussex, was written on the bill as the address of the acceptor, and it was then offered for discount to a loan company in London. It turned out that there was a person of respectability of the name of George Humphery Beard residing at Rottingdean, and the evidence was that the bill was discounted under the belief that he was the acceptor of the bill, the fact being that the prisoner was an entire stranger to him, and that he knew nothing of the transaction. At the close of the case for the prosecution, the prisoner's counsel submitted that the evidence had not established the offence of forgery. Mr. Justice Willes said it appeared that in the communications that took place between the parties before the bill was discounted, the prisoner had never represented that the acceptor of the bill was any other than the person who had really accepted it, and he was therefore of opinion that the indictment could not be sustained. The jury, therefore, under his lordship's direction, returned a verdict of Not Guilty. The prisoner was then tried upon a second indictment, charging him with the same offence in reference to a bill of exchange for 34*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* In this case it appeared that the prisoner had caused the same person, George Beard, his foreman, to accept the bill in question, and that the address, Bottingdean, was afterwards added. He then took the bill to a person named Wood, residing at Maidstone, and asked him to discount it, stating that the acceptor was Mr Beard, a seedsman at Bottingdean, who was one of his customers, and that the bill had been given in payment of an account he owed him in his business. The Jury, after a very short deliberation, returned a verdict of Guilty, at the same time stating, in answer to a question put by the learned judge, that they were of opinion that prisoner had represented the acceptor of the bill to be a person of substance who was able to pay it, when in point of fact he knew perfectly well that the acceptor was a man of straw. Mr. Justice Willes, in passing sentence, said that the prisoner had been most properly convicted of the crime of forgery, and he was sorry to see that in the course of these transactions he had committed another offence—that of embezzlement, and that he had been convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for that offence. Under all the circumstances he felt called upon to pass a sentence of some severity, and to order him to be kept in penal servitude for four years. Guildford: The Penge Murder.—The grand jury threw out the bill against the two labouring men at Penge, who were charged with the murder of a woman at that place. Mr Justice Willes in his charge intimating doubts both on the point whether the woman had died from violence, and whether if she did, there was prima facie evidence of the prisoners being with her. The Bahan Railway Accident.—Thomas Lee, engine driver, and John Trainer, fireman on the South Western Railway, surrendered on an indictment charging them with the manslaughter of five persons—namely, Joseph Clegg, John Coppard, Edward Hall, Robert Wilkie, and William Winfold. The charge arose out of the fatal accident that took place at the Egham Station on the Tuesday of the last Ascot Races, when one train ran into another, the result being that the deceased persons lost their lives, and several others were seriously injured. The principal points were that a train was despatched from Ascot at 10 minutes past 7 in the evening, and that five minutes afterwards another train, of which the prisoners were the driver and the fireman, was despatched from the same station, and while the first train was in the act of starting from Egham it was run into by the latter. It appeared that those who had the management of the second train were not made acquainted with the fact that the one which preceded them was to stop at Egham, and that the driver and guard of the first train were also not made acquainted that a train was to follow them at so short an interval as five minutes. It was admitted by counsel for the prosecution that the unfortunate accident was undoubtedly, in a great measure, attributable to the want of proper arrangements on the part of the superior officers of the company; but it was at the same time contended that if the prisoners by culpable negligence, either by disregarding the signals or by going at too great speed, which prevented them from stopping the train, had caused the death of the unfortunate persons who were the subjects of the indictment, they would be amenable to the charge preferred against them. After several witnesses had been examined, and the regulations made by the managers of the company for the traffic on the race days had been put in evidence, Mr. Justice Willes interposed, and expressed his opinion that there was not sufficient evidence to show that the prisoners were accountable for what had occurred. It was clear that there was very great confusion with regard to the signals, and after the statement of Colonel Yolland it appeared to be extremely probable that if the second guard, who had absconded, had not neglected his duty in applying the break the train might have been stopped, and the accident would not have taken place. Another point was that the prisoners were entirely ignorant of the fact that the first train was to have stopped at Egham, and that, according to the signals, instead of being stopped at the Rusham station, which was at no great distance from Egham, they were actually, according to the regulations, invited to go on. He did not know what the jury thought of the case, but he must say for his own part that he thought the system adopted was a wrong one, and that if railway companies would persist in pursuing such a system, and fatal accidents resulted, juries would be quite justified in compelling them to pay heavy damages to the relatives of those who lost their lives under such circumstances. The question was whether the driver of a train who was kept in ignorance of the state of affairs upon the line was to be held responsible for an accident such as this, and this was the only question for the jury to consider. The Jury said they entirely coincided in the view taken of the case by the learned judge. They were thoroughly of opinion that there had been no culpable negligence on the part of the prisoners, and that the accident had arisen in consequence of the company having given dangerous instructions, which could not be carried out. Mr. Justice Willes said he was of the same opinion, and that it would have been very wrong to convict persons in the position of the prisoners, solely because they were unable to carry out arrangements of the description that had been referred to. It seemed to him that the accident was entirely to be attributed to the mistaken regulations made by the company, and not to any criminal negligence on the part of the prisoners, and that it would only be a waste of time to proceed further with the inquiry. The Jury then returned a verdict of Not Guilty. A similar verdict was then taken upon the coroner's inquisition, and the prisoners were ordered to be discharged.

Western Circuit, Bodmin.—The Falmouth Lunacy Case.—Samuel Porter, who was convicted at the last Spring Assizes for the culpable neglect of his brother, a lunatic, but in whose case a point of law was reserved for the consideration of the Court for Crown Cases Reserved, was placed at the bar to receive judgment, the Court of Appeal having decided in favour of the conviction. Mr. Justice Byles addressed him at some length on the enormity of his offence; but, as the jury had recommended him to mercy, he thought that justice would be satisfied by the punishment of nine months' imprisonment. To avoid all misapprehension, he desired to state that the law did not authorise hard labour to be imposed for this offence. The sentence of the Court therefore was that he be imprisoned for nine months.

Markets.

COVENT GARDEN, Aug. 6.

Notwithstanding the continuance of dry weather, most descriptions of outdoor produce are very abundant. Cherries, Gooseberries, and Strawberries, though scarcer, are still sufficient for the demand. Of Grapes and Pine Apples there is also a good supply, and Black, Red, and White Currants are plentiful. The arrivals of foreign goods comprise Apricots and West India Pine Apples, both of which, especially the latter, are abundant and cheap. Green Walnuts for pickling may still be obtained. Peas are plentiful, as are also Potatos. Flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Heaths, Pelargoniums, Mignonette, and Roses.

HOPS.—BOROUGH MARKET, FRIDAY, Aug. 5.

Messrs. Pattenden & Smith report that the market remains without change, and prices firm. The reports from the plantations speak generally of the want of rain, and the deteriorating influence this long continued drought has on the plant.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Aug. 1.

We have a few more Beasts than on Monday last, but the average quality is very middling. The demand is pretty good, and last week's quotations are well maintained. There are also more Sheep and Lambs; they are, however, in request. Some choicest kinds make rather more money, but on the average we cannot quote higher. Calves are selling as on Thursday. From Germany and Holland there are 2860 Beasts, 7670 Sheep, 343 Calves, and 90 Pigs; from Scotland, 18 Beasts; from Ireland, 150; and 2960 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, Aug. 4.

The number of Beasts is larger than on Thursday last, but the average quality is very middling. Trade is active, and Monday's quotations are well supported. There is very little alteration, both as regards numbers and quality, of Sheep and Lambs. The demand is rather brisk for choice descriptions, which are by no means plentiful. Prices are about the same as on Monday. The trade for Calves also remains unaltered. Our foreign supply consists of 790 Beasts, 2970 Sheep, and 673 Calves. Milch Cows, 70.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Aug. 1.

The supply of English Wheat this morning was short; that of Barley, Beans, and Peas limited, with moderate arrivals of British Oats. The imports of foreign articles of the trade have been tolerably good. English Wheat met a slow sale at 1s. to 2s. per qr. decline. New Talavera appeared, quality fair. Foreign Wheat was in limited request, and prices were 1s. to 2s. per quarter lower on secondary descriptions. Imports 23,302 qrs. Town-made Flour was unaltered. Country marks were rather cheaper. Americans sold slightly lower. Grinding Barley was fully as dear. Malt supported prices steadily. Beans were quite as high. Peas met a moderate inquiry, and were held on fully as high rates. There was a fair extent of business done in Oats, at the extreme currency of last week. Imports, 35,821 qrs. Linseed sold at previous rates. Rapeseed was fully as dear. The floating trade was less brisk, and prices tended downwards.

FRIDAY, Aug. 5.

The bulk of the supply of home-grown Wheat on sale in to-day's market formed a portion of the arrivals on Monday. Although the show of samples was limited, millers purchased slowly at the recent decline in value. With foreign Wheat we were well supplied. Even the best qualities were a dull inquiry; in prices, however, no change took place. Floating cargoes of Wheat were dull, but most other produce afloat commanded extreme rates. There was less activity in the Barley trade, and in some instances the quotations were a shade lower. Malt commanded full currencies, and the demand for all kinds was steady. The quantity on offer was moderately extensive. The supply of Oats was only moderate, and a full average business was doing at full quotations. Scarcely any Beans were on show. The inquiry for them was steady, at very full prices. Peas sold readily, but no actual advance took place in the rates obtained. Linseed and cakes were in good request at very full prices. In agricultural seeds next to nothing was doing. New Rapeseed continues to be held at high rates.

The Furnishing of Bed Rooms.

HEAL AND SON have observed for some time that it would be advantageous to their customers to see a much larger selection of BED-ROOM FURNITURE than is usually displayed, and that to judge properly of the style and effect of the different descriptions of Furniture, it is necessary that each description should be placed in separate rooms. They have, therefore, erected large and additional Show Rooms, by which they are enabled not only to extend their show of Iron, Brass, and Wood Bedsteads and Bed Room Furniture, beyond what they believe has ever been attempted, but also to provide several small rooms for the purpose of keeping complete suites of Bed Room Furniture in the different styles.

Japanned Deal Goods may be seen in complete suites of five or six different colours, some of them light and ornamental, and others of a plainer description. Suites of Stained Deal Gothic Furniture, Polished Deal, Oak, and Walnut, are also set apart in separate rooms, so that customers are able to see the effect as it would appear in their own rooms. A Suite of very superior Gothic Oak Furniture will generally be kept in stock, and from time to time new and select Furniture in various woods will be added.

Bed Furnitures are fitted to the Bedsteads in large numbers, so that a complete assortment may be seen, and the effect of any particular pattern ascertained as it would appear on the Bedstead.

A very large stock of Bedding (HEAL & SON'S original trade) is placed on the Bedsteads.

The stock of Mahogany goods for the better Bed Rooms, and Japanned Goods for plain and Servant's use, is very greatly increased. The entire Stock is arranged in eight rooms, six galleries (each 120 feet long), and two large ground floors, the whole forming as complete an assortment of Bed Room Furniture as they think can possibly be desired.

Every attention is paid to the manufacture of the Cabinet work, and they have just erected large Workshops on the premises for this purpose, that the manufacture may be under their own immediate care.

Their Bedding trade receives their constant and personal attention, every article being made on the Premises.

They particularly call attention to their Patent Spring Mattress, the Sommier Elastique Portatif. It is portable, durable, and elastic, and lower in price than the old Spring Mattress.

News of the Week.

THE Danish Rigsdag was opened on Saturday by the KING in person. HIS MAJESTY, in his Speech from the Throne said that, notwithstanding the courage and endurance of the army and fleet, and the sacrifices which had been readily borne by the entire people, the war waged against Denmark by a superior force had compelled him to agree to the heaviest and most grievous concessions. But having been abandoned by all Europe he was forced to yield to numbers, and to endeavour to terminate a war the continuance of which would only have entailed greater losses and misfortunes, without the prospect of any improvement of their position. He said that he looked with comfort to the future in full reliance upon the people, and in the hope that brighter days would not fail if King and people united to heal the deep wounds inflicted upon the country.

The preliminaries of peace between Denmark and Germany, with the text of the armistice, have been published both at Vienna and Berlin. They confirm the details given last week in regard to the cession of Schleswig, Holstein, and Lauenburg, and contain the stipulations which have been agreed upon in reference to the financial question. The debt contracted on account of Denmark proper is to be borne by Denmark only, while that incurred for the benefit of Schleswig and Holstein is to be borne by the Duchies. The common debt is to be apportioned relatively to the respective populations of Denmark and the Duchies, except the English loan of December, 1863, for which, as it was raised to carry on the war, Denmark is alone to be accountable. The costs of the provisioning, billeting, and transport of the troops which will continue to occupy Jutland, are to be borne by that province, and the surplus revenue after payment of these expenses up to the time of its evacuation is to be returned to Denmark.

From Paris we learn that the trial of M. GARNIER PAGES, M. CARNOT, and others, for illegally convening an electoral meeting of more than 20 persons, has terminated in their conviction. The Court deliberated five hours before coming to a decision, and sentenced them to a fine of 500 francs each with costs. The defendants have resolved to appeal against the sentence.

A telegram from Madrid announces that great alarm has been caused by the apprehensions of a popular disturbance in that capital, in consequence of which the Government have taken measures to preserve order.

M. TRANGOTT, the head of the National Government of Poland, and four of his colleagues, were hanged on the glacis of the citadel of Warsaw on Friday morning. The sentence of death passed upon 11 other members of the National Government has been commuted to hard labour or to imprisonment in a Siberian fortress.

Accounts from Tunis state that the Arabs are greatly dissatisfied with their chiefs for coming to terms without insisting on the dismissal of the minister or Kasnadar; and the affairs of this Regency still appear so threatening that the French and Italian admirals have despatched two ships of war to the coast for the protection of the subjects of their respective countries.

From the United States we learn that General GRANT blew up a Confederate fort at Petersburg on the 30th ult., and then assaulted and carried a line of Confederate intrenchments. An entire regiment was destroyed, together with the fort. Four days previously he moved two corps to the north side of the James River, and intrenched them at Deep Bottom, 10 miles from Richmond. While this movement was in progress, General LEE attempted to outflank General BUTLER'S position at Bermuda Hundred, upon which General GRANT despatched an army corps to the rescue, and drove the Confederates from their breastworks, capturing four guns. The Federal troops who pursued the Maryland invaders have been attacked by the Confederates under General EARLY, near Winchester, and signally defeated. In their flight they were driven through Martinsburg to the Potomac, with heavy loss of men and artillery. The Confederates have since re-occupied Martinsburg, and have invaded in force the States of Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Kentucky. The reported capture of Atlanta by General SHERMAN is not confirmed, but severe fighting is reported to be going on before it. Mr. FESSENDEN has called for subscriptions to a popular loan of 200,000,000 dollars. It is reported from New York that a board of naval officers has decided that the persons rescued from the Alabama by the Deerhound were prisoners of war, and that the Government has approved this decision.

A telegram from Bombay states that the KING OF AVA has granted a perpetual concession for railways, telegraphs, and collieries within the territories of Burmah.

The latest advices from New Zealand state that military operations are suspended, and that the troops have gone into winter quarters.

Home News.

THE COURT.—The Queen and Royal family continue at Osborne. On Friday morning the 5th inst., the Prince of Wales and Prince Louis of Hesse, left Cowes in the Victoria and Albert on a cruise to Dartmouth and Torquay, where they visited the Grand Duchess Marie of Russia. In the afternoon the Queen, accompanied by the Princess of Wales and Princess Louis of Hesse, drove out in an open carriage and four. On Saturday afternoon the Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, Prince William of Prussia, and Princess Leiningen, embarked in the Royal yacht Fairy, and cruised towards Spithead. Her Majesty returned at 8 o'clock. The Princess of Wales and Princess Louis of Hesse cruised in the Elfin, and met the Prince of Wales and Prince Louis of Hesse on their return from Torquay in the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert. The Right Hon. T. Milner Gibson arrived, and had an audience of the Queen. On Sunday the Queen, the Prince and Princess of Wales, and Prince and Princess Louis of Hesse attended divine service at Osborne. The Rev. G. Prothero officiated. On Monday morning the Prince and Princess of Wales took leave of her Majesty, and left Osborne for Marlborough House, accompanied by the infant Prince Albert Victor. The Queen and Princess Louis of Hesse walked and drove. Princess Helena took an airing. Mr. Arthur Helps arrived on a visit to the Queen and Royal family. On Tuesday the Queen and Princess Louis of Hesse drove out. On Wednesday the Queen and Royal family drove out in the morning and afternoon. The Right Hon. E. Cardwell arrived at Osborne on a visit to the Queen. In the evening Prince and Princess Leiningen dined with her Majesty. On Thursday morning the young Prince William of Prussia left Osborne on his return to Germany. It is announced that the Queen and Royal family will leave Osborne on the 28th or 29th inst. for Edinburgh, on their way to Balmoral, where her Majesty is expected to remain till the end of October.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES returned from Osborne to Marlborough House on Monday. On Tuesday the Duke of Cambridge visited their Royal Highnesses. The Prince went to the Licensed Victuallers' Asylum, in Old Kent Road, and inaugurated the statue of the Prince Consort, recently erected in the grounds of the Asylum. On Wednesday the Prince and Princess drove to Kew and visited the Duchess of Cambridge. In the evening their Royal Highnesses, with Prince Albert Victor, left Marlborough House for Scotland by the London and North-Western Railway. They arrived in Stirling on Thursday morning, and proceeded thence by the Forth and Clyde Railway to Balloch, at the foot of Lochlomond, where a steamer was in waiting to convey them to Inversnaid, whence they were to post to Stronachlachar, and then sail over Loch Katrine to the entrance of the Trossachs. It was expected that their Royal Highnesses would remain at the new Trossachs Hotel on Thursday night, and go on to Callander yesterday morning. It is understood that the Prince and Princess will remain at Abergeldie Castle from six weeks to two months, and will then proceed to Copenhagen on a visit to the King of Denmark.

PRINCE NAPOLEON IN SCOTLAND. — On Friday morning Prince Napoleon arrived in the Clyde in his steam-yacht from Havre, on a cruise round the West and North Highlands. The Prince landed at Greenock during the day, and visited the Greenock foundry, where the massive engines of the three large French Transatlantic steamers, Washington, Lafayette, and Europa, have been made. He also visited the Europa, which was recently launched by Messrs. Scott & Co. His Imperial Highness returned to the ship in the evening, and on Saturday morning again landed, and embarked in the steamer Vivid for Bowling, whence he visited Loch Lomond, and then proceeded to Inverness, where he arrived on Monday evening. After visiting the various objects of interest in the town and neighbourhood, the Prince proceeded by the Caledonian Canal to Oban, where he rejoined his yacht. There is a curiosity in naval architecture on board the yacht—viz., a small pleasure yacht of about six tons, fitted up with a double screw propeller, and with its miniature machinery encased in mahogany framework. This boat hangs from the steamer's davits.

MARRIAGE OF DHULEEP SING.—The Alexandria correspondent of the Times of India gives the following account of the marriage of Dhuleep Sing, which took place at the British Consulate, Alexandria, on the 7th of June, in the presence of a very few witnesses:—"The young lady who has now become the Maharanee is the daughter of a European merchant here. Her mother is an Abyssinian. She is between 15 and 16 years of age, of a slight but graceful figure, interesting rather than handsome, not tall, and in complexion lighter than her husband. She is a Christian, and was educated in the American Presbyterian Mission School at Cairo; and it was during a chance visit there, while on his way out to India, that the Prince first saw his future bride, who was engaged as instructress in the school. Dhuleep Sing wore at the wedding European costume, excepting a red Tarboosh. The bride's dress was also European, of white moiré antique, a fichu point d'Alençon—short lace sleeves, orange blossoms in her dark hair, with, of course, the usual gauze veil. She wore but few jewels; a necklace of fine pearls and a bracelet set with diamonds were her only ornaments. The formula of civil marriage at her Britannic Majesty's Consulates in the Levant is very brief. Both parties declare that they know no lawful impediment to their union; then they declare that they mutually accept each other as husband and wife, and the civil ceremony is over. This formula was pronounced by the Prince in English; the bride, in a low but musical voice, read it in Arabic (that being the only language with which she is acquainted), and thus 'Bamba Muller' became the 'Maharanee.' She showed much self-possession through it all. A religious ceremony was performed by one of the American ministers at the house of the bride's father; and the newly-married pair retired to the Prince's house at Ramleh, a few miles from Alexandria. They will leave soon for England."

THE CHANNEL FLEET.—The Corporation and citizens of Cork gave a public dinner to Admiral Dacres and the officers of the Channel Fleet on Tuesday evening, in the ball room of the Imperial Hotel. Mr. Maguire, M.P., presided as Mayor of the City, and among the guests were Earl de Grey and Ripon, Secretary of State for War, the Duke of Somerset and the other Lords of the Admiralty, and other distinguished persons.

NEW BARONETCY.—The Queen has directed letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a baronet of the United Kingdom to Thomas Burch Western, Esq., of Rivenhall, of Essex, and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Emperor left Vichy on Sunday morning, and arrived at 11 o'clock at Monflucon, where he met with an enthusiastic reception. His Majesty, after visiting the principal manufactories, continued his journey, arriving at St. Cloud at 9 P.M. On Tuesday the Emperor presided at a Ministerial Council at St. Cloud. King Leopold left Paris for Brussels on Tuesday evening. Preparations on an extensive scale are making at Paris for the fêtes in honour of the approaching visit of the King of Spain. On the 17th the entertainments at Versailles are to be of unprecedented magnificence and splendour, and 10,000 invitations are to be issued for that day. The semi-official journals state that the King's visit has no political significance, but is merely a return for that which the Empress Eugenie paid to the Court of the Escurial last year. His Majesty's stay in France will be limited to three or four days only. Monsignor Cerbet, Bishop of Perpignan, and M. Aristide Hasson, the sculptor, are dead. The trial of MM. Garnier Pagès, Carnot, Dreo, and others, for illegally convening an electoral meeting of more than 20 persons, terminated on Saturday before the Sixth Chamber of the Correctional Tribunal of the Seine. A curious incident marked the proceedings of the concluding sitting. M. Jules Favre addressed the Court in favour of M. Garnier Pagès, for upwards of two hours in a speech of such extraordinary power that when he had concluded M. Berryer rose and stated that the other defendants, yielding to a feeling of legitimate admiration for the brilliant defence just delivered, had come to the resolution not to weaken the hon. advocate's reasoning by any superstructure of defence on their part. They believed, he said, that there was not a judge in France who could condemn them after such arguments, and therefore they would not allow their counsel to add a word to what M. Jules Favre had uttered. The Court then withdrew to deliberate, and in spite of M. Berryer's anticipation, all the defendants were convicted and sentenced, after five hours' deliberation, to a fine of 500 fr. each, with costs. The defendants have resolved to appeal to the Cour Impériale, and, if need be, to the Court of Cassation, against the sentence. The trial of Frankowski, an agent of the Polish National Government, took place on Wednesday at the Court of Assize for the Seine. He was charged with having altered the numbers of some bonds of the Credit Foncier of Poland, stolen during the insurrection. The court sentenced him to two years' imprisonment, that being the lightest punishment that could be inflicted. The two ships Jura and Amazone are to sail forthwith from Toulon for Mexico, to bring back to France a portion of the troops. This year 10,000 will return, and 10,000 more next spring. The Amazone will first proceed to Cayenne with a batch of convicts, and thence to Vera Cruz. The Paris papers continue to discuss the terms of the peace between Denmark and the great German Powers. The Constitutionnel of Saturday, in an article correcting the journals which accuse the French Government of having allowed an opportunity for territorial aggrandisement to pass by, says:—

"The only thing true is that England, with the object of preserving the possessions of King Christian, would willingly have passed from diplomatic action to military action. But in a war with Germany France would have had to bear the full brunt and expense. England would have swept the sea, capturing the vessels belonging to the belligerents, and taking a glorious part, almost costless and convenient. France never had the promise nor the prospect of territorial aggrandisement. England offered nothing: France asked for nothing. Neither the Earl of Clarendon during his journeys to Paris, nor the British Cabinet in its diplomatic despatches, ever hinted at France taking the Rhine frontier."

SPAIN.—The ex-Duke of Parma has arrived at La Granja. The Noticias of Wednesday says that on account of the alarm existing at Madrid, the Government will take measures to maintain public order. The Epoca of Sunday states that some sergeants of the Saboya regiment have been arrested, and says:—"This measure appears to have some serious motive, although Madrid is tranquil." The Libertad and Iberia have been prosecuted for publishing seditious writings, and have been brought before the military tribunals. A Catalonian commission has arrived at Madrid to confer with the Government upon the means of terminating the industrial crisis. The frigate Carmen has received orders to sail for the Pacific.

PORTUGAL.—The King is at the Palace of Alfeite, practising, on the sands of the Tagus, a new cannon of his own invention. Excitement prevails respecting the elections, which are fixed for the 11th September. On Friday, being the anniversary of the establishment of the constitution, the King received the municipal authorities. His Majesty said that he would always maintain those institutions which contribute to the prosperity of his people. It is stated that at a Cabinet Council it has been resolved to permit the re-establishment of a limited number of religious houses, and that the Government has notified its intention to the Papal Nuncio. The vines are suffering from the intense heat.

SWITZERLAND.—The Federal Council has a second time requested from the Austrian Government the extradition of General Langiewicz. The ancient republic of Cressonniéres in the valley of Dappes, which has existed so long without magistrates, army, or taxes, has just disappeared from the map of Europe. On Sunday last the French gendarmery began to exercise their functions in the small district now definitively annexed to France.

BELGIUM.—King Leopold arrived at Brussels from Paris on Tuesday night, and immediately proceeded to Laeken. The result of the new elections for the Chamber of Representatives throughout the whole of Belgium gives a majority of 12 in favour of the Liberal party.

DENMARK.—The Rigsdag (Assembly for Denmark Proper) was opened on Saturday by the King in person, with the following speech from the throne:—

"Although the Session, to which we have summoned our faithful Rigsdag in accordance with article 27 of the Constitution, must be immediately prorogued on account of circumstances, we have yet felt the necessity of opening it in person, and of assembling around us the representatives of our people. Notwithstanding the courage and endurance with which our valiant army and fleet have fought for Denmark's right and honour, and notwithstanding the readiness with which the entire people has made every sacrifice for the salvation of the country, the war waged against us by a superior force will nevertheless compel us to subject people to the heaviest and most grievous concessions. If all Europe leaves us without assistance, we have seen ourselves forced to yield to numbers, and to endeavour to terminate a war the continuance of which under existing circumstances would only entail upon our beloved people and country greater losses and misfortunes, without holding out the prospect of any improvement of our position. Nevertheless, we look towards the future placidly in full reliance upon our brave Danish people, entertaining the firm hope that brighter days will not fail if King and people unite to heal the deep wounds inflicted upon our beloved country. We rely, especially on you, gentlemen, the elect of the nation, to labour faithfully with us for the welfare of the country, and wish you in your endeavours the blessing of Heaven!"

His Majesty then quitted the Chamber amidst the cheers of the members. The terms of the Treaty of Peace have created much dissatisfaction at Copenhagen, and the Fadreland attacks the Ministry with great bitterness. It complains of the secrecy with which the negotiations were conducted, and of the arrangement of the preliminaries without the consent of the Rigsdag. It charges the Ministry of Marine with incapacity, the War Department with carelessness, and the generals with ignorance of military affairs, and declares that a war so badly conducted could only terminate in a disgraceful peace.

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.—In accordance with instructions from Hanover and other minor German States the Federal execution troops have entered Lauenburg. The clergy and gentry of the district of Kiel held a meeting in that town on Monday, at which 23 persons only were present. The draught of a petition to the Schleswig-Holstein Commissioners was submitted for signature to the meeting. The petition explained the necessity of and demanded a common government for Schleswig-Holstein, under the protection of Prussia, and dwelt upon the importance of the closest union with that Power. After an animated discussion however the assembly refused to sign the petition. Two steamers arrived at Flensburg on Monday with 1000 soldiers, natives of Schleswig, who had been discharged from the Danish army. The soldiers landed amid loud rejoicings, singing National songs, and cheering for their Fatherland and liberty. Seven of the prisoners taken by the Danes from the island of Sylt also arrived.

HANOVER.—Prussia has demanded from Hanover and the other Governments concerned, explanations respecting the occupation of Lauenburg by the Federal troops. It is said that the Hanoverian representative at the Federal Diet, has been instructed to declare that should the Diet be unable to obtain satisfaction for the events which have taken place at Rendsburg, and which directly affect the authority of the Diet, Hanover will withdraw her troops from Holstein to avoid the possibility of a second violation of Federal rights.

PRUSSIA.—It is believed that the King of Prussia will not return to Berlin before the beginning of next month, and that at the end of September he will proceed to Baden to celebrate the Queen's birthday. Austria and Prussia are engaged in negotiations for a proposal to be made to the Federal Diet for the establishment of a joint Provisional Government for the Duchies.

AUSTRIA.—The following is an abstract of the Treaty of Peace concluded between the two great German Powers and Denmark, and of the protocol for the armistice:—

"The King of Denmark relinquishes his rights to Schleswig-Holstein and Lauenburg in favour of the Emperor of Austria and the King of Prussia, and agrees to recognise arrangements made by the two latter Sovereigns with regard to the Duchies. The surrender of Schleswig includes the islands belonging to that Duchy. Denmark also cedes her Jutland possessions to the south of the southern frontier of the district of Ribe. On the other hand, the Emperor and Sovereigns consent to an equivalent portion of Schleswig being incorporated with Denmark. The debts contracted on account of Denmark Proper or the Duchies will be borne respectively by either of them. The debts contracted on account of the monarchy will be proportionately borne by between Denmark Proper and the Duchies, with the exception of the loan contracted in England in 1863, which will be paid by Denmark, and the war expenses of the great German Powers, which will be borne by the latter. Both parties agree to an armistice on the basis of uti possidetis, from the 21 August to the 15th September, 14 days' notice to be given on either side of the resumption of hostilities. Contributions will no longer be raised in Jutland. The occupation by the allied troops will be continued for military purposes. It is stipulated that the expenses of victualling the troops will be borne by Jutland; the surplus revenue which may remain to be paid over to Denmark. The prisoners of war are to be set at liberty on condition of their parole not to serve in the Danish army before the conclusion of peace. After the signature of the preliminaries the definitive treaty of peace will be negotiated at Vienna."

HUNGARY.—The effects of the excessive drought are severely felt in Hungary, where, in some of the mountainous districts, the peasants are reduced to such misery as to be obliged to eat the leaves of trees and wild roots.

POLAND.—M. Trangott, the head of the Polish National Government, together with Krzyzanowski, Focyski, Zulinski, and Jezioranski, the chiefs of the different departments, were hanged on Friday morning on the glacis of the citadel. The sentences of death passed upon 11 officials of the National Govern-have been commuted in some cases to hard labour, and in the others to imprisonment in a Siberian fortress.

ITALY.—A meeting to demand the dissolution of the Chamber of Deputies was to have been held this week at Florence; but information of the same having reached the authorities they could not permit it to be held for such an object, and the meeting was consequently abandoned. The official Gazette of Wednesday, reproducing in its bulletin several passages from a pastoral letter of the Archbishop of Vienna respecting the Pontifical loan, points out the violent language and base insults contained therein, and says:—

"They would not even be justified from enemies, and are unworthy of the sacerdotal character."

GREECE.—A new Ministry has been formed, composed as follows:—Admiral Canaris, President of the Council and Minister of Marine. M. Comoundouros, Minister of the Interior. M. Sotiropoulos, Minister of Finance. M. Carnalis, Minister of War. M. Andrue Loudos, Minister of Justice and ad interim Minister of Public Worship. M. Theodoros Delcyannis, Minister for Foreign Affairs. M. Deliorohi has been re-elected President of the National Assembly. The Ionian Deputies have arrived at Athens, and have met with an enthusiastic reception. They took the oath of allegiance on the 3d. The verification of the elections is completed. The discussion of the Constitution commenced on Friday.

TURKEY.—An Arab insurrection is reported to have again broken out below Bagdad. The Turkish troops have been defeated in three engagements with the insurgents, and have lost three guns. The Persian Gulf cable has been broken.

THE PRINCIPALITIES.—Prince Couza has granted a general amnesty to all political offenders. Foreigners, although included in that measure, are nevertheless to leave the Principalities immediately.

TUNIS.—Accounts from Tunis state that the Arabs are dissatisfied, with the terms of the recent pacification, and accuse their chiefs of having treated with the Bey without obtaining the dismissal of the Kasnadar. War continues between Sousse and the neighbouring villages. The French and Italian admirals have dispatched two ships of war to watch the coast and protect French and Italian subjects.

WEST COAST OF AFRICA.—The whole of the troops engaged in the Ashantee war have been withdrawn from the Prah, and the stores destroyed. The troops arrived at Cape Coast Castle after a most difficult march, in which they lost four men. All the attempts of Governor Freeman, of Lagos, to obtain an interview with the chiefs of Abbeokuta, with a view to bring about a more friendly feeling between the two places, have been frustrated by missionary influence at work in Abbeokuta, which has been antagonistic to Lagos since its union to Britain. The coast, from Cape St. Paul to Jachlin, was strictly blockaded by the cruisers Sparrow, Jaseur, Ranger, Speedwell, Zebra, Antelope, and Rattlesnake, to prevent a steamer from shipping slaves. She is much faster than any cruiser on the coast, except the Rattlesnake, and and has already been twice chased unsuccessfully by the Pandora.

INDIA.—The King of Ava has granted a perpetual concession for railways, telegraphs, and collieries in Burmah. Eight million pounds of leaf tobacco have been destroyed by fire at Manilla.

NEW ZEALAND.—The latest advices from New Zealand report no further military operations. The troops had gone into winter quarters.

UNITED STATES.—The Confederates under General Early turned upon the force which pursued them on their retreat from Maryland, defeated a portion of Hunter's troops commanded by Crook and Averill on the 23d and 24th ult., near Winchester, and compelled them to retreat to Harper's Ferry, with a loss of 1200 men. The Federal generals Averill, Kelley, and Mulligan were among the killed. The Confederates have since occupied Martinsburg, and commenced destroying the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. General Early is still on the Virginian side of the Potomac, at Falling Waters. The Federals are guarding the fords of the Potomac at Williamsport. On the 26th ult. General Grant moved two corps to the north side of the James River, and is now intrenched at Deep Bottom, 10 miles from Richmond. In consequence of these movements General Lee attempted to outflank Butler's position at Bermuda Hundred. To check this attempt Grant despatched the 2d Army Corps to the north bank of the James River, and drove the Confederates from their breastworks, capturing four guns. He afterwards advanced to attack the Confederate fortifications. It was rumoured that General Lee had received a scalp wound while observing the Federal lines. On the 30th ult. General Grant blew up a Confederate fort at Petersburg. He then assaulted and carried a line of Confederate entrenchments. An entire regiment was destroyed, together with the fort. The battle was still progressing on the 30th, at noon. Preparations are making to resist a fresh Confederate invasion of Maryland. General Mosby, with 500 cavalry, is already in Maryland, near Edward's Ferry. The military authorities have enrolled, armed, and equipped all the negroes in Baltimore. The Confederate cavalry re-entered Kentucky on the 28th ult. The Confederates have also advanced in three columns into Pennsylvania, and occupied Chambersburg. The Governor of the State has issued a proclamation, stating that the invading force was larger than he expected, and that arms would be furnished to the citizens for the defence of Harrisburg. A battle was fought before Atlanta on the 21st, between the Federals under General Sherman, and the Confederates under General Hood, who had superseded Gen. Johnston. The Federals assert that Hood fell back to the fortifications, leaving his killed and wounded on the field, and that Sherman took 4000 prisoners; while the Federal loss amounted only to 1500 men. Another desperate engagement took place on the 22d ult. The Federals state that the result was indecisive, and that the Confederates lost 7000 men, and the Federals 2000 men, including General MacPherson, one of the ablest of the Federal commanders. General Hood, however, claims the victory, and announces that he captured 22 cannon and 2000 prisoners. On the following day both belligerents buried their dead under a flag of truce. Wheeler's cavalry has routed the Federals near Decatur, capturing their camp. General Hardie is operating in Sherman's rear. General Rousseau has rejoined Sherman, after destroying 30 miles of the Montgomery and Atlanta Railroad. Smith's expedition has returned to Memphis for supplies, after defeating Forrest in five engagements. Accounts from Charleston state that the bombardment of Sumter is progressing with renewed vigour—425 shells having been thrown at the fort on the 20th ult. Captain John Mitchell, the eldest son of John Mitchell, the celebrated Irish Repealer, who had recently been appointed by the Confederate Government to the command of Fort Sumter, was killed there on the 19th by a Federal cannon ball. This is the second son John Mitchell has lost in the Confederate service. The Government has received information that several thousand persons in Missouri, including Mr. Vallandigham, are implicated in the scheme for the formation of a North-Western Confederacy. The New York Herald asserts that a board of naval officers has decided that the persons rescued from the Alabama by the Deerhound were prisoners of war; and that the Government has approved this decision.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.—In accordance with the suggestion of Admiral Kingcome, Commander-in-Chief in the Pacific, the Governor has ordered the Fraser River to be buoyed up to New Westminster, beacons to be erected on the land in the narrowest part of the Channel, and a light ship to be placed on the Sand Heads. The Admiral says that the approach to the entrance of the Fraser River possesses many advantages over that of the Thames, and that when these precautions are completed a perfect stranger will have no difficulty in taking ships drawing from 19 to 20 feet to New Westminster.

MEXICO.—An Imperial decree was issued in Mexico on the 20th ult., providing that in the event of the death of the Emperor Maximilian, or other accident rendering it impossible for him to perform the functions of Government, the Regency of the newly created Empire shall be confided to the Empress. In honour of her Majesty the municipality of Mexico have resolved to erect a triumphal arch in the capital.

THE PACIFIC.—By the West India mail we learn that nothing further had transpired relating to the difficulty between Spain and Peru. In Peru the utmost exertions were used by the Government to have all war vessels in readiness, when it is ascertained how the Spanish admiral will act on receipt of fresh instructions.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

THE PRINCE CONSORT'S STATUE AT THE LICENSED VICTUALLERS' ASYLUM.—On Tuesday the Prince of Wales presided at the uncovering of a statue of his father, which the Licensed Victuallers have erected at their Asylum in the Old Kent Road, in grateful recollection of the fact that the Prince Consort laid the foundation stones of the two wings of the institution at two different periods. Though the rain fell heavily there was a numerous assemblage, and the Prince, in reply to an address which was presented to him, expressed the pleasure he felt in this honour paid to his father's memory, and his wish to follow his example. The statue, which is the work of Mr. Earle, is of Carrara marble, upwards of 8 feet high, standing on a pedestal formed of a solid block of Sicilian marble. It represents the Prince in a plain morning dress, in the act of replying to the address presented to him on his last visit to the Asylum, one hand resting on part of a Corinthian column, typical of his love of art, while the other hand grasps a scroll. The Prince of Wales before leaving expressed his approval of the statue, both as a likeness and as a work of art.

DECORATION OF THE HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.—The report of the Commissioners appointed to consider the agreements with the artists engaged on the wall paintings of Westminster Palace has been printed. The Commissioners think a further sum of 3000*l.* in addition to the 3000*l.* he has already received, should be paid to Mr. Herbert for his "Moses," and that the contract as to the remaining eight pictures should be cancelled and a new contract entered into. They recommend that Mr. Maclise should receive 10,000*l.* for his two paintings already finished, instead of 7000*l.*, the sum agreed upon, the contract for the remainder to be cancelled and a new contract entered into. Messrs. Cope and Ward had eight pictures each to execute for 600*l.* each. Mr. Cope has completed six, and Mr. Ward five. The Commissioners recommend that they be requested to complete the remainder with all convenient speed, and be paid 100*l.* additional for each picture. Mr. Dyce's work was left incomplete at his death, and the Commissioners do not think the state of things calls for further interference. They express the opinion that in future there should be no deviation from a contract entered into, believing that nothing would more effectually discourage the country from giving important commissions to artists, than the admission of a loose and indefinite system of payment which would make it impossible to form beforehand a reliable estimate of the expenditure to be incurred.

THE THAMES EMBANKMENT.—The construction of the greatest of metropolitan improvements — the Thames Embankment—is now making fair progress. Long rows of piles on the north side of the river between Westminster and Blackfriars bridges, the noise of the pile-driving machines, and of about 30 steam engines pumping and working on the temporary stages; and the long line of carts that crawl slowly along Fleet Street and the Strand, laden with rubbish to be shot into the river, all bear evidence that the work is proceeding with rapidity, though the progress of the work is somewhat impeded from the want of proper material to make the bank. The foundations of the river wall are carried down to 22 feet below high water level, or 14 feet below low water. From the foundations to about 6 feet below low water the whole space is to be filled up with concrete. Within the embankment will be constructed the Low Level Sewer, and a subway for water and gas pipes and telegraph wires, access to which may be obtained at any time without breaking up the road. The Low Level Sewer, between Whitefriars Street and the Victoria Street Sewer, is to be 8 feet 3 inches in diameter, and formed in brickwork, 13½ inches thick. From the Victoria Street Sewer to Westminster Bridge the Low Level Sewer will be 7 feet 9 inches in the clear. At Whitefriars the invert of the sewer will be 20 feet 3 inches below low water; the fall in the sewer will be at the rate of one in 2640, or 2 feet per mile. The subway to be formed above the sewer, but with an interval of 4 feet between the bottom of the crown of the sewer, will be 9 feet in width and 7 feet 6 inches in height, bringing the crown of the subway to a trifle more than 2 feet below the level of the roadway, the surface of the embankment being 4 feet above high water. The floor of the subterranean way through which the gas and water pipes and the telegraph wires are to be conducted will be gravelled, and will be 5 feet 6 inches below high water, so that ample room will be afforded for the workmen to walk through it and execute the necessary repairs. The river wall of the embankment is to be faced with granite from 2 feet below low water, and at high-water mark there will be bold mouldings of granite, and the parapet will be formed as an open balustrade at the parts where there are steam-boat piers and landing stages. A solid mooring bar of iron will be laid along the whole length of the embankment, and to it will be attached 58 mooring rings, held in lions' mouths, and to which barges, steamers, and river craft may be made fast. The dredging of the river, on the line of the river wall of the embankment, and the sinking of the foundations, are works of a very formidable character. The line of the face of the embankment is formed in the first instance with sufficient accuracy for the construction of the coffer dam. The curve is about 9000 feet radius, and is formed by offsets from lines taken from a pole set up about midway between two of the bridges to two other points on the bridges; these form an angle, and from its sides the effects are taken at every length of 50 feet, which determine the curve of the river front. In one portion of the work, Mr. Kitson, the contractor, adopts the old form of coffer-dam for getting to the foundations, while in the section of Mr Furness caissons are employed. The inner circle railway will be constructed on the inner side of the embankment, and not within the embankment itself, which will have quite sufficient to carry the Low Level Sewer and the subway. When completed, with the extension of New Earl Street, the Embankment will form a noble thoroughfare, having St. Paul's at one end and Westminster Abbey and the Houses of Parliament at the other.

GOVERNMENT NOTICE TO EMIGRANTS TO THE UNITED STATES.—The Emigration Commissioners have issued the following circular, by order of the Government, under the title of "Information for Emigrants to the United States."—"On arrival at New York you will be landed with your luggage at Castle Garden, where you will obtain, free of charge, good accommodation and instructions as to the best mode of reaching your destination. This establishment is under the supervision of the Commissioners of Emigration for the State of New York (one of whom is the president of the Irish Emigration Society), and affords every facility for obtaining inland passage-tickets by railroad and steamboats to all parts of the United States and Canada. Be cautious in buying in this country, or on board ship, 'Inland passage tickets' for travelling in the United States, as you may find them useless on your arrival in America. You will obtain them cheaper, and run no risk of imposition, by getting them at Castle Garden, New York. Do not trust to strangers, whose object in offering you assistance is either to entrap you into enlisting, or to gain your confidence for the purpose of defrauding you of your money. Do not accept invitations from strangers to drink, and be especially careful not to get drunk, or in any way to lose control over your own actions. Be very cautious as to the engagements you enter into for work. Remember that an American dollar is nominally equal to 4*s.* 2*d.* English money, and a cent is one halfpenny, but that under the present circumstances of the country they will not buy more than one-third as much of the necessaries of life as they would formerly buy."

EXPERIMENTS AT SHOEBURYNESS.—The Iron-plate Committee brought their official existence to a close on the 4th inst. with some experiments on a target representing an iron-clad built to scale upon the principle adopted by the French. Nearly all the Iron-plate Committee were present on this occasion, together with a large number of officers of both branches of the service, who were specially interested in seeing how the theory of foreign armour ships would stand the practice of such heavy ordinance as Shoebury could bring against them. The target represented in its upper part the French iron-clad La Gloire, and in its lower the last and best of the French iron-clads the Flandres. Both these vessels are built of wood, clothed with plates of small area, fastened to the sides with large "wood-screws," holding by coarse threads in the timber, instead of bolts passing entirely through, with nuts on the inside, which is the usual English plan. Though the plates were of the most perfect description made by the Millwall Company, the old smooth-bore 68-pounder, at 200 yards sent steel shot right through plate and framework, smashing the target to pieces; but the French method of fastening the plates with screws instead of bolts seemed absolutely perfect. It is obvious, however, that these screws can only be used with wooden ships which have been plated with armour, and the experiments both with this French target and with the Lord Warden a few months since have proved the worthlessness of wooden ships so plated, as compared with pure iron structures.

THE MAIN DRAINAGE.—At a meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works on Friday, Mr. Bazalgette, the engineer read a detailed statement of the condition of the sewage works, from which it appeared that about one-third of the sewage which formerly flowed into the Thames had been diverted through the sewers, and as soon as the Metropolitan Railway was completed, a still larger quantity would be diverted.

THE MACKAY GUN.—It is understood that Government has given Mr. James Mackay, of Liverpool, an order for one of his windage adaptation guns, the weight to be 10 tons, and the bore the same diameter as the ordinary 68-pounder. A 12-pounder gun on the same principle as the heavy gun recently tried will shortly be publicly tested. It is said that the range already attained is much in excess of that of any other weapon.

THE COMET.—The comet first observed on the 5th July has been for some days distinctly visible to the naked eye in the immediate neighbourhood of the well-known group of the Pleiades, about two hours before daybreak. It is well seen through an ordinary opera-glass, and is visible almost as long as starlight lasts.

THE DONKEY SHOW.—On Tuesday the prizes were awarded by the judges to the mules and donkeys in this exhibition, which has proved a great success. The 1st prize, a silver cup, for English mules was gained by D. Sykes, Esq., of Pinner Park; the 2d by Mr. Rock, Blackstock Park, Islington; the 3d by Mr. Thomas Sparks, Romford. In the class for foreign donkeys the 1st prize, a silver cup, was won by the Prince of Wales; the 2d by Charles L. Sutherland, Esq.; the 3d by Samuel Gurney, Esq., M.P.; the extra prize by Sir H. Stracey, Bart. In the class of English donkeys the 1st prize was awarded to Lady V. Cecil; the 2d to Miss C. Garton. The remaining prizes were for donkeys almost exclusively used by costermongers in their business, and ranged from 5*l.* to 5*s.* each, besides numerous certificates of highly commended. The Rev. Thomas Jackson, rector of Stoke Newington, and friends, have added to each of the highly commended animals in these classes, an additional 10*s.*; and 5*s.* each to the commended; a sum of 9*l.* is also to be distributed among the owners of animals that have been kindly treated; which will in effect raise the 5*s.* prizes to 15*s.*, and give 5*s.* to those who had no prizes at all.

DEATH OF THE GUARDSMAN AT WIMBLEDON.—Private Cooper, the private of the Coldstream Guards who was accidentally shot on the 21st ult. at Wimbledon, died there on Tuesday. He was making favourable progress towards recovery as regards the wounded side until Friday night, when symptoms of congestion of the lung on the sound side became evident. These gradually increased in intensity, and he sank on Tuesday without pain. An inquest was opened on Thursday, and after hearing the medical evidence as to the cause of death, was adjourned to Monday. The body was buried on Thursday evening with military honours in Brompton Cemetery, in that portion of the ground allotted to the Household troops who die in the London district. The deceased bore a high character in the regiment as a quiet and steady man, and during his illness he constantly expressed his extreme anxiety that nothing should be done to Sergeant Roberts on account of the accident.

ROBBERY OF GOVERNMENT STORES AT WOOLWICH.—A wholesale system of robbery has been discovered at the Government Clothing Stores at Woolwich, and a number of non-commissioned officers and soldiers have been apprehended in possession of the stolen property. The robbery was first brought to light by a detective officer of the R Division, and the military police on searching the residences of a number of Artillery soldiers, holding superior positions at the establishment, found a very large amount of unmanufactured serge, flannel, cloth, calico, leather &c., and a number of manufactured articles, all branded with the broad arrow, and evidently stolen from the clothing stores. At present 10 persons are in custody, and a searching investigation which is in progress is expected to result in the apprehension of other delinquents.

COLLISION IN THE NORTH SEA.—The Italian ship Aguila de los Andes was towed into the Victoria Dock on Monday considerably damaged, having been in collision with the French ship Zelie off the Norfolk coast. The Italian struck the French ship with such force that she immediately foundered, carrying seven or eight of her crew to the bottom with her. The remainder of the French crew got on board the Italian, and were brought to London, with the exception of an apprentice boy, who was picked up at sea by a Dutch galliot.

NEW NAMES OF STREETS.—At the last meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works all the subsidiary names in Upper Albany Street and Albany Street, Marylebone, were ordered to be abolished, and the whole thoroughfare to be renumbered and known as Albany Street. The same order was issued with regard to Seymour Street, Upper Seymour Street, and Crawford Street, Euston Road, which is to be called Seymour Street; and Moreton Street, Victoria Road South, and Victoria Road, St. Pancras, is to be called Victoria Road only. John Street, in the parish of St. George-in-the-East, was ordered to be called Sheridan Street, and several other thoroughfares were ordered to be renumbered with the odd numbers on one side and the even on the other.

THE RAILWAY MURDER.—The adjourned inquest on Mr. Briggs was resumed on Monday, when several new witnesses were examined, including Mr. Death, the jeweller; the woman at whose house Müller lodged; the wife of the cabman who gave the first clue to him, and some foreigners who had been his companions. The statements they made were only repetitons of what has been already published, corroborating the suspicions against Müller, but not carrying the case further. During the examination his photograph was produced and identified, and the hat found in the carriage was proved to have belonged to him. The inquiry was then again adjourned to Monday week. The following additional facts have been ascertained by the police since our last notice:—On the day of the murder Müller worked at his employment until 7 o'clock in the evening, after which he went to the house of Mr. Repsch, in Jewry Street, Minories. He was then left in the company of a fellow-workman called Haffa, Mr. and Mrs. Repsch having to go out. Haffa states that Müller left the house at 8 o'clock, and that he himself did not go out at all. Nothing further is known of Müller's movements until the next morning, when he got up and conducted himself in his usual cheerful manner, and after breakfast he went out. He did not return home however, at his usual time. In fact, it is not known when he did return, for all the other occupants had retired to bed. On the Monday following the murder Müller visited Mrs. Repsch, who at once saw he had got a new hat, for which he said he had given 14*s.* Mrs. Repsch also observed the ring he had got from Mr. Death, and took it from his scarf and examined it. On the following Wednesday, after some conversation Müller and Haffa went to the shop of Mr. Annis, in the Minories, where the former pawned the gold chain received from Mr. Death for 38*s.*, and on coming out of the shop Haffa gave him 12*s.* for the ticket. He advanced a further sum of 1*l.*, in order that Müller might get his own watch and guard, pawned for 4*l.*, out of pledge. When this was done they went to Prince's Street, Leicester Square, where Müller pledged the watch and guard for 4*l.*, and in consideration of a further advance of 5*s.*, Müller gave Haffa the ticket. It has been ascertained beyond doubt that on the morning of this day Müller had no money, and consequently when in the afternoon at the London Docks he paid 4*l.* of the passage money and went on board the Victoria, which he did immediately, he had only 5*s.* in his possession. From the information given by one of the agents of the vessel who did not leave the ship until it reached Gravesend, it appears that Müller attracted the attention of several of the passengers from being without a change of clothing or other requisites for so long a journey, and it was also noticed that one of the wristbands of his shirt was torn off. This drew a remark from one of the passengers that Müller had on no shirt at all, on which Müller said that on account of the edge of the wristband being frayed he had torn it off. On the way down the river the passengers read the newspapers containing the account of the murder, and commented freely upon it, but neither the agent nor the pilot is able to say whether Müller made any remark on the subject. The police have ascertained that the hat worn by Müller when he embarked is the same that was worn by Mr. Briggs on the night he was murdered. Of such importance was this considered that at the request of the Commissioners of Police Mr. Briggs, jun., accompanied Inspector Kerressey by the second mail steamer, the more effectively to complete the evidence necessary for the extradition of Müller. The sleeve lining found in the chimney in Müller's bedroom and the truncheon found in the neighbourhood are now in the possession of Dr. Taylor, who has submitted them to analysis and found the sleeve lining saturated with human blood, a portion of which he thinks has been wiped from a boot; but he has not yet expressed an opinion regarding the truncheon. The father of Müller, a gunsmith, lives at Kemnitz, in Saxony, of which village Müller is a native. The German Legal Protection Society of London are endeavouring, by means of the most diligent inquiries, and by seeking information from every available quarter, to ascertain what were the precise movements of Müller on the day the murder took place. Their object is, if possible, to show that he was not on the railway at the time of the murder, and that he could have had no connection with the tragedy.

Hayes Common on Fire.—On Sunday evening the furze on Hayes Common, adjoining Keston Common, which was fired last week, was found to be in flames, which spread so rapidly that it was impossible to do anything but allow them to burn themselves out, which they did, after about four acres of furze had been destroyed. On Wednesday, at the petty sessions at Bromley, three grown-up lads residing at Beckenham were charged with having set fire to the furze. One of them called George Hall was committed for trial at the assizes. The others were discharged.

The Public Health.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths in London in the week ending Saturday, Aug. 6, were 1595. The average number in the corresponding week of the 10 years 1854-63, corrected for increase of population, was 1342. The present return is therefore 253 above the average. During the week the births of 974 boys and 932 girls, in all 1906 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1852.

Basingstoke.—Earl De Grey and Ripon, Secretary of State for War, has directed the Marquis of Winchester, as Lord Lieutenant of Hampshire, to hold an inquiry into the circumstances which led to the disbandment of the Basingstoke Volunteers in May last, on the ground of their alleged disobedience to their commanding officers at the Albury Review. It appears that the corps deny that they refused to obey orders, and it is understood that every person able to throw light on the matter in dispute will be welcome to be heard, in order that the whole truth may come out.

Bilston.—A few days since a shocking outrage was committed at Coseley, near this town. An old man called Thomas Caddick was interposing to protect two of his daughters from the violence of Henry Christian, a collier, the husband of one of the women, when he was seized by the throat by his son-in-law and strangled. The jury returned a verdict of Manslaughter against Christian, who was committed for trial at the next Staffordshire assizes.

Birmingham.—Mr. Charles Rann Kennedy, the well-known barrister of the Midland Circuit, has filed a petition in the Bankruptcy Court. The only debt scheduled is the bill of costs in his late law suits against Mrs. Broun, formerly Mrs. Swinfen, for which execution has been issued.

Bradford.—On Tuesday Lord Palmerston laid the foundation stone of the new Exchange in this town, in the presence of an immense concourse of spectators. An attempt was made to induce the working classes to abstain from taking any part in the demonstration, in order to show their disapprobation of his lordship's policy in regard to the Reform question, but the introduction of politics on such an occasion was so generally opposed that the intention was ultimately abandoned, and his lordship's reception was of the most enthusiastic character not only from the people of Bradford, but from large numbers who had come from Leeds, Halifax, and other towns to see him. Soon after 12 o'clock Lord Palmerston, who had passed the previous night at Holme House, the residence of Mr. Ripley, arrived at the Peel Park, when a procession was formed to the site of the New Exchange. An address was there presented to his lordship, who immediately laid the stone with the usual ceremonies, and then delivered a brief speech thanking the inhabitants for the reception they had given him, and expressing his belief that as their industry was not only productive of peace, but was essentially prosperous in peace, it was therefore the cause and the effect of peace; and that the Exchange which is to rise from the site may be properly designated as a temple of peace. A grand dinner took place in the evening in the saloon of St. George's Hall, and in consequence of the immense numbers who were unable to obtain admission, an adjournment afterwards took place to the Great Hall, where the speeches were delivered. There were at least 4000 persons assembled when the company entered the Hall. Addresses were then presented to his lordship by the Corporation and Chamber of Commerce, after which a vote of thanks was unanimously given to him amidst overwhelming applause. In acknowledging the compliment Lord Palmerston spoke at great length on the trade and prosperity of Bradford, and on the effect produced upon it by the free trade policy of his Administration, of which he said that no other Administration that ever existed contained within itself a greater number of able, distinguished, and capable men, and that there never was a Government in which every department of State was better filled than it is at present. He then proceeded to give the following sketch of the history of free trade and its results:—

"We all recollect the time when, a proposal being made to abolish the protection which the agricultural producers had long enjoyed, the people were told that the country would be ruined—would be starved, that the land would go out of cultivation, that the agricultural interest would vanish and perish; and they said, 'For Heaven's sake don't inflict such a calamity upon the country.' Well, what has been the consequence? Not only by the repeal of the Corn-laws have the bulk of the community received largely supplies of food which previously they could not get, and been able in exchange for them to send forth the products of their industry, but the agriculturist himself has greatly benefited by the change. Every class which is protected puts on its nightcap and goes to sleep; and it requires that which the schoolboys call 'the cold pig,' the application of competition, to stimulate the energies of the man, and make him bestir himself, and improve the calling to which he has devoted his mind and capital. Well, that has been the case with the agricultural interest, and that would be the case with all other nations which shall adopt our principles of free-trade; but if you come to talk to them about it they pour forth such force of argument that you would think the trade would be ruined and the other branches of industry would be impoverished, and that you cannot afford to take the bread out of the mouth of this class and that class. But they forget the interests of the consumer. They look only to the small and local interests, and they are as deaf as an adder, and you cannot persuade them to adopt the doctrines you preach. Nothing can convince other nations except the broad and patent example of the prosperity which England has reached from the abolition of that protective system. We are often told that we ought to make commercial treaties with other countries, and thereby gain, in exchange for the admission of other commodities, facilities for the admission of ours. That system has been rendered impossible by that which we have already done. In the case of France it was a necessity, because the French Government, although desirous of entering into a system of free exchange with us, was unable to do so, except as the consequence of a treaty, and that treaty, as has justly been said, and every man in this town well knows, has been of the greatest advantage to England. I am glad to think that it has been peculiarly beneficial to Bradford, that it has been a great advantage to the French nation, who, when it was first proposed, thought it was a calamity from which they could probably with difficulty recover. Well, that treaty was made. We had to take off import duties from an immense number of commodities. It was impossible to limit the abolition of duty to articles coming from France, because, with our insular position, commodities from other countries would surely have come through France, and therefore what was granted to France was granted to every other country. In fact, we have acted upon what common sense prompts—your negotiation with a foreign country. If it is real and sincere that you will abolish certain import duties here if they will abolish certain duties, that is very much as if two men had shackles on their legs, and one was to say to the other, 'Now, if you will take off your shackles, I will take off mine, but not otherwise.' If the duties which we impose upon the importation of foreign commodities which are wanted by the consumers of this country are a burden upon the country itself, and the remission or abolition of these duties is a gain, whether it be accompanied or not by any corresponding remission or obligation on the part of other countries, we do it for our own sakes, and so we tell these foreign countries. They don't very much believe us. They say, making an erroneous use of words, and there is no greater cause of error in reasoning than the misapplication of terms, they say, especially in Germany, if we let in English commodities upon a low duty, and without difficulty, we shall be inundated by British commodities. They think in their own minds what an inundation of water is, and that the same evil effects would arise from the admission of European commodities, which would happen from the breaking of one of their great dykes. They totally forget that we are much too sensible to make them a present of what we have been making; that we only send our commodities abroad as an exchange for an equal value to be received here, and that therefore they cannot be inundated with our goods unless they themselves, by their own industry, create an equal value to send to us in return, and that consequently every additional commodity which we send abroad is the cause of additional industry, additional capital, and additional employment to their manufactures at home. Well, we have pursued this course. On the one hand we have acted on the principle of reducing duties for our own benefit and our own advantage, and we have held out to other countries the example of our success as an encouragement to them to follow our course. But I remember talking to a very distinguished political economist of a foreign country, and explaining to him how it had succeeded with us. He said, 'Ah! it is very well. You have got rich by Protection, and now you can afford Free Trade.' I tried to persuade him that Protection had slackened our course of progress—that we were less wealthy than we should have been if Protection had been got rid of sooner. He said, 'No; you have got rich by Protection, and now we are poor you want to keep us poor by asking us to get rid of that shield under cover of which you have amassed the wealth which you now possess.' Well, gentlemen, all I can say is that the course which has been pursued for the last five years has been conducted with benefit to the country. We have succeeded in preserving peace, although there were great events arising in different parts of the world in which we might have been implicated; and exhortations were not wanting. We might have been tempted, plausibly enough, upon good principles and good motives, but we refrained from doing so. We have maintained peace, and I think in that respect we have done our duty to the country. We have lamented, no doubt, that terrible war, that bloody war, which has been raging in the Northern part of the American continent; but we have felt that any endeavour on our part, or in conjunction with any other European Power, to interfere in that quarrel would have done mischief instead of good. The feelings are high when the quarrel is fierce and the battle raging: the combatants will not listen to the calm advice of friends, however good their intentions, and however wise their counsels. All that we have to do is to pursue the course by which in the first instance we averted the consequence of this calamitous war, to abstain from meddling, and to wait for that hour, which must come at last, when the two parties, exhausted by their mutual efforts, are at last weaned away from those revengeful feelings which at present influence them, and are more disposed to come to an amicable settlement. We can only hope that the time will shortly arrive when that blessed result will take place."

Lord Palmerston afterwards left for Saltaire, the residence of Mr. Titus Salt. On Wednesday after inspecting the celebrated works at that place, his lordship left Saltaire by the afternoon express train for town.

Bristol.—A man named Banister, a coach-liner, about 50 years of age, is in custody in this city on suspicion of having murdered his wife. It appears that on Friday morning his wife was found dead on the floor of the house, her head being cut in several places, as if with a razor or other sharp instrument. Banister was apprehended, and stated that the deceased fell over the stairs with an earthernware vessel, which broke, and caused the wounds in her head. An inquest has been opened and adjourned.

Croydon.—On Tuesday night a serious fire broke out in St. Peter's Church, near the East Croydon Railway station, caused by the carelessness of some workmen who were engaged in erecting a spire on the tower. Considerable damage was done to the roof and building before the flames were subdued, and the spire was totally destroyed. The church was fortuately insured.

Gravesend.—A terrible accident occurred in this town at an early hour on Saturday morning. Two men were engaged in cleaning out a cesspool when the gas suffocated one of them, and he fell off the ladder on which he was standing. Another man went down to recover him when he too was suffocated and fell in. The police were sent for, and Serjeant Coomber tried to recover the bodies, when he also was overpowered by the pestilential gas, and fell backwards. The foul air was at last expelled by means of a fire annihilator, when the three men were got out, but life was extinct in all of them.

Ipswich.—The 21st annual meeting of the British Archæological Association commenced in this town on Monday, under the presidency of Mr. G. Tomline, M.P. The proceedings were inaugurated with a meeting at the Town Hall, where the association was welcomed by the Mayor and Corporation, and the president delivered an address. In the course of the day the principal antiquities of the town were examined. On Tuesday an excursion was made to Bury St. Edmunds, where the members were received by the Mayor and Corporation at the Guildhall. After examining the churches and antiquities, visits were paid to Hengrave Hall, Risby, and Little Saxham, and on the return to Ipswich there was an evening meeting for reading papers and discussion. On Wednesday there was an excursion to Colchester, where the Mayor and Corporation received the members, who spent the day in inspecting the various antiquities in the town. On Thursday there was an excursion to Parham Hall and Church, thence to Bruisyard Church, to Dennington Church, and to Framlingham, concluding with a visit to the president at Orwell Park in the evening. The excursion yesterday included Woodbridge, Ufford Church, Buttry Abbey, and Orford Castle. To-day Sudbury, Long Melford, Lowenham, and Hadleigh, and Little Wenham Hall will be visited, and the Congress will conclude with an evening meeting.

Kingston.—The projected sewage works of Kingston and Surbiton have for the present been suspended by a Chancery suit. The Conservators of the River Thames have moved for an injunction to restrain the Mayor and Corporation of Kingston, from discharging the sewage of the town into the river. The corporation are about entirely to change the system of drainage in the town, and in place of the existing cesspools, which are to be removed, propose to construct new sewers on a large scale, and thus discharge the entire sewage of Kingston into the Thames, below the town, at a point near Teddington Lock. The Conservators object that the proposed plan of drainage will entirely nullify the purification of the river expected to result within the area of London from the operations of the Metropolitan Board of Works. Kingston already has an outfall into the Thames; but the Conservators of the river have refused permission for the new sewers to be connected with the old outfall, or for any additional sewage to be so discharged. They have therefore taken the present proceedings in order effectually to restrain the defendants from adding any further to the pollution of the stream. The suit is at present undecided, and stands over to the Michaelmas Term, the defendants giving an undertaking in the meantime not to commit any act from which the desired injunction, if granted, would restrain them. It appears from the local papers that it is not London only which objects to this discharge of the Kingston sewage into the river, but all the places between it and the metropolis. It is argued that if Kingston be allowed to do this, Thames Ditton, Moulsey, Hampton, Sunbury, Walton, and other of the rapidly-growing places along the banks of the river will do so likewise; so that whilst the stream below is kept uncontaminated, the sewage from the towns above London will flow down with the stream to Teddington, and thence up and down with each tide, making the Thames above Teddington little better eventually than an enormous cesspool.

Liverpool.—The El Tousson and El Monnassir, recently purchased by the Government from Messrs. Bravay, have been handed over to Messrs. Laird of Birkenhead, the builders, by Captain Paynter, of her Majesty's ship Majestic. Messrs. Laird have contracted with the Admiralty to complete them for sea. They will be re-named the Scorpion and the Wyvern, and are each to be armed with four 300 pounders, throwing a broadside of 1200 lb. The turrets are on Captain Coles's cupola principle. The Scorpion will probably be ready in a few weeks.

Manchester.—The fine old historical church of Manchester, now called the cathedral, has for some years been undergoing a process of restoration, and on the 4th inst. the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of the new tower to be erected on the site of the old one was performed by the Bishop of the diocess. The ceremony was preceded by a service in the church, at which the Archbishop of York preached the sermon. After the ceremony of laying the stone a luncheon was given at the Palatine Hotel, which was attended by the Messrs. Pattenden & Smith report the demand steady for 1863 Hops, and late prices are fully maintained. The reports continue favourable both at home and abroad.

BRITISH WOOLS.—LONDON, Aug. 11.

As is usual in August the amount of business is small, but we expect renewed briskness and high prices in September, as the stocks on hand are so very deficient.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Aug. 8.

We have a considerable increase in the supply of Beasts, but the average quality is still very middling; choice descriptions are not much lower; a clearance cannot be effected of inferior qualities. Sheep and Lambs are also more plentiful; there is a demand for them at about late rates. Calf trade is dull at rather lower prices. From Germany and Holland there are 2180 Beasts, 9260 Sheep, and 317 Calves; from Scotland, 49 Beasts; from Ireland, 270; and 3730 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

The number of Beasts is large, including many turned out unsold on Monday last. Trade is very heavy for middling qualities, but choicest kinds make about the same as on Monday. We are fairly supplied with Sheep and Lambs; the demand is not good, but there is no quotable difference in prices. Best Calves are rather dearer. From Germany and Holland there are 780 Beasts, 3890 Sheep, and 394 Calves; Milch Cows, 65.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Aug. 8.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent this morning was small, and the stands were pretty well cleared at a decline of 1s. per qr. upon the rates of this day se'nnight; there were several samples of this year's growth, quality of which varied considerably, the prices realised were irregular. Foreign was neglected, and to effect sales a reduction of 1s. per qr. had to be submitted to. Barley sold slowly at rather less money. Beans brought a trifling advance. Peas were unaltered in value. The Oat trade was steady at last week's quotations. There was little done in Flour without alteration in value.

FRIDAY, Aug. 12.

Up to last Tuesday the weather continued dry and hot; on that day we had several hours' rain, which appears to have been general throughout the country, but did not to any extent interfere with harvest operations, which are progressing rapidly in the districts south of the Humber. Since then it has been dry but much cooler. The Wheat trade has been unsettled during the week, and prices gave way about 1s. per qr., the sale being very restricted. Flour moved off slowly, with a downward tendency in its value. Feeding Barley met less attention, and the price receded 6d. per qr. in the larger ports of the east and west coast. Beans maintained the late advance well, but Peas are the turn easier, excepting in Liverpool, where a further improvement of 1s. to 2s. was established. Since Friday last 10 vessels have been reported off the coast. The floating trade has been very quiet for Wheat with declining prices. Maize has been in good demand at late rates. Barley steady. Paris, Aug. 11.—Flour: The trade has been very slow, and prices have declined 1s. to 1s. 6d. per 280 lbs. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 33s. per 280 lbs. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 30,500 cwts. In Wheat only a few transactions have taken place, at a reduction of about 9d. per 480 lbs. The arrivals of foreign Oats since Monday are large, of all descriptions of other grain, English and foreign, moderate. The attendance at this morning's market was thin; there was a considerable quantity of new English Wheat offered for sale, but as millers were not disposed to pay Monday's prices but little business was transacted. Foreign was neglected, and the few sales made were at barely late rates. Barley, Beans, and Peas were unaltered in value. Oats were rather easier.

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 9.—At our market to-day there was a better inquiry for Wheat, and a fair business was effected at the rates of Friday last. Oats less saleable. Barley, Beans, and Peas all brought full prices. Indian Corn scarce, and sold readily at 6d. to 9d. per quarter advance on the week. Oatmeal unchanged. There was a steady trade in Flour, at Friday's decline of 6d. per sack and barrel.

FRIDAY, Aug. 12.—The market closes quiet. Wheat in limited demand, at Tuesday's prices. Barrel Flour firm, but sack lower. Indian Corn 6d. dearer; 30s. paid for mixed to arrive, refused on the spot. Beans unaltered. Oats and Oatmeal quiet.

News of the Week.

THE Federal army before Petersburg has suffered another disaster, which appears likely to terminate General GRANT's campaign. For several weeks, during which the Federals have been apparently inactive, General GRANT had been constructing an immense mine in front of the outer line of the Confederate works. This mine, filled with six tons of powder, was sprung on the 30th ult., when the Confederate battery was blown into the air with 250 men of the North Carolina regiment. The Federal artillery instantly opened with shot and shell along the entire line, and General BURNSIDE's division rushing through the opening, carried the ruined battery and the first line of intrenchments. On attempting to advance further he was received by the Confederates under General BEAUREGARD with such a murderous and incessant fire that the negro troops fled in disorder, and the whole force was ultimately repulsed with a loss which is admitted to exceed 5600 men, and probably amounts to 10,000. When the news of this disaster reached the Government, President LINCOLN hastened to Fort Monroe, and had an interview with General GRANT, the nature of which may be inferred from the report that the Army of the Potomac is retiring on Washington, and that a Court of inquiry has been convened to investigate the disaster. The Confederates have burned Chambersville in Pennsylvania, and have again invaded Maryland in force. After occupying Hagerstown and advancing to Middlesburg, they retired from the latter State, and are said to have been overtaken and defeated by General AVERILL in Virginia, with a loss of 600 men and four guns. General EARLY, whose force amounts to upwards of 40,000 men, has been reinforced by Generals THOMAS and BRECKINRIDGE at Martinsburg, and is said to be establishing a base of operations in the Shenandoah valley. It is reported that General HOOD assaulted SHERMAN's position at Atlanta on the 27th ult., and was repulsed with considerable loss, but there are counter rumours that SHERMAN was defeated. Admiral FARRAGUT's fleet passed the forts at the entrance of Mobile harbour on the 27th ult., and disabled the Confederate rams. He was approaching the city on the 5th inst.

The dissatisfaction of the minor German Powers with the proceedings of Prussia and Austria in the Danish Duchies is still unabated, though there is an evident reluctance to press matters to a rupture at the present moment. It was announced a few days since that Saxony intended to move in the Federal Diet that an explanation be demanded from the two great Powers in reference to their having permitted the KING OF DENMARK to cede rights to them to which he had himself no title. The Berlin papers denounced this motion as an insult to the victors; and it is now stated that Saxony, yielding to urgent entreaties, will abstain from moving the proposition. The Danish Secretary of Legation, M. DE BILLE, and Staff Captain BRAHE, have arrived at Vienna from Copenhagen with instructions for the Danish Plenipotentiary respecting the peace negotiations. The German papers state that the delay in commencing the negotiations has been caused by the difficulty of arranging the financial questions between Denmark and the Duchies, which require most extensive preliminary investigation. The Prussians have prohibited the export of horses, cattle, and every description of provisions from Jutland during the continuance of the armistice, and are surveying the port of Kiel, with a view, it is said, of making it a naval station.

The recent execution of the five members of the Polish National Government has been followed by that of M. KRASICKI, who had been convicted of attempts on the life of General DE BERG, when governor of the city. Two of his accomplices appeared on the scaffold to receive the same punishment; but at the last moment their sentence was commuted to 20 years' hard labour. Six others who were concerned in the same attempts were sentenced to various terms of hard labour at the mines.

A serious riot, arising out of the recent O'CONNELL demonstration in Dublin, broke out on Friday between the Orangemen and Roman Catholics in Belfast, and continued with little intermission until midnight on Thursday last. The fury of the mob was at first directed against the chapels and private houses of persons who were obnoxious to them, after which they broke into the gunsmiths' shops and armed themselves for regular battle in the streets. Several persons were killed, and many more severely injured. The constabulary were obliged on more than one occasion to fire upon both parties, but nothing seemed to check the rioters until a large body of military arrived from Dublin. The troops now patrol the streets night and day, and it is hoped that tranquillity is restored. Party disturbances have also occurred in Londonderry and Dundalk, and there is a rumour that the rioting has extended to other towns in the North.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES remained at the New Trossachs Hotel on the night of Thursday the 11th, and left on Friday morning for Callander and Aberdeen, whence they proceeded by the Deeside line to Aboyne, where they arrived soon after 5 o'clock. From Aboyne their Royal Highnesses posted to Abergeldie Castle, a drive of some 16 miles, and reached their destination at 7 o'clock. The weather throughout the journey was delightful. On Saturday the Duke of Cambridge and Princess Mary arrived at Abergeldie on a visit to the Prince and Princess. On Sunday their Royal Highnesses attended divine service in the parish church of Crathie. The Prince and the Duke of Cambridge have been enjoying grouse shooting on the Abergeldie moors since the opening day, and with fair success. It is understood that the Prince and Princess will remain at Abergeldie until the 2d of September, when they will proceed to Copenhagen on a visit to the King of Denmark. Their Royal Highnesses will embark at one of the Scotch ports, and will proceed to the Baltic in the Royal yacht Osborne, escorted by the Channel fleet, which is ordered to rendezvous at Leith by the 1st of September. After visiting Copenhagen, the Prince and Princess will visit Stockholm and other ports in the Baltic.

PRINCE ALFRED during his tour in Norway has enjoyed a few days' salmon fishing on the waters leased by the Duke of Roxburghe, which extend over three miles. PRINCE NAPOLEON IN SCOTLAND.—On Monday evening Prince Napoleon arrived in Glasgow, and put up at the George Hotel. On the next day the Prince drove to Hamilton, and on his return to the city visited the Exchange and the principal places of business. His Imperial Highness left Glasgow by an afternoon train for Stirling, where he visited the castle and inspected the armoury, the ancient palace, and the Douglas room. On Wednesday the Prince left Stirling for the Rumbling Bridge, Lochleven Castle, and Kinross.

THE ARMY—The Colonelcy of the 48th Regiment, vacant by the death of Sir J. Reynett, has been conferred on the Hon. General Dalzell; and the Colonelcy of the 86th Regiment, vacated by this promotion, has been conferred on Major-General Johnstone. Major-General Sir Richard James Dacres, K.C.B., has been appointed Colonel-Commandant of the Royal Artillery, in the room of the late Sir William Brereton.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—Mr. W. Bagge, of Stradsett Hall, has consented to become a candidate for West Norfolk in the Conservative interest, in opposition to Mr. Brampton Gurdon. Mr. Townsend Mainwaring has contradicted the report of his intended retirement from the Denbigh boroughs. Alderman Lusk, Mr. M'Cullagh Torrens, and Mr. Phillips, of the Coal Exchange, are candidates for Finsbury, in the room of Sir M. Peto, who retires. Sir Thomas Lloyd, of Bronswydd, will be a candidate for Cardiganshire in the Liberal interest on the retirement of Colonel Powell. Mr. Grylls is a candidate for Helston in the Liberal Conservative interest, in the room of Mr. Rogers, who retires. Foreign.

FRANCE.—The King of Spain arrived at St. Cloud at 9 o'clock on Tuesday night. The Emperor awaited his Majesty at the entrance of the park, and the Empress with the Prince Imperial, Prince and Princess Lucien Murat, Prince and Princess Joachim Murat, and the Princess Anna Murat, received the King at the entrance of the grand staircase. The only members of the Imperial family who were not at the reception were the Princess Matilde, who was absent from "indisposition," and Prince Napoleon, who will not return from Scotland during his Majesty's visit. The great officers of the Court were afterwards presented to his Majesty. On Wednesday the King visited Paris incognito, and drove about the streets, and in the evening there was a gala dinner at St. Cloud. On Thursday the King held a reception at the Spanish Embassy; M. Drouyn de Lhuys was among the visitors. In the evening a grand dinner was given at the Tuileries, to which the Diplomatic Body were invited; and a state performance afterwards took place at the Opera. Yesterday there was a review of the National Guard, as well as of the Imperial Guards and the troops of the line. The great fête at Versailles is to take place to-day. To-morrow the King will go to Havre incognito to visit Queen Christina, and will return in the evening to Paris. The Emperor's fête took place on Monday, and passed off very successfully. The Emperor drove down the avenue of the Champs Elysées, and was warmly cheered wherever he was recognised. The peculiar feature of the fête was the enormous numbers of English visitors who had been brought over by special excursion trains. The illuminations in the evening were splendid, and the concourse of people was immense. The Emperor on the occasion of the fête, and on the proposition of the Minister of Justice, granted pardons, commutations, or reductions of punishment to 1517 condemned prisoners of different categories. The Danish question is still the subject of discussion, and several of the journals express the opinion that in allowing Denmark to be sacrificed without making an effort to prevent it, France has lowered her prestige and influence abroad. The Revue des Deux Mondes contains an article from the pen of M. Eugene Forcade, in which it is contended that France threw away a golden opportunity in January last in rejecting the invitation of England to join her and act in common. It then proceeds to say:—

"Either (which seems impossible) war would have broken out, and in that case that compensation which was contemplated at a later period would have been assured; or (and this is what would most probably have happened) Austria and Prussia would have recoiled before the resolute union of France and England, an inhuman effusion of blood would have been avoided, Prussia would have been deprived of an opportunity of assuming in Europe a preponderance and power of impulse which cannot but cause uneasiness, and France would have been spared the humiliation of finding herself, for the first time in her history, excluded from a participation in the settlement of the affairs of the North. Indeed the balance-sheet of the policy which has prevailed is sadly negative. We have obtained no territorial compensation; the situation of the North of Europe has undergone great modifications without the participation of France, through arrangements quietly taken by Austria and Prussia in a tête-a-tête at Vienna. Such a state of things cannot be viewed with complacency; and it is idle to pretend that it should be regarded as satisfactory."

A conflagration broke out on Monday evening at Limoges, during the display of fireworks in honour of the Emperor's fête. The number of houses destroyed is estimated at 200. The Courrier de Limoges states whilst the fire was at its height, the Bishop, followed by his clergy, carried in solemn procession round the burning houses the relics of St. Aurelian and St. Martial. The fire, however, continued to rage with great fury, and was not subdued till Tuesday. The damage is estimated at from 160,000*l.* to 200,000*l.* Measures have been taken for the sustenance and shelter of those who have suffered by the catastrophe. The Emperor not being able to go to Limoges, on account of the arrival of the King of Spain, has sent his Aide-de-Camp, Colonel Reille, to relieve the greatest sufferers. The Empress and the Prince Imperial have each contributed 10,000f. The diligence of St. Tropez, which arrived at Toulon on the morning of the 14th, travelled part of the night in the midst of flames. From La Môle to Hyères all the plantations, right and left of the road, were on fire for an extent of five leagues. In some places, where the road was narrow, the passengers and horses were in danger from the Fir trees, which burst with loud explosions under the action of the flames. An imperial decree has been issued for the erection of a new Post-office in Paris. The necessity of this measure is proved by the following details of the objects carried by the Government mails:—The number of letters, 184 millions in 1852, had risen to 290 millions in the year ending 1st January last. In 1852 the number of journals and other printed papers sent by post was 94,863,666; in 1863, it was 212 millions, an increase of 125 per cent. Registered letters, which were only 437,075 in 1852, amounted in 1863 to 2,700,000, an increase of 517 per cent. The number of articles of all kinds conveyed by the mails in 1863 was 590,700,000 against 276,300,741 in 1852, an increase of 113 per cent. in 10 years. The Academy of the Beaux-Arts, at its sitting of Saturday, elected Mr. Benedict, of London, as a corresponding member in the section of musical composition, in the room of the late M. Beaulieu.

SPAIN.—The King of Spain left the Palace of Saint Ildefonse on Sunday afternoon for Paris. His Majesty proceeded direct to Villalba, whence he continued his journey towards the French frontier. On Monday he arrived at St. Sebastian, and attended the fête for the inauguration of the North of Spain Railway. The religious ceremonies having been performed, and the engines having received the benediction, M. Isaac Pereire addressed his Majesty. A banquet followed, at which the King presided, having on his right the Minister of Commerce and M. Emile Pereire, and on his left the Minister of the Interior and M. Isaac Pereire. His Majesty was applauded with enthusiasm, but no toasts were proposed. His Majesty afterwards left for Bordeaux, where he alighted at the Prefecture, and became the guest of Count de Bouville. On Tuesday, the King left for Paris by a special train. The Government have ordered General Prim to quit the capital, in consequence of the general opinion that he was the chief of the malcontents who recently attempted to disturb public tranquillity. The city of Oviedo has been assigned as his residence, dating from the 13th inst. The General left Madrid on Saturday afternoon. He was accompanied by a numerous crowd as far as the railway station. It is asserted that the Minister of Finance intends to propose a modification of the customs tariff with France, which is to be framed in a more liberal sense.

PORTUGAL.—The Federal frigate Niagara has sailed from Lisbon. Her destination is unknown. The Portuguese press considers that the dispute with Spain respecting the slaves captured on the African coast will soon be amicably settled. Great heat, unexampled for many years, prevails, and the grain crops and vines have suffered exceedingly. Election riots have occurred in the provinces.

DENMARK.—The Danish Secretary of Legation, M. de Bille, and Staff-Captain Brahe, arrived at Lubeck from Copenhagen on Thursday, and proceeded on their journey to Vienna. The King has addressed the following proclamation to the Danish army. It is not countersigned by any of the Ministers:—

"The war demands heavy sacrifices, and peace has been purchased at a still heavier cost; but the safety of the country requires peace in place of a continuation of the war. I know that the army was ready to recommence the struggle, but the final result was not in our power, and during the contest a considerable portion of the country, now in the hands of the enemy, would have had to endure oppression which would have entailed ruin. For this reason I have thought it right to endeavour to end the war, even at the sacrifice of portions of territory which have belonged to Denmark from time immemorial. All our hopes of assistance have been deceived, and the superior numbers of the enemy have given him the victory. I have witnessed the courage, valour, and fatigues of the army, and have seen its lofty deeds. I hope it will continue to preserve that affection for the King and the country by which it has hitherto been animated. "CHRISTIAN R."

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.—It is said that Austria and Prussia propose that the Duchies should be administered by a temporary Government composed of three members, one of whom will represent the Federal Diet. The Federal troops will remain in Holstein. A division of the Prussian flotilla, under the command of Captain Jachmann, is making a trial trip in the Schleswig waters of the Baltic. It will touch at Eckernforde and Flensburg. Two Prussian corvettes, with a division of Prussian gunboats, are shortly expected to arrive at Kiel. General Rieben and Captain Henk, two officers of the Prussian Ministry of Marine, have been engaged in inspecting the port during the last few days. The Prussians have prohibited the export from Jutland of the following important articles during the armistice:—Horses, oxen, pigs, bacon, rye, and oats.

SAXONY.—It was announced a few days since that Saxony intended to lay the following proposal before the German Diet—viz., that an explanation be demanded of Austria and Prussia in reference to those Powers having permitted the King of Denmark to cede rights to them to which he himself had no title. It is now stated that Saxony, "yielding to urgent entreaties," will abstain from bringing forward this proposal. The official Dresdner Journal of Friday publishes an article on the present position of the Schleswig-Holstein question, concluding thus:—

"Regarded from the point of view of German right, the great German Powers have acquired precisely as much right to the Duchies by Paragraph 1 of the peace preliminaries as was possessed by Denmark. They could not, therefore, declare the Federal Execution settled."

HANOVER.—In reply to the demand of Prussia respecting the occupation of Lauenburg by Federal troops, the Hanoverian Government has declared that it had no knowledge of the occupation of Lauenburg by Hanoverian troops, and that it was even surprised at such a step. The occupation was ordered by General Haake upon instructions from the Dresden Cabinet.

PRUSSIA.—The semi-official journal states that the intended proposal of Saxony to the Diet in reference to the Duchies has been withdrawn. It had previously, in a menacing article, described the proposal as an insult to the victors. The ratifications of the Zollverein treaties were exchanged in Berlin on Monday between Prussia and those German States which have already agreed to the renewal of these treaties. A Royal decree was published on Friday ordering the disbandment of the following troops:—All the unmobilised infantry of the class entitled to furlough above the number required upon a peace footing, the unmobilised artillery companies called into service from fortresses, and the regiments of Landwehr serving with mobilised troops. Those only of the latter are to be entitled to discharge who do not wish to remain with their colours. Similar orders have been issued with regard to troops of the same category serving in the reserve. The King of Prussia left Gastein for Ischl on Thursday, and will thence proceed to Vienna, to be present at the review. His Majesty will be accompanied by Count von Bismark.

AUSTRIA.—The Emperor of Russia and the King of Prussia are expected to arrive in Vienna on a visit to the Emperor of Austria about the 22d inst., when grand military reviews will take place in their presence. The instructions to M. von Quaade for the opening of peace negotiations were daily expected to arrive from Copenhagen. It is said that the delay in commencing the peace negotiations is only to be attributed to the difficulty experienced in arranging the financial questions between Denmark and the Duchies, which require most extensive preliminary investigation.

SWITZERLAND.—The ascents of Mont Blanc this year have increased in an extraordinary manner; not less than eight occurred in one week. Among the ascensionists were eight Englishmen, four of whom are members of the Alpine Club, a Scotchman, a Spaniard, a Swiss, and an Italian, the latter making the ascent from the Italian side. The ascent to the Grands Mulets has also been performed by three young ladies, the Misses Perkins, belonging to the family of the London brewer. The number of tourists who had arrived at Chamonnix up to the 6th was 3433.

ITALY.—Prince Humbert, son of the King of Italy, was about to visit Paris this week, to be present at the christening of his nephew and godson. It is now announced that as the Queen of Spain has not recognised King Victor Emmanuel as King of Italy, the Prince will not be in Paris during the visit of the King of Spain. His Royal Highness will make a journey through the Rhine provinces during the stay of the Spanish King at the Court of the Tuileries, and will go to Paris when the latter has returned to Spain. Accounts from Rome state that the mother of the Jewish boy Cohen having a few days ago gone to the Asylum of the Catecumeni to claim her son, and having used some strong language on the occasion, was immediately arrested and sent to prison.

POLAND.—Krasicki, Landowski, and Schmidt have been convicted of attempts on the life of General Berg. The first has been hanged, and the sentence of the two latter was commuted after their arrival at the gallows to 20 years' hard labour. Six other persons convicted of complicity in these attempts, have been sentenced some to 12 and others to 15 years' hard labour at the mines.

TURKEY.—Advices from Constantinople to the 9th inst., state that in consequence of the united protest of the American and English Ambassadors, the Porte has authorized the continuance of religious controversy in Protestant books, provided, however, that the Koran is not insulted. The Turkish chiefs who had been converts were to be removed to Karpouth.

INDIA.—By the Overland Mail of the 8th ult. we learn that preparations are making to punish the Rajah of Bhootan for the insults offered to the British Envoy at his Court. An English officer has been despatched to the frontier to gather information respecting the roads and passes into Bhootan, and the sources from which the necessary supplies may be obtained for the troops in certain contingencies. A company has been formed at Calcutta for the construction of docks at Garden Reach. A Juggernaut festival took place in Bengal on the 19th June, when two men and a woman threw themselves under the car and were crushed to death.

CHINA.—General Brown, the Commander-in-Chief in China, had left head-quarters at Hong-Kong for Shanghai in consequence of the prevailing apprehension that the Taepings might recover their lost ground, and threaten the safety of the city. The principal places held by the rebels are Woochow and Nanking; but both are closely invested by the Imperialists.

JAPAN.—The question of opening up the inland sea is still in suspense. A reinforcement of a battalion of English marines has arrived at Yokohama in her Majesty's ship Conqueror, and it is understood that Sir Rutherford Alcock is determined, when backed by a sufficient force, to re-open the inland sea to foreign shipping.

NEW ZEALAND.—No fresh military movements have taken place since the last accounts, but the Maories were hourly expected to attack Wata Wata. The garrison, however, were deemed strong enough for successful resistance. A reconnoitring party from Tauranga, under General Cameron in person, had discovered the Maories at Tepuha busily fortifying their position. Advices from Taranaki stated that the outlying settlers had been compelled by the Maories to abandon their stations and cattle and take refuge in the town. The latter were erecting a pah at Tupuraper, where they awaited reinforcements from Waikato before attacking the town by land and water. The town was consequently greatly excited, and the inhabitants were under arms night and day. It was also asserted that Captain Lloyd's head was still displayed to induce the wavering tribes to join the rebels. The seamen of the Esk, 64 in number, irritated by a statement in the Auckland New Zealander, that Captain Hamilton had been deserted by his men in the attack in which he lost his life, went in a body to the office of the Paper and commenced pulling down the building. The magistrates and other authorities endeavoured to prevent this act of violence, but the men were only appeased by the appearance of a new edition of the Paper withdrawing the charge against the Naval Brigade, and attributing the panic which caused the sudden retreat to a mistake of the 68th Regiment.

UNITED STATES.—General Grant's movement north of the James River was a feint to cover a grand assault upon Petersburg, which was opened at daylight on the 30th ult., by springing a mine under a Confederate earthwork in front of General Burnside's position. Five tons of gunpowder were exploded, carrying the fortification into the air, and burying 250 Confederates in the ruins. The Federal artillery immediately opened along the whole line, amid the fire of which Burnside charged and seized the ruined fort and a portion of the works upon either side. He then attempted to push on to the second line of defences, but was driven back by the terrific fire of the Confederates. A reserve division of negro troops was afterwards thrown forward, and met with a similar fate. The Confederates, then, in their turn, charged and ultimately drove the Federals, white and coloured, mingling in confusion, back to their intrenchments held previous to the assault. General Grant's loss was very heavy, no estimate placing it below 5000, while many carry it as high as 10,000. General Burnside was wounded, and General Bartlett captured. President Lincoln and General Grant met at Fortress Monroe on the following day, and proceeded to Norfolk, on board a steamer, for consultation. In the afternoon Mr. Lincoln returned to Washington, and Grant to his head-quarters. Nothing is yet known of their decisions, but it is rumoured that the whole Potomac army will be immediately transferred to Washington, in anticipation of an advance against that capital by General Lee, at the head of his entire force. On the 21 inst. the wounded in the assault were removed and the dead buried under truce. A Court of Inquiry has been convened to investigate the Federal disaster, and the Government has again prohibited the publication of all military news. The Confederates who invaded Pennsylvania levied a contribution of 500,000 dolls. upon Chambersburg, on the 30th ult. The money not being paid they burnt the greater portion of the town, including all the public buildings. They then moved westward, and it was feared they would attack Bedford: but they ultimately retired from the State. On the 5th inst. they again crossed the Potomac in force, and occupied Hagerstown, in Maryland, and reached Middlesburg on the 6th. They were supposed to be marching on Pittsburg and Cumberland; but it appears that they retired from the State, and were overtaken and defeated at Moorefield in Virginia by General Averil, who captured 600 prisoners and four guns. Governor Curtin of Pennsylvania issued a proclamation on the 5th, calling for 30,000 volunteers to resist the invasion of Pennsylvania. The Confederate General Early's head-quarters are at Martinsburg. All accounts agree that his force numbers upwards of 40,000. Deserters assert that he has been heavily reinforced from Richmond, and that he is establishing a base of operations in the Shenandoah Valley. It is reported, non-officially, from Washington that another engagement occurred at Atlanta on the 27th ult., in which the Confederates were repulsed with much loss. There are counter-rumours that Sherman was defeated. A division of his cavalry, under General M'Cook, while returning from a raid to the rear of Atlanta, has been routed by the Confederates under General Ransom. Out of 3200 of M'Cook's men only 500 have yet reported at Marietta; the remaining 2700 are believed to have been either killed or captured. There were reports that General Forrest was at Atlanta under Hood, while another rumour is that he died at Columbus, Mississippi, on the 22d July, of lockjaw. Admiral Farragut attacked the defences of Mobile on the 27th, passed Fort Morgan, and disabled the Confederate rams. He was approaching the city on the 5th inst.

Mexico.—Advices to the 23d ult. state that the Emperor Maximilian had accepted the surrender of Uruguay.

San Domingo.—The latest news announce that the insurgents were desirous of capitulating.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Atlantic Telegraph Cable.—Her Majesty's surveying steamer, Margaretta Stephenson, returned to St. John's, Newfoundland, on the 6th inst., with Mr. Cyrus W. Field on board. Heart's Content, Trinity Bay, has been selected as a landing place for the Atlantic telegraph cable. The harbour is one of the best in Newfoundland. The Great Eastern can anchor within one mile of the landing place.

St. Stephen's Chapel.—This ancient crypt, which is almost the only portion remaining of the old Palace at Westminster, and formed the basement story of St. Stephen's Chapel, after years of desecration, has been carefully restored as the chapel of the New Palace, and is now one of the most beautiful specimens of ecclesiastical architecture and decoration in the metropolis. The restoration has been carried out according to the design of the late Sir Charles Barry by his son Mr. Edward M. Barry, in whose charge the new palace has been placed since the death of his father in 1860. The stained glass windows, seven in number, represent the ministry and martyrdom of St. Stephen. The walls beneath the windows are covered with alabaster and inlaid marble, disposed in a rich diaper pattern, and the whole of the groining is decorated with arabesques and figures executed on gold grounds. The old bosses have been carefully preserved, and represent the martyrdom of St. Stephen, St. John, St. Catherine, St. Lawrence, and St. George and the Dragon, beautifully executed. The east wall is panelled with deep recessed tracery, with full-length figures on a gold ground. The centre panel is to contain a cross. The other eight panels represent St. Peter, St. Stephen, St. Oswald, St. Ethelrida, St. Edmund, St. Edward the Confessor, St. Margaret of Scotland, and St. Edward the Martyr. All the columns are of polished Purbeck marble.

Experiments at Shoeburyness.—The most important of all the many important experiments at Shoeburyness took place on Tuesday. The 600-pounder Armstrong muzzle-loader was fired, in the presence of the Count de Paris, the Duke de Chartres, the Duke de Montpensier, and the Prince de Joinville, at a floating Warrior target, which had been brought from Sheerness for the purpose. Originally it was intended that it should be fired from 2000 yards, the distance between the new Spithead Forts, but the select committee, in their desire to avoid the disabling the target by a foul shot at so great a distance, moored the target at 500 yards, and reduced the charge of powder from 70 lb. to 51½ lb., to represent the effect at 2000 yards. The first shell missed the target, but penetrated the wood framework, making two inconsiderable holes. The second grazed the head of the upper armour plate, bursting in the wood framework, a large portion of which went into the air in a shower. The third shell, too low for the target, struck the sea in front, and, ricochetting, struck the upper armour plate, passing through it and the backing, practically demolishing the target. On further examination it was found that all that had been said hitherto of the superiority of the guns over armour plates was confirmed. The upper armour plate had dropped from the target with every bolt broken, the backing was penetrated, one of the rear supports injured, and that portion of the target which represented the deck was more or less covered with bolt heads and splinters. In a word the third shell would have arrested the progress of any iron-clad afloat, assuming such iron-clad to have been forcing the Spithead or Needles passage at 2000 yards, and not a man would have survived at the guns. It was the universal opinion that this 600-pounder gun will sink any iron-clad ship that can be built. There is no country but England that has a 600-pounder, and we have only this one at present; but four more have been ordered for this year's delivery. At the conclusion of the firing the Prince de Joinville expressed the gratification with which he had witnessed the interesting experiments.

New Arrivals at the Zoological Gardens.—Mr. F. Buckland has addressed a letter to the Times, stating that Mr. Thompson, the head keeper, has returned from Calcutta, with a large number of rare and valuable animals, presented to the Zoological Society by the Baboo Rajenda Mullick, Mr. A. Grote, and Mr. W. Dunn. They include three young rhinoceroses, one rhinoceros hornbill, two concave cusqued hornbills, green-necked peafowl from Burmah, some very handsome Indian pheasants, besides other smaller birds, and two very large tortoises. One rhinoceros has been sent to the Dublin Society, the other two are in perfect health, though the original rhinoceros is somewhat jealous of the attentions they receive from visitors. The height of the male rhinoceros is 4 feet 3 inches, of the female 4 feet; the length of the male 9 feet 6 inches, of the female 9 feet 4½ inches; the girth of each being about 8 feet. One of the tortoises is a gigantic specimen, its weight being about 150 lb., and its girth 6 feet. It seems very active and lively this warm weather. The large horn bills, which are placed close to the pelicans, are magnificent birds. A little chamois has lately been born in the gardens; it is about the size and shape of a small kid, and, although so young, is nearly as active as its mother. The beaver has a nest of young, one of which came out for the first time into the pond on Saturday last; another having died in the nest some days ago, the parents brought it out and laid it on the bank. On Tuesday week Mr. Hancock and Mr. Bartlett, learning that a fine sturgeon was tethered in the Severn at Tewkesbury, went down to fetch it; with much difficulty and labour they succeeded in bringing it alive as far as Paddington, where it unfortunately died. Its weight was 225 lbs., and it measured no less than 8 feet 9 inches in length. It contained an enormous mass of roe (such as is manufactured into caviare by the Russians), which weighed 42 lbs., and which, as a calculation showed, contained no less than 1,881,600 eggs. The young salmon and trout which were hatched last year in the gardens are doing well, the salmon averaging 5 inches and the great lake trout no less than 8 inches in length.

The Donkey Show.—The Earl of Harrowby presided on Friday at the distribution of the prizes, and was accompanied by the Duchess Dowager of Beaufort, Miss Burdett Coutts, Mr. Charles Buxton, M.P., Mr. Gregson, M.P., Mr. Samuel Gurney, M.P., and other influential persons. His lordship said that the ladies and gentlemen who had given the prizes to the costermongers wished to reward the kindness of the owners who had cared for their animals, in order that those rewards might stand in contrast to the punishment which followed cruelty. He hoped that the awards of that day would do good by making owners of these animals treat their humble and hardworking beasts with patient forbearance. His lordship then gave the first classes of prizes, which were received by the grooms of the noblemen, gentlemen, and ladies to whom they were awarded. The Rev. Thomas Jackson, M.A., then distributed the prizes to the costermongers, each of whom went up to the chair, leading his donkey with him. One man showed a donkey 40 years old, and his lordship was so pleased with the appearance of the animal that he gave the owner an extra prize of a sovereign. Mr. Samuel Gurney then distributed other prizes, which were so awarded that every costermonger exhibitor had at least 5*s.*, and many much more. Cheers were then given for the chairman, for Miss Burdett Coutts, for the gentlemen who had interested themselves in the show, and for the managers. Racing then commenced; and a lesson in cessation from whipping was given by the riders being compelled to race without sticks or whips.

The New Traffic Regulations for the City.—On Thursday morning, at 6 o'clock, the City Police went on duty armed with new powers under the provisions of the recent Act, for the purpose of carrying into practice the regulations of the Court of Aldermen relating to the City traffic, as approved by her Majesty's Secretary of State. The first of these regulations declares that every vehicle licensed for the conveyance of passengers passing through St. Paul's Churchyard to or from London Bridge, or any place over the bridge, shall pass down Cannon Street. This order was carried out by a picked set of men, placed at the south-east corner of St. Paul's Churchyard and the eastern end of Cannon Street; but their services were little needed, as the drivers of the several vehicles were well acquainted with the regulations, and obeyed them accordingly. The change caused Cannon Street to exhibit a very lively appearance, while the overcrowding of Cheapside was entirely prevented, none but the omnibuses to and from London Bridge through Oxford Street and Holborn Hill, &c., being permitted to pass or return that way. It is believed that the regulations will prove of the utmost advantage to the public.

Removal of the Weigh House Chapel.—On Sunday morning the Rev. T. Binney announced the approaching removal of this building, which stands in the way of the Metropolitan District Railway from Blackfriars Bridge to Tower Hill, part of what is called the "inner circle."

THE ROBBERY OF GOVERNMENT CLOTHING.—By direction of the War Department, a court of inquiry, composed of officers of the Royal Artillery, is now engaged in investigating the circumstances connected with the extensive system of robbery discovered at the Royal Military Clothing Stores by non-commissioned officers and gunners of the Royal Artillery, who were employed at the establishment. About one-half of the military cutters are now in custody, including a corporal and nine gunners. They were, in the first instance, ordered to be tried by garrison court-martial, but they will now remain under arrest until the termination of the court of inquiry. Since the discovery of this system of peculation at the military clothing stores, the police at Woolwich received information that a large quantity of Royal Marine clothing would be found at the residence of a pensioner now employed as a dockyard labourer, but who, as a tailor, recently received employment from the department of the Woolwich division of Marines. On Monday evening accordingly they proceeded to No. 3, Elgin Terrace, Woolwich, and found that the house was a complete depot for Royal Marine clothing. A cartload of the property was immediately seized and conveyed to the police station. It comprised two pieces of white cloth used for the manufacture of uniform jackets, several pairs of trousers, cut out but not manufactured, flannel and other shirts, flannel drawers, pieces of calico, silk-braiding, thread, brushes, &c. The man occupying the premises, whose name is Clark, was apprehended and taken before the magistrate at the police court on Tuesday, when the evidence showed that the clothing department allowed the master tailors to retain everything which was left after they had made up the articles for which the materials were supplied. This practice appeared to require further explanation, and the magistrate accordingly remanded the case for the attendance of the officers of the corps, and in the meantime admitted the prisoner to bail.

THE LATE ACCIDENT AT WIMBLEDON.—The inquest on Cooper, the Guardsman, was concluded on Monday, when the Coroner, in summing up, gave a sketch of the history of the National Rifle Association, and called attention to the circumstances under which the shooting took place on the 21st July, and the arrangements made to prevent danger. The first question for the jury to determine was whether Cooper died in consequence of a gunshot wound, and whether it was clear that Roberts, and no one else, fired. If they found in the affirmative on that point, there was the important question of responsibility. If they believed that Roberts disregarded the rules by which he ought to have been guided, it would be their duty to send the matter to a superior court; otherwise, they would acquit Sergeant Roberts by finding that death was caused accidentally. After an hour's absence the jury found a verdict of "Homicide by misadventure," accompanying it with an opinion that Roberts had been careless. He was discharged amid cheers from the assembled public.

THE LATE FIRE AT COLONEL M'MURDO'S.—One of the so-called fire-proof safes has at length been dug out of the ruins, and upon being opened was found not to have secured a single valuable, either of plate or jewellery. A presentation sword, from Lord Ellenborough, with a real Damascus blade, was found melted in two. This sword was made at the time of the Crusades, and was highly prized by the colonel. Another sword, presented by General Sir Charles Napier, has also been found injured in a similar manner, and the whole of the gold appointments and diamonds have been lost. So much value did the colonel attach to the various presentations that he had holes drilled in the bottom of the safes, so as to screw them down to the floor, and the flames entering the apertures destroyed the contents. Had it not been for the drilling of the safes everything might have been secured.

THE INCENDIARY FIRE AT PADDINGTON.—A short time ago the Artesian Saw Mills, at Paddington, were burned to the ground, and a carman employed on the premises, named Boxhall, was apprehended on suspicion of having wilfully caused the fire. There was, however, no evidence to implicate him, and he was discharged. A servant girl, named Cooper, only 12 years of age, has since been taken into custody, and examined at Marylebone Police Court on the charge of being the incendiary. She was in the mills after Boxhall left, and appears to have been the last person there before the fire broke out. The magistrate decided that there is some suspicion against her, and remanded her for a week, but took bail for her appearance in the sum of 100*l*.

ATTEMPT TO DROWN A QUACK DOCTOR.—On Tuesday evening three men were apprehended on the South Hackney side of Victoria Park on the charge of attempting to drown an old man, named Meredith, 67 years of age, a quack doctor, living at 52, Leonard Street, Finsbury. The charge was supported by several persons who witnessed the outrage. At first they thought it was a freak to duck the old man, but on perceiving the prisoners holding him down under the water, they called out for them not to drown him, and finding they would not desist, the bathers and spectators went to the assistance of the old man, who was struggling violently to save himself. The water in the lock where he was thrown in is about 10 feet in depth, and he had a narrow escape from death. It appeared that the young men were in debt to the quack doctor and invited him to the banks of the Regent's Canal, near the spot of Mr. Briggs's murder, under promise of payment. Instead of doing so they pushed him into the water. On being taken into custody they pleaded that they only meant to give him a ducking. The magistrate sentenced two of the prisoners to a fine of 20*s*. each, or a fortnights' imprisonment in the House of Correction. The other who took little part in the outrage, was discharged.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths in London in the week ending on Saturday, the 13th inst., were 1433. The average number in the corresponding week of the 10 years, 1854-63, corrected for increase of population, was 1368. The present return is therefore 65 above the average. During the week the births of 1014 boys and 948 girls, in all 1962 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1832.

Provincial.

BATH.—On Monday, Henry Brine was brought up on remand charged with shooting at his wife, with intent to murder her on Sunday evening, the 7th inst. He admitted shooting her, but not intentionally, and said that she knew that the pistol was procured for another purpose. The magistrates committed him for trial at the assizes. Before leaving the dock he walked some steps to where his wife was sitting, and shook her by the hand.

BIRMINGHAM.—The purchase of Aston Park is nearly on the point of completion. The contract has been signed and sealed by the corporation and the company, and it only remains for the conveyance to be settled for the park to become the property of the town.

CANTERBURY.—The usual hospital sermon was preached at Canterbury Cathedral on the 9th inst., when the collection amounted to 35*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*. The various boxes contributed as follows:—Cathedral, 15*l*. 0*s*. 6*d*.; Assembly Rooms, 3*s*. 3*d*.; Fountain Hotel, 8*s*. 5*d*.; Hospital, 4*l*. 13*s*. 8*d*.; Corn Exchange, 3*d*.

HEREFORD.—The bronze statue, from the cast of Baron Marrochetti, to the memory of the late Sir G. C. Lewis, has arrived in Hereford. The 3d of September is fixed for its inauguration, and Lord Palmerston has promised to deliver the inaugural address. The Chancellor of the Exchequer is also expected to be present. While in Herefordshire Lord Palmerston will be the guest of the Rev. Archer Clive, of Whitfield, brother of Mr. George Clive, M.P.

HERNE BAY.—The Herne Bay, Hampton, and Reculver Fishery Company having carried in the late session of Parliament their Bill for establishing oyster fisheries in the estuary of the Thames, are about to celebrate their triumph by a festive demonstration on Tuesday next the 23d inst. The directors are to assemble at the railway station in procession. They will afterwards dine at the town hall with a number of invited guests. There will also be provided a gratuitous banquet for the poor. There are to be aquatic, athletic and rural sports, with prizes open to all England, bands of music and professional artists, dancing, illuminations and fireworks. Arrangements have been made with the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company, who have consented to issue at all stations on their line on Tuesday tickets available for return on that and the following day. All the entertainments will be free.

HULL.—A tremendous fire took place in this town on Monday. Several valuable warehouses belonging to Messrs. Thompson, M'Kay, & Co., and Messrs. Carver & Co., were consumed in Railway Street; and on Monday night the fire was still raging so furiously that the vessels in the docks were removed. The loss is estimated at 100,000*l*.

LIVERPOOL.—The local papers contain a narrative of fearful sufferings endured by the passengers and crew of a Liverpool vessel called the All Serene, that was capsized in a gale on her voyage from the Sandwich Islands to Sydney. Most of those on board took refuge in the chains, where they managed to make a raft or punt, to which they committed themselves, and for 16 days endured terrible sufferings on the open sea, men dying every day from want and disease. The survivors landed at last on an island in the Fiji group, where the natives, under missionary influence, treated them kindly.

LYNN.—An important meeting of the magistrates of Norfolk and Lincolnshire has been held in this town, for the purpose of defining the boundaries of the two counties in the large tract of land called Wingland. It appeared that the reclaimed land proposed to be divided consisted of about 5000 acres actually brought under cultivation, and above 1000 acres as yet only partially reclaimed. This work of reclamation is part of the original scheme of making a new county, which was to be called Victoria county; and the district, which through the operation of the new Outfall Act, now presents the aspect of highly-cultivated fields, was but a few years ago a dreary waste of alluvial mud, over which each tide passed. The magistrates, having agreed to the boundary line, which gives nearly an equal amount to either county, gave directions for the line to be marked out by stone posts or landmarks. This is but one portion of a very large tract of land that engineering skill is now taking from what has been known as the Wash, but which seems to have been ages back, dry land, as the immense submarine forest stretching across the mouth of the Wash off Hunstanton indicates. Many thousands of acres have also been already reclaimed through the operation of the Norfolk estuary scheme.

MERTHYR.—The scarcity of water is so great at the iron, tinplate, and coal works of South Wales that at many establishments the principal departments are at a complete standstill. Hundreds of hands are in consequence thrown out of employ, and both masters and men are suffering by the drought. The rain of last week brought a supply of water for a day or two, but the reappearance of the scorching heat has caused a second drought, almost severer than the first. As instances of the great loss to trade from want of water it may be mentioned that at several works the makers iron and tin-plates for the last six weeks could have been turned out in one week with an ample supply of water. Even the canals are so short of water that the boats are unable to accomplish their journeys within the usual time.

NORWICH.—It is understood that the Bishop of Norwich has commenced proceedings in the Arches Court against the Rev. C. Drury, rector of Claydon, Suffolk, for having officiated in the "monastery" established by Brother Ignatius in this city.

PLYMOUTH.—The Federal war corvette Sacramento put into the Sound on Tuesday evening, having run down off the Start the Norwegian brig Ceres, from Cadiz, with salt for Elsinore. The brig's crew were saved by the Sacramento, which was not damaged. The brig sunk at the time, but afterwards came up and floated on her beam ends from the cargo melting. A tug has been sent out to bring her in.

READING.—The adjourned inquest on Emma Lee and her three children, who were found drowned in the Thames at Caversham last week, was resumed and concluded on Tuesday. The husband had not been traced, but his brother came up from Tunbridge Wells to attend the inquest. He stated that the parties had lived unhappily for some years, and as he never understood that they were married, he had advised his brother to take the woman to her friends at Reading and sever the connection, which he agreed to do, after arranging with the witness to allow her 10*s*. a week. Several other persons deposed there was nothing in her manner, appearance, or conversation to lead them to the conclusion that she was not in the full possession of all her mental faculties, and that she was not destitute, as a sum of 14*s*. was left by her at her lodgings when she started for Caversham. The Coroner, in summing up, said there was no satisfactory evidence to show that the woman was otherwise than in the full possession of her mental faculties; and there was no evidence either of such destitution as would lead a person rashly to commit such an act as the destruction of herself and offspring. He suggested that they might have been accidentally drowned, perhaps through one of the children falling into the river, and the mother attempting to rescue it. The jury after deliberating a short time returned an open verdict of "Found drowned."

SOUTHAMPTON.—On Saturday evening two lions made their escape from Wombwell's menagerie, which is now exhibiting in this town. One of them was speedily recaptured, but the other made its way into the town and rushed into the sitting room of a house in Havelock Terrace, where the keepers succeeded in securing it by means of ropes, and lodged it in a cage in which it was conveyed to its quarters. During the commotion the wildest excitement was manifested by the other animals, among which is the identical lion which killed a boy a few years since, in the Ratcliffe Highway. It was only a few weeks since that one of the elephants in this menagerie escaped at Devizes, and ran about the town in an infuriated state, but was ultimately secured without doing any injury.—At the borough police-court on Friday, a German seaman named Adolph Björnsen, about 35 years old, was charged with wilfully murdering the captain of the barque Gustave Adolphe, an English registered vessel, on the high seas, on the 21st June. It appeared that the ship left London in the beginning of May for China, and while near Pernambuco the prisoner, who seems to have had no previous quarrel with any one, fired a pistol first at one of the mates, whom he missed, and then at the captain, whom he shot through the head. He then lowered himself into the life boat, and left the ship, none of the rest of the crew daring to molest him. When he had got some distance, when they fired at and struck the boat, and, taking him out of the water, put him in irons. The prisoner's counsel cast doubts on the nationality of the ship to carry the English flag, and the case was adjourned for the production of the register.

SUNDERLAND.—It has been ascertained that the two men who were poisoned on board the barque Ouse, in this port, were killed by arsenic, which the captain kept in an open tea-chest in the ship's store room. The cook, who had no idea that there was any arsenic on board, believed it to be flour, and used it in making pastry for a sea pie. In dismissing the charge recently brought against the cook at Gibraltar, the acting captain of the port animadverted in severe terms on the culpable negligence of the captain, not only in having poison exposed in an open box among his ship's stores, but in having failed to give any caution on the subject to the cook, or even to acquaint him with the fact that there was poison in the store-room.

Tavistock.—The memorial statue erected in the Abbey Yard to the late Duke of Bedford, was uncovered last week in the presence of a large concourse of spectators. The statue, 7 feet high, is of bronze, and is placed on a circular pedestal of granite, 8 feet high. The sculptor was Mr. E. B. Stevens, of London.

Truro.—The water supply in Cornwall has not been so short as it is at present for at least 40 years. The effects of the long-continued drought are assuming a very serious character, and farmers are at their wits' end with respect to the watering of their stock. In some districts several sheep have been lost, and in the western part of the county some horned cattle have been lost, but sheep have thus far been the principal sufferers. The wool also is being much damaged by scurvy, and the price has consequently reached 1*s.* 6½*d.*, and even in some cases 1*s.* 7½*d.* per lb. The stock on hand, which a week or two ago was large, is now very small, and it is believed that prices will advance. The pasturage in the county is exceedingly scanty, and meat and butter are dearer than has been known at this time of the year for a long period. Scores of corn crops are infested with a small and destructive insect, closely resembling the common lice, which is doing considerable damage, and the farmers attribute this attack mainly to the dry hot season. Unless there are some steady showers of rain very shortly, many of the farmers will suffer to an extent by no means inconsiderable. The townspeople have also reason to hope for rain. New wells are being sunk, or old wells sunk deeper, in nearly all the towns in the county, and the different corporations have found it necessary to take the matter of the deficiency of water into their serious consideration. Where there are waterworks the usual supply has been reduced one-third. In one or two instances new reservoirs are constructing.

Tunstall.—A collier, 24 years of age, named Charles Brough, was charged before the magistrate on the 4th inst., with the wilful murder of George Walker, an old man of 74, who, formerly a respectable farmer, and still owning a small property, had for the last two years been living entirely alone in a rude hut on a piece of waste land near Audley. The old man had relatives in good circumstances, who had often urged him to reside with them, but he always refused. He was last seen alive on Wednesday week, when a labourer who had been in the habit of calling upon him, spent the evening in the hut, and promised to call again the next day. When he went on the Thursday evening he found the corpse of the old man lying almost naked in front of the building, dreadfully mutilated. A watch had been stolen from deceased on the night of the murder. On Friday afternoon the prisoner attempted to pawn this watch in Tunstall, and was at once arrested. While in the police cells the same evening he confessed that he was the murderer. He said he had been quarrelling with his father, and on leaving his home went to the hut to get a lodging, but the old man refused to let him in, upon which he picked up a piece of wood, struck deceased with it, took his watch and ran away. When the statement was repeated in evidence, the prisoner merely said it was true, and that he had nothing further to say. He was committed for trial at the next Stafford Assizes.

Uxbridge.—On Thursday, the 11th inst., a fire broke out in a rick of hay at Hay's Farm, Southall, in the occupation of Mr. Wilshin. Before the brigade fire-engines could reach the spot the flames had seized upon two other ricks of hay and clover, and also on the brick and timber buildings used as barns and stores. The flames were not subdued till Friday, by which time they had consumed seven ricks of hay and clover and ten brick and timber structures of great size, and filled with a valuable stock of grain, &c. The dwelling house was saved with its contents. It was at first supposed that the fire was the work of an incendiary, but the agents of the insurance offices have come to the conclusion that it arose from one of the stacks of hay overheating. Such an extensive fire has not happened in the neighbourhood for several years.

Ireland.

The Lord-Lieutenancy.—His Excellency the Earl of Carlisle left Dublin last week for Castle Howard, Malton, where he will remain for some time for the benefit of his health. It is generally believed that his Excellency has left Ireland for the last time, or that if he returns it will only be to bid farewell to the people as Viceroy.

Riot at Belfast.—On Friday morning at 2 o'clock a serious riot broke out in Belfast, when stones, bricks, bludgeons, and even guns were freely used. Before the police could get to the scene of violence, many persons were injured. A nunnery was totally wrecked by the Orangemen. The windows of St. Patrick's Burial Society's house were smashed, and several private houses were similarly treated. During the morning the workers in the factories assembled in the streets, and could not be prevailed upon to retire. A girl was maimed by a blow from a policeman's gun, a man was shot in the leg, and others hurt. In the evening the Roman Catholics in their turn smashed the windows of Dr. Cooke's meeting house and the Wesleyan chapel, while the Orangemen attacked the dwelling of the Roman Catholic bishop. The police at last interfered, and arrested several persons of both parties, and on Saturday and Sunday the town was comparatively tranquil. On Monday the rioting was renewed, and the mob wrecked several houses, including the National School in Brown Street. In the afternoon there was a regular battle between the Orangemen and the navvies, and the disturbed districts were crowded during the day by women, girls, and boys, carrying bludgeons, pitchforks, and other weapons. All the shops were closed at an early hour in the evening, and several persons were shot, one of whom has since died. Five companies of the 84th Regiment arrived from Dublin by the evening train, and prevented any serious collision during the night. On Tuesday, however, the rioting was renewed, all business was suspended, and the houses were closed. Several dreadful conflicts took place during the day between the police and the mob. The police fired upon the people, wounding about 30 persons, two mortally, and killing three. Five hundred navvies challenged the ship carpenters to a pitched battle, and the latter broke into the gunsmiths' shops and armed themselves. They subsequently heard a report that the Dublin coal porters were to arrive in Belfast to help the navvies, and went to the station, where they awaited the evening train in great force, about 1000 strong, and all armed, determined to attack the new comers. The report turned out to be erroneous, but several of the passengers were roughly treated. During the whole day mobs armed with hatchets, knives, pistols, and pitchforks paraded the streets; and about six o'clock a serious collision took place between the ship carpenters and navvies. The latter were forced into the mud-banks in the harbour, and fired upon from the banks of the river, when up to the neck in mud, by the Orange party. Nine or ten received gunshout wounds and one is reported dead. The magistrates swore in a number of special constables, and took possession of all the gunpowder in the shops. The Roman Catholics held a meeting, and appointed a deputation to go to Dublin and require Government to appoint Commissioners to govern the town, as they had no confidence in the magistrates. A subscription for the purchase of fire arms was also set on foot. Some squadrons of dragoons and artillery were sent down in the evening, with Major Esmond, of the constabulary force, who received full powers to quell the disorders at all hazards. 800 constabulary was also ordered to be concentrated on Belfast from eight different counties. On Wednesday morning the riots were renewed with lamentable consequences; great numbers having been maimed or injured with bludgeons, pitchforks, and gunshots. Five more men were taken to the hospital, two of whom are not likely to live. The hospitals are crowded with wounded, and the surgeons were busy all day performing amputations. Reinforcements were despatched almost hourly, and in the course of the day there were upwards of 4000 soldiers in Belfast. 12,000 Protestant operatives marched armed through the town, but without doing violence, and merely as an exhibition of strength. After midnight no serious disturbance occurred. The soldiers, police, and special constables patroled the streets all night. On Thursday a disturbance occurred at the funeral of one of the men who were shot, but it was soon suppressed, and without any casualty. The town is now tranquil.

Disturbances in Londonderry.—The 12th of August was celebrated by the apprentice boys firing cannon, hoisting flags, and marching in procession with sashes, badges, music, and banners. There was a sermon in the Strand Presbyterian Church. After nightfall the apprentice boys marched through the principal streets with torches. There was some fighting afterwards, and one or two persons are said to have been seriously injured.

Disturbances in Dundalk.—On Thursday night party riots broke out in Dundalk, where an immense mob burnt King William in effigy, and then rushed through the streets breaking the windows of the Protestants. The mob also attacked the ragged schools and Methodists' meeting-house, and broke every window in them. A body of troops was sent down at night from Dublin.

The Proposed Dockyard at Queenstown.—At the dinner given last week to the officers of the Channel fleet by the mayor and citizens of Cork, some amusement was caused by the attempts made to extract a promise from the Duke of Somerset on the subject of a Government dock to be constructed at Queenstown. His Grace, however, refused to commit himself, and reminded the meeting that the harbours which had no Government docks, such as Liverpool and Glasgow, were more prosperous than Portsmouth and Plymouth that possessed them, and urged the people to rely on their own exertions rather than on Government aid.

The National League.—On the day after the great demonstration at the laying of the foundation stone of the O'Connell Monument, an extraordinary meeting of "the Irish National League," was held for the purpose of conferring with the members of the association from the country who had come to Dublin ostensibly to take part in that display. This meeting was intended to be the formal inauguration of a revival of the "Young Ireland" agitation, the avowed object which is the dismemberment of the kingdom by force, whenever they shall think themselves strong enough to make the attempt.

The Derryveagh Murder.—The second trial of Francis Bradley for the Derryveagh murder took place at the late assizes. It will be remembered that Adam Grierson, steward of Mr. Adair, a landed proprietor in Donegal, was murdered on the 10th of April, 1863. A number of tenants had been evicted, and among them the prisoner's father. Grierson had superintended the evictions, and had, of course, incurred the hatred of the peasantry. He was about to emigrate to New Zealand on the 11th April, but on the evening before, as he returned to his house, after visiting a friend, he was shot from a limekiln. He was mortally wounded, but was able to go home, when he immediately told his wife that the prisoner was the man that fired at him. He afterwards made a dying declaration to the same effect, and was able to identify him among five or six others brought for his inspection. The prisoner was tried 12 months ago but the jury disagreed. At the spring assizes the trial was postponed, owing to the absence of a material witness, a woman who was confined of twins just at the time. The trial at length came on at the recent assizes, and after lasting two days again proved abortive, the jury, who had been locked up all night, stating that there was no chance of their agreeing to a verdict. They were then discharged, and the prisoner will be arraigned for the third time at the next assizes. It was expected that he would be immediately re-tried by another jury, but the Crown prosecutors decided on postponing the trial. An application to liberate him on bail was refused, and he was again consigned to prison.

Scotland.

The Yelverton Case.—An action for damages, stated at 3000*l.*, has been brought in Scotland by Mrs. Teresa Yelverton against the Saturday Review for an article published in that journal on Saturday, July 30.

The Scotch Sunday.—On Saturday week her Majesty's ship Salamis steamed up to Invergordon, at a late hour in the evening with the Commissioners on Fisheries, and left again early on Monday morning. The officers in command were desirous of obtaining supplies of provisions on Sunday; but the merchants declined to execute the orders on the Sabbath day. On this it was answered that the supplies would be got elsewhere, and the Salamis, after lying in the harbour 36 hours, took her departure on Monday morning too early for getting stores on board.

Mr. Hugh Miller.—It is stated that the family of Mr. Hugh Miller have resolved to put in complete repair the humble cottage in Cromarty in which he first saw the light. A neat railing is to be erected in front of the building. The cottage stands near the base of the handsome pillar, surmounted by a statue of Hugh Miller, which was erected to his memory by friends and admirers.

Railways.

Railway Accidents and their Causes.—In the year 1861 79 passengers were killed and 789 injured by railway accidents in the United Kingdom; in the year 1862, on an increased number of lines, 35 passengers were killed and 536 injured; and in the year 1863, on a still increasing length of line, 35 passengers were killed and 401 injured. The number of passengers in 1863 was 204,635,075 without including 64,391 season and periodical ticket holders. Estimating even that these last travelled on an average only 100 times each, the number of passengers killed in 1863 was less than one in 6,000,000, and of passengers injured less than one in 500,000. Of every five passengers killed three lost their lives through their own misconduct or want of caution, so that the number of passengers killed from causes beyond their own control was less than one passenger in 15,000,000. Of the passengers killed last year 12 met their death by getting out of or attempting to get into trains when in motion, five by incautiously crossing or standing on the line at a station, one by leaning out of the carriage window on approaching a bridge (since widened), one by getting out on the wrong side of a carriage, one (in Ireland) by getting on the roof of a carriage and walking along the train. Of the 13 passengers killed in 1863 from accidents to trains, three lost their lives through collisions between trains, and 10 from the trains getting off the line, 7 of the 10 in the accident on the Hunstanton line caused by a heifer being on the rails. Of the whole number of accidents to passenger trains in the United Kingdom reported to the Board of Trade in 1863—52 in all, exactly one a week, and precisely the same number as were reported to the board in 1862—32 were caused by collisions with other trains, 10 by the trains getting off the rails, six by their running off the proper line through the points being wrong, and only four from anything breaking or getting out of order. A large proportion of these accidents must have been preventible by careful management.

Great Eastern City Extension.—By the Extension Act, which has just become law, the Great Eastern Company undertake to run a train from Edmonton and Walthamstow to the Liverpool Street Station every morning before 7 o'clock, and back again every evening at 6 o'clock, as may be most convenient for artisans, mechanics and labourers, at a charge not above 1*d.* per journey, but they are not to be compelled to issue such tickets for a less period than one week, nor without reasonable satisfaction that the applicants are of the working class, for which they may demand name and address both of applicant and employer, and in case of accident the company are not to be liable to any claim for compensation for injury to passengers beyond 100*l.*

THE METROPOLITAN EXTENSION TO FINSBURY.—Rapid progress is now making in the settlements for property, and the clearing of the ground for this extension. The contractor has full possession of all the ground as far as Aldersgate Street, with the exception of two blocks of buildings, which are advertised for sale and clearance in a few days. The principal station will be erected in Aldersgate Street, between the corner of Long Lane and Carthusian Street. Four lines of rail, two narrow and two broad guage, will be reached by a flight of stairs, on either side of the intended station. The foundations are now in progress for the bridge which will cross the line at Charterhouse Street into the square.

METROPOLITAN INNER CIRCLE.—The line sanctioned by Lord Stanley's committee will commence by a double junction with the West London Extension between the Richmond Road and Kensington, and passing through Earl's Court, will form a connection with the Metropolitan Extension Railway at High Street, Kensington, where there will be an exchange station, and by another fork will turn to the south to Glocester Road, where another exchange station will be made, and thence will continue parallel to the Metropolitan Extension to Alfred Place, West Brompton, where the terminal station of the Metropolitan Extension is intended to be made. By these junctions and the exchange stations, opportunities will be given to all the railways to find their way to the West London Extension, the London and North Western, the Great Western, the Brighton, and the London and South Western, to communicate with the inner circle, and distribute, exchange, and receive their traffic from it. The first station will be in Sloane Square. The line will pass to the south of Thurloe Square and thence across the Fulham Road, and across a number of secondary streets to Cadogan Terrace, at which point the Metropolitan Grand Union Line down to the Victoria Station is adopted, as it avoids a good deal of opposition from the district of Chester Square and other places. At the Victoria Station the Metropolitan District Line is adopted for a short distance, then the Grand Union proposed line, for the purpose of avoiding passing down Victoria Street, to which great objection was made. By taking this line, and running down Tothill Street, and widening it from a 30-feet street to a 60-feet street, a great public improvement will be accomplished. At the Westminster Hospital the District Railway is taken, and from that point eastward it alone is adopted. It is proposed to form a station at the Victoria Station, taking a clump of houses between the Station and Shaftesbury Terrace. At Westminster a station will be formed between Bridge Street and the Thames Embankment. From Westminster the line will go through the embankment to Charing Cross. It will pass under one of the openings of the bridge, and not interfere with the Charing Cross Railway in any way. There will be another local station at Blackfriars, and an exchange station with the London, Chatham, and Dover, which will intersect it there. From Blackfriars the line will follow the route of the new Street, called New Earl Street, and along that street up to very nearly the point where that new street joins Cannon Street. Then it will diverge and run parallel to Cannon Street, to the station of the Charing Cross Railway. The line will pass 10 feet below the level of their rails. So far the line will be kept through an inferior class of property. At Trinity Square the line will run into the station of the Metropolitan Extension, which has also passed this committee, and will thus entirely complete the inner circle. All the questions affecting sewers and works under the control of the Metropolitan Board of Works have been agreed upon. There is only the question of compensation to be paid. The length of the line will be 7¼ miles. The total area of the property required will be about 27 acres, the total number of buildings permanently removed will be 234, and the total number of buildings interfered with 808. The quantity of property permanently retained in the city will be less than an acre.

EXPLOSION OF A LOCOMOTIVE AT CAMDEN TOWN.—A fatal accident occurred on Tuesday morning at the Camden Road Station of the North London Railway. As the express train for Fenchurch Street was about to start, the boiler of the engine suddenly exploded, throwing the engine bodily into the street below. Fortunately no one was passing at the time, but the stoker was so severely injured that he died in the course of the night.

ACCIDENT AT BRIGHTON STATION.—An alarming accident took place on Tuesday morning at Brighton. The goods station is several feet below the main line, and the goods waggons are lowered down the incline by an engine. This process was going on on Tuesday, when the weight of the train, which was an unusually heavy one, broke the coupling chain of the engine, when the train dashed through the station, knocked down the outer wall, and rushed across the street, where it was stopped by a house, which suffered severely from the collision. Fortunately the people in the street heard the noise of the descending train and managed to get out of the way.

Law.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT: LEEDS.—The Sheffield Murder.—Joseph Myers, a saw grinder, was indicted for the wilful murder of his wife. He was evidently very weak, breathed heavily, and suffered from a slight cough. In a weak voice he pleaded not guilty to the indictment. The prisoner had been married for some years, and lived with his wife at Sheffield. He was about 43 years of age, and deceased was about a year older. They had several children, but at the period in question only two of them resided with them. On the 10th June, deceased went down stairs, dressed, with the exception of one boot. Shortly afterwards her husband went down with the boot in his hand, and threw it at her feet. Deceased made use of an expression to the effect that if he did not like it he might put the boot down his throat, and this appeared to be the only angry expression made use of by her. Nothing further was then said, and the prisoner went out. Shortly afterwards he returned and was seen to stab his wife rapidly two or three times. A neighbour, attracted by the cries and the scuffle, ran to the assistance of the wife, and found that she was bleeding from the throat and face, and that the prisoner was cutting his own throat with a table knife. The deceased died in a few minutes. The prisoner was taken to the Infirmary, where he recovered sufficiently to be now put upon trial. The jury after consulting together for about three minutes, found the prisoner Guilty. The prisoner having been asked in the usual form whether he had anything to say why sentence of death should not be passed, replied, "I was drunk the night before. I had had a quart of ale the morning I committed the deed. My wife said she would throw my bond up, and have me committed to prison. I did not know what I was doing or I should not have killed her." Mr. Justice Keating passed sentence of Death in a most impressive manner, and the prisoner was removed, apparently little affected by his position. The Huddersfield Murder.—Joseph Haigh, aged 38, cotton twister, was indicted for the wilful murder of Joseph Pogson, at Huddersfield, on the 7th of May last. It appeared from the evidence of the daughter of the prisoner that she, her father, mother, and sister, and also the deceased, who was her uncle, lived together in the prisoner's house. Between 3 and 4 o'clock on the morning of the 7th May she was awoke by a noise caused by her mother coming into her room and trying to shut the door in her father's face, who burst it in. She and her mother and sister tried to restrain him, when the uncle came in. Her father then broke away, laid hold of deceased, struck him down, and trampled on him. The witness then ran away and gave the alarm. When Thomas Haigh, the prisoner's brother, who lived close by, arrived he found deceased lying on the hearthstone insensible, and bleeding from the ears and mouth. The prisoner had then nothing on but his shirt. His feet were bare, but both legs and feet were splashed with blood. Deceased, whose skull was fractured, died between 8 and 9 that morning. It appeared that the prisoner was suffering from extreme depression and melancholy, and believed that his family were conspiring against him. When young he had received a severe wound in the head from some machinery. The jury after this evidence Acquitted the prisoner on the ground of insanity, and he was ordered to be detained during her Majesty's pleasure. Attempted Murder.—William Wingfield was indicted for shooting at Mary Birkinshaw, with intent to murder her. The prisoner was until lately a wheelwright at Brodsworth, near Doncaster, and the prosecutrix was his housekeeper. He had been for some time courting her, and had presented her with a ring, and asked her to marry him. In the beginning of this year, however, in consequence of his idle, dissolute habits, she had returned the ring, and refused to have anything more to do with him. About the 18th of April the prisoner became bankrupt. At that time a sum of 8*l.* was due to the prosecutrix for wages, and on the 28th of April she walked over to Doncaster to prove her claim. On the following day the prisoner called upon her at her mother's house, and asked her if she would have him, which she again refused to do. He next requested her to give him a kiss, and on her refusing that also asked her if she was ready to die. On her replying that she was not, he fastened the door with two small wooden wedges. She became much frightened, and threw her arms round him from behind over his arms, upon which he took a double-barrelled pistol out of his pocket and fired it at her over his left shoulder. He also attempted to discharge the other barrel, but it missed fire. The powder from the first discharge singed the prosecutrix's hair, whereupon she fell down, and the prisoner began to beat her on the head with the butt of his pistol. He then left off beating her for a moment, and appeared to be feeling in his pocket for another cap. The girl took advantage of the opportunity to jump up and run out of the room into the street. The prisoner followed her, and she then ran back into the house and endeavoured to shut the door upon him. A man named Wilson, who was passing, tried to stop the prisoner, who thereupon presented the pistol in his face and pulled the trigger. Fortunately, the cap again missed fire, but the prisoner made off, and succeeded in getting into the house after the prosecutrix, and was soon afterwards secured. The undischarged barrel of the pistol was found to be loaded with powder and ball, and the bullet fired from the discharged barrel was afterwards found in the room in which the pistol was fired. He was found Guilty of shooting at the prosecutrix with intent to do her grievous bodily harm, and was sentenced to 10 years' penal servitude. The Rotherham Murder.—James Sargisson, aged 20, labourer, was indicted for the Wilful Murder of John Cooper, at Laughten-en-le-Morthen near Rotherham, on the 9th of April. The deceased was a tall young man, 26 years old, and a gardener, who for some time had been in the employment of Messrs. Fisher & Holmes, nurserymen, at Handsworth, near Sheffield. His parents lived at Stone, 15 miles distant, and on the day in question he started from Handsworth to visit them. Between 9 and 10 o'clock that night he arrived at a place called Brook House, and repaired to a public house, where the prisoner and other persons were playing at dominoes. The prisoner then was dressed in drab clothes, and the deceased in dark clothes. The deceased had two bundles, one in a handkerchief and the other in paper, and a walking stick. In the conversation which passed among the company the time of night was talked about, and deceased showed his watch in order to tell the company the Sheffield time. After getting some refreshment he went away, and immediately before or after him the prisoner left the public-house. At that time a boy in the road noticed a man in light clothes standing opposite the public-house, as if watching, and shortly after a man in dark clothes, with two bundles and a walking-stick, was seen to walk down the road towards Abbey Lane. The man in light clothes, who was a smaller man than the other, was seen following on the opposite side of the road, where there was no footpath. The deceased never reached his friend's house, but on the following morning his body was found in Abbey Lane in a pool of blood, with a great hedge-stake lying by his side, on which was human blood and hair. Two bundles and a walking stick were also found close by. His hat was off, waistcoat open, and every pocket turned inside out with the exception of one, in which were some small things. A post-mortem examination proved that death had resulted from blows in front and at the back of the head, which was almost reduced to a state of pulp. There were also injuries on the eyes and hands. Suspicion attached to the prisoner, who made two or three different statements, ending in a confession that he was present when the murder was committed, but that the blow was struck by another person. The property of the deceased was found in prisoner's possession. The jury, after two minutes' consultation, pronounced a verdict of Guilty, and Mr. Justice Keating, in a very solemn and emphatic manner, passed sentence of death. The prisoner protested his innocence. The Rastrick Murder.—Mary Ann Dyson was indicted for the wilful murder of her two children, at Rastrick, near Halifax. The prisoner, 33 years of age, was the wife of a labourer living at Rastrick, and had always been an affectionate mother, but latterly she had shown signs of mental derangement, and it was proved that two of her brothers and sisters had died of water on the brain. After retiring for 30 minutes the jury acquitted the prisoner on the ground of insanity, and she was ordered to be confined during her Majesty's pleasure.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT: LIVERPOOL.—Confederate Enlistments.—Messrs. John Jones and Robert Highat, merchants and shipping dealers, carrying on business in Chapel Street, Liverpool, were charged, at the instance of Government, with having equipped and endeavoured to enlist, a number of seamen and others for the service of the Confederate navy, contrary to the terms of her Majesty's proclamation of neutrality. The prosecution was laid under the 59th George III., c. 69, sec. 2. It appeared that a steamer had been built in the Clyde, and registered in the name of Thomas Bold, a partner of the two defendants, as an expedient of a fictitious name and destination that might be used in the instance of El Tousson and El Mouassir was adopted. The steamer was called the Japan; and was built to be designed for the China trade; the men were engaged for a voyage to the Chinese waters at the Sailors' Home in Liverpool; and in March, 1863, the Japan steamed down the river ostensibly on a trial trip, from which of course she never returned. Mr. Jones, one of the defendants, was on board her, and she made for the French coast. Off Brest she was boarded by a small steamer, from which she received guns and ammunition; her name was changed to the Georgia, and Lieutenant Maury then appeared on deck in Confederate uniform and hoisted the Confederate flag. The men who were just before engaged for China were ordered into the cabin, where Lieutenant Maury offered them 4*l.* a month, and 10*l.* bounty, on condition of their enlisting for the Confederate service; and 25 of the crew at once consented to do so. After a cruise to the Cape and elsewhere, in the course of which several Federal vessels were boarded and searched, the Georgia returned into French waters; and one of the enlisting sailors, Francis Glassbrook, or Rivers, who could be admitted that he had gone by a variety of names, and was the principal witness for the prosecution, found himself again in Liverpool. There he was tracked out by one Maguire, a detective in the employment of the American Consul, who was the real author of this prosecution. While Messrs. Jones and Highat were again enlisting him for another cruise in the Georgia, then at Cherbourg, Maguire took him to the American Consul, who offered him the alternative of the same pay if he would accept the less arduous service of walking about Liverpool and remaining within call. Accordingly, he accepted both services, went down to the Havre steamer at Liverpool docks, took the 3*l.* promised him by the Confederates, and then immediately returned to the American Consulate. The Federal authorities had then of course the evidence in their own hands; and Messrs. Jones and Highat were accordingly prosecuted on the charge of violating the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act. The defence was that there was no case, as the enlistment, if any, was not in the British dominions, having been at Bass', outside the three miles, not within the meaning of the Act, which was directed against enlistments in British ports. The Lord Chief Justice overruled the objection, but consented to take a verdict. The jury then returned a verdict of Guilty on all the counts. Judgment was deferred, pending the case being taken to the Court of Queen's Bench on the objection raised.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT: Child Murder.—Mary Hewes, 29, a good-looking young woman, was indicted for the wilful murder of Henry Bowen, her illegitimate child. The prisoner, who was an unmarried woman, was admitted into the Clerkenwell workhouse on the 16th July almost in a state of labour, and was shortly afterwards delivered of the child, which appeared to be healthy, and continued to be so until Saturday the 30th July, on which day she left the workhouse at 10 o'clock in the morning, taking the child with her. On the same morning the prisoner went into a public house in Gray's Inn Road, having with her a brown paper parcel, and told the servant that she wished to be left alone, as she desired to arrange some portion of her dress. Soon after this, she rang for some gin and water which she had ordered, and left the house, and on the servant going into the room where the prisoner had been, she saw some marks of soot on the fire-place, and having only recently cleaned it this excited suspicion, and she obtained some assistance, and a man put his hand up the chimney and took from thence a parcel, which was found to contain the dead body of a child. The prisoner was followed, and taken into custody by a police constable, and on his asking whether the child was dead, she said it was, and added that she was sorry she had done it, and wished she had taken the child to the workhouse, and that it buried. A letter written by the prisoner on the evening before she left the workhouse, to a friend who had visited her child, telling her that her child was also dead, though it was then alive and well, was produced, as showing the intention to destroy it, and the medical evidence proved that death was caused by suffocation. The jury, after a long consultation, returned a verdict of Guilty, but strongly recommended her to mercy, on the ground that she had been a good mother to the child down to the period of her leaving the workhouse. The prisoner was then called upon in the usual form to state whether she had anything to urge why sentence of death should not be passed upon her. She appeared to be almost unaware of what was passing, and after a short interval she sobbed out, "I am not guilty." Mr. Justice Byles then put on the black cap, and addressed the prisoner, said that the jury, after most anxious deliberation, had arrived at the conclusion that she had committed the crime of wilful murder. They had accompanied that verdict with a recommendation to mercy, and all he could say was that he would take care that this recommendation was forwarded to the proper quarter. His lordship then passed sentence of Death in the usual form, and the prisoner was carried from the dock in an almost insensible state. Frauds.—Emile Werner, a respectable-looking man, aged 29, and by profession an agent, surrendered in his bail to answer an indictment charging him and [illegible] unlawfully conspiring with Gustave Lhermet and [illegible] Flatow, and by false pretences obtaining from [illegible] Tancs Armero and others, his partners, [illegible] quantities of silk and other goods to the value of [illegible] with intent to defraud. At the last session Lhermet and Flatow pleaded guilty to the indictment, and sentence upon them was respited to the present session. The [illegible] Werner pleaded not guilty, and was remanded on bail to this day. It appeared that the prosecutors are bankers and general merchants in the Rue d'Enter, in Paris, and [illegible] defendant had in May last year been engaged by them to open a branch establishment in London, as their agent, at a salary equal to 200*l.* per annum, with a certain commission on the sales he effected. He had extensive opportunities put into his hands by the prosecutor, and availing himself of those opportunities he effected ostensible sales of the goods to the amount of between 30,000*l.* and 40,000*l.* He was now charged with having combined and conspired with the other prisoners to let them have goods for which the assumed purchasers never intended to pay, except at a ruinous price, and that they divided the booty between them. The evidence was necessarily of great length, and the trial lasted two days, ending in a verdict of Guilty. The three prisoners were brought up for sentence together, and were each sentenced to two years' imprisonment with hard labour, and further to pay a fine of £ each to the use of her Majesty, and be further imprisoned until such fine be paid. Manslaughter.—Mary Blake, 30, a miserable looking creature, was charged with the manslaughter of her child. This was a case of a very distressing character, there being a second indictment against her for causing the death of another of her children, by gross inhumanity and neglect. It appeared that she was a married woman but her husband was convicted of some offence at the Clerkenwell Sessions in April last, and sentenced to penal servitude, and the prisoner had since taken up with another man. On the 22d of June she took up her abode with her six children in a room in Peartree Court, where she left the children almost entirely alone for three days and nights, and when the persons living in the house who were attracted by the cries of the children went into the room they discovered them in the most wretched condition, with nothing in the room but some bread and water, and the deceased infant had a piece of dirty rag in its mouth in which was wrapped up a small quantity of sugar. The whole family were removed to the workhouse, where every attention was paid to them, but two of them died shortly afterwards, and under these circumstances the present charge was preferred. The defence was that the unhappy event was more to be attributed to the state of misery and destitution in which the prisoner was placed, than to any culpable neglect on her part. The jury, after a short deliberation, found her Guilty, but strongly recommended her to mercy on account of the painful circumstances in which she was placed. The prisoner was sentenced to nine months' hard labour, his lordship observing that the sentence would have been much severer but for the recommendation of the jury. Threatening Letters.—Edward Pace, aged 22, was charged with threatening to kill Sir George Grey, and also with sending a threatening letter to Dr. Besley. It was proved that the prisoner was under a delusion that he was the Prince of Wales. The jury found a verdict of unsound mind, and the judge directed him to be kept in custody during her Majesty's pleasure.

He was born in 1795, and was the eldest son of Mr. Alexander Laurence Bruce, of Kennet, whose ancestors had possessed that estate since the early part of the 14th century, the original grant being made by King David Bruce, by a royal charter in 1359, "to his beloved and faithful cousin" Sir Robert de Bruce, Knt. Mr. Bruce was educated at Eton and St. Andrews, and at the age of 18 entered the Grenadier Guards, with which he served at Waterloo. In political opinions he was a Tory, and as such represented the county for several years prior to the passing of the Reform Bill. He was an unsuccessful candidate for the county in 1832, and again in 1835. He married the daughter of Sir James Fergusson, and leaves an only son, now in his 15th year.

Miss Katherine Southey died at Lairthwaite Cottage, Keswick, on the 12th inst. She was the third and only unmarried daughter of the poet, and was the last living link connecting the name of Southey with Keswick, more than 50 years having elapsed since the late Laureate fixed his residence in the lake metropolis. She was born at Greta Hall, and reached her 58th year on the Monday before her death, which was caused by congestion of the brain. By her death a civil list pension of 100*l.* per annum reverts to the Crown. She was buried on Tuesday in Crosthwaite churchyard, under the shade of Skiddaw, where already repose her father and mother, her brother Herbert, the eldest-born, and her sisters Emma and Isabel.

Mr. Alexander Hastie, formerly M.P. for Glasgow, died on the 13th inst., at Luskar House, Dunfermline, from an attack of paralysis, in his 60th year. Shortly before his illness he purchased the estate of Luskar for the sum of 70,000*l.* or 75,000*l.* Some time was necessary to prepare it for the residence of himself and family, and on the 11th he left Glasgow to enter upon its occupation. The announcement of his death only two days afterwards therefore came upon his friends in Glasgow somewhat suddenly. Mr. Hastie has left a widow, the daughter of Mr. Napier of Shandon, and two daughters, 9 and 6 years of age. For many years he occupied a prominent place in the political and commercial history of Glasgow. He was the principal partner of the East India firm of Robert Hastie and Company, was president of the Chamber of Commerce, and one of the Clyde trustees. He was apprenticed at an early age to a copperplate engraver in London, but exchanged the blocks for the boards. Originally an obscure actor at the Grecian Theatre, he started into general celebrity almost immediately after his appearance at the Olympic in 1853, when his singularly original acting in two burlesques at once made him a subject of town talk. The Olympic was at that time under the management of Mr. Farren, but when it passed into the hands of Mr. Alfred Wigan, Mr. Robson still remained one of the company, and displayed a new talent as the representative of those characters in domestic drama that combine the comic with the pathetic. After the secession of Mr. Wigan he became manager of the Olympic conjointly with Mr. Emden, nor has he ever been a regular actor at any other theatre since his first appearance in 1853.

Dr. Cureton, Canon of Westminster, 16,000*l.*

Miscellaneous.

Public Pensions.—The public annuity and pension list naturally changes more or less with every year. The finance accounts recently issued for the year ending with March, 1864, introduce for the first time the names of the Prince and Princess of Wales for their respective annuities of 40,000*l.* and 10,000*l.* a year. The other royal annuities remain the same as before; for the House of Cambridge, 24,000*l.*; the Princess of Prussia, 8000*l.*; the Princess Louis, 6000*l.* The perpetual pensions, of course, remain the same, the heirs of William Penn heading the list with their 4000*l.* a year, to be paid as long as time and the Treasury shall last. The grant to the Canning family disappears from the list, and so does the retiring pension of Lord Lyndhurst; but there still remain four English ex-chancellors receiving their 5000*l.* a year, and there are two Irish ex-chancellors, four English retired judges, and a vice-chancellor. A retired Irish judge, Mr. Justice Crampton, has disappeared from the list; but time still spares the housemaid of the Irish House of Lords, to receive her pension. From the list of retired county court judges, Mr. E. Cooke has disappeared, but two new names are added—Mr. Serjeant Manning and Mr. W. Walker, The diplomatic pension list has received two new names, Sir J. Hudson and Mr. Christie. The compensation annuities make a long list. Prominent in it by magnitude of amount stands one peer receiving 7700*l.* a year, as formerly chief clerk of the Court of Queen's Bench; and another 4200*l.* as once registrar of the Irish Chancery; and there is a reverend pensioner with 4028*l.* a year, as formerly Clerk of the Hanapers, and 7352*l.* a year as once patentee of bankruptcy.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

Monday, Aug. 15.

The number of Beasts is smaller than on Monday last, yet it is large. The average quality is again very middling, consequently choice kinds fully maintain late rates. Trade is dull for inferior, and several remain unsold. The supply of Sheep and Lambs is about the same as last week. There is a fair demand for them at late prices. Trade for Calves is the same as on Thursday. From Germany and Holland there are 2430 Beasts, 10,210 Sheep, 304 Calves, and 50 Pigs; from Spain, 196 Beasts; from Ireland, 190; and 2960 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, Aug. 18.

Our supply of Beasts is rather shorter, and choice qualities are scarce; they are consequently readily disposed of at fully Monday's quotations. The number of Sheep and Lambs is about the same as of late. Trade is slow for them, and prices on the average scarcely as good. There is no alteration in the trade for Calves. Our foreign supply consists of 670 Beasts, 4060 Sheep, and 469 Calves. Milch Cows, 100.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Aug. 15.

There was only a moderate supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market, which consisted chiefly of the new crop, the quality of which was generally good, and the prices realised were 40s. to 43s. per qr. for red, and 44s. to 47s. per qr. for white; the few transactions in old English and foreign were at a decline of 1s. per qr. from the rates of this day se'nnight. Of new Barley there were several samples shown, which were mostly hard and white; 36s. was paid for good malting, grinding qualities were rather easier. Beans and Peas brought fully late rates. The Oat trade was steady, and in some instances Russian were sold at a trifle under the prices of this day week. Flour was unaltered in value.

Flour—English, including Railways, 9,840 sks.; Scotch, —; Irish, — sks.; Foreign, 7,866 brls, 50 sacks.

FRIDAY, Aug. 19.

Excepting a few cold nights the weather since the 12th inst. continued dry and warm, favouring harvest operations, which are progressing very rapidly, many fields being already cleared in the South of England. Great inactivity prevailed during last week in the Wheat trade throughout the whole kingdom, and although no general decline has taken place, the tendency of prices was towards greater ease; at Liverpool 6d. to 1s. per qr. less money has been accepted to effect sales. Flour barely maintained its value. Spring Corn of all descriptions brings late rates, Beans and Peas being in several markets the turn dearer, owing to their scarcity. Since Friday last 105 vessels have been reported off the coast. The floating trade has been very active for Maize, and there is a good demand at improving prices for this article as well as for Barley and Linseed. Wheat has been neglected, and sales can only be effected at considerably lower rates. Paris, Aug. 18.—A moderate business has been done in Flour, and after having been a little lower, prices close about 1s. per 280 lbs. under last week's rates. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 32s. 3d. per 280 lbs. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 29,700 cwts. The Wheat trade continues slow at a reduction of 9d. to 1s. 3d. per 480 lbs. The arrivals of English grain and foreign Wheat and Barley since Monday have been short, but good of foreign Oats. There was a moderate attendance at this morning's market; the few samples of new English Wheat fresh up were taken at the extreme prices of Monday last, but old and foreign were neglected. Spring Corn of all descriptions was steady in value, excepting Russian Oats, which brought rather more money.

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 16.—With only a very small attendance of buyers at this morning's market the business passing in Wheat has been of the most retail character, and we have to quote prices the turn lower than on Friday last. Flour is very dull, but holders do not press sales. Indian Corn meets a more extended inquiry for consumption, and prime mixed American brings full prices; round qualities being more plentiful, are rather cheaper. Oats and Oatmeal are without alteration. Beans fully as dear. Peas, on the contrary, are a shade easier. Market closes very inactive.

FRIDAY, Aug. 19.—The market fairly attended. Wheat sold more readily at the late decline. Flour quiet, without change in price. Indian Corn rather easier; mixed 30s. Beans steady. Oats and Oatmeal quiet.

News of the Week.

A telegram from Vienna states that an interview took place on Monday in that city between the Prime Ministers of Prussia and Austria, Count Von Bismarck and Count Rechberg. Nothing official has transpired as to the results of this interview, but the Paris papers assert that a complete understanding has been established between the two Powers; that the Austrian Government no longer disapproves the policy of Prussia in favour of the Grand Duke of Oldenburg; and that Prussia will not quit the Duchies without territorial, political, and military compensations. As these arrangements are at direct variance with the views of the smaller German States in promoting the original aggression upon Denmark, no surprise has been created by the official announcement that Wurtemberg intends to propose in the Federal Diet that the minor States, with Bavaria at their head, shall form a third power in the Confederation, to counteract the domination of Austria and Prussia.

A treasonable conspiracy for the purpose of detaching the Italian Tyrol from the Austrian Empire has been discovered in that territory, and has been followed by several arrests at Trent, Pergine, Roveredo, Riva, Mori, and other places in the Tyrol and the Venetian provinces.

A serious disturbance took place on Monday in Geneva, in consequence of the Radical Committee having annulled the election of the Conservative candidate to the Council of State. The inhabitants of the Faubourg St. Gervais armed themselves, and a conflict ensued, in which eight persons were killed and 15 wounded. The authorities of the Canton being unable to deal with the rioters, Federal intervention was called in, and a battalion of Federal militia entered the city for the purpose of quelling the commotion, if necessary, by military power. The latest news states that tranquillity has been restored, and that the Grand Council of Geneva has decided to submit the affair of the late election to the judgment of the Federal Council.

An Imperial ukase has been issued at St. Petersburg, by which another province of Poland will disappear from the map of Europe as a portion of the ancient Polish kingdom. The Palatinate of Augustowo is henceforth to be incorporated with Russia, though for the present it will be administered by a native governor, in the person of General Zobolocki.

Accounts from India state that the King of Bokhara has released the four Italians whom he had imprisoned in the hope of obtaining a ransom, together with some Russian and French prisoners. The conditions upon which they have been set at liberty are not known, but it is stated positively that they have reached Orenburg, on their way to St. Petersburg.

Intelligence from the Cape of Good Hope states that the rumour that Kreli and his people were about to cross the Bashee is proved to have been false. Throughout the whole coast of the Canda country the tribes are in a state of great excitement, and hostilities were expected to break out among the natives themselves.

Admiral Farragut's fleet forced the passage of Mobile harbour on the 27th ult., after a severe engagement, in which one of the Federal Monitors was sunk and two Confederate ironclads were captured, while the Confederate Admiral lost a leg and was taken prisoner. The principal fort which defended the entrance of the harbour was treacherously surrendered by Colonel Anderson, in defiance of the orders given by the General in Chief that the fort should be defended to the last. Admiral Farragut was approaching the city on the 5th inst. with 14 ships and three Monitors, but there is no confirmation of the rumour that Mobile is actually in his hands. General Sherman reports that he is shelling Atlanta. General Sheridan's forces have moved up the Shenandoah Valley to check the Confederate movements in that quarter under General Early, and a report is current that a battle has been fought near Winchester. The statement that Mr. Stanton, the Secretary for War, had tendered his resignation, and that it had been accepted by President Lincoln, is said to be without foundation. An enormous mass meeting, attended by 100,000 persons, has been held at New York, at which resolutions were passed denouncing Mr. Lincoln's policy, and recommending General M'Clellan's nomination for the Presidency on a Constitutional platform.

The Belfast riots, notwithstanding the presence of the troops, were renewed on Friday, when the mob fired upon the police, and several civilians and constables were severely wounded. Tranquillity has since been restored by the personal intervention of the principal citizens, who appointed deputations of Protestants and Roman Catholics to go round the disturbed districts, and appeal to the people to desist. This measure was at once successful, and it is now hoped that the peace of the city will not be again disturbed.

Home News.

Return of the Queen from Osborne.—The Queen, accompanied by the Prince and Princess Louis of Hesse, the Princesses Helena, Louisa, and Beatrice, and Prince Leopold, left Osborne on Thursday afternoon for Windsor Castle, travelling by the usual route on the South-Western line to Basingstoke, and thence to Windsor on the Great Western. The Royal party arrived at Windsor at a quarter past 6 o'clock. It is expected that her Majesty will proceed to Scotland on Monday evening, travelling direct to Perth, where the Prince Consort Memorial will be inaugurated, after which the Queen will resume her journey to Balmoral. Her Majesty will remain in Scotland for about six weeks.

The Prince and Princess of Wales continue at Abergeldie. On Wednesday week the Duke of Cambridge left for Invermark Lodge, Lochlee, on a visit to the Earl of Dalhousie. The Prince and Princess of Wales and Princess Mary of Cambridge went to Lochmuick to the fishing, and returned in the evening by Birkhall. On Thursday his Royal Highness killed two fine stags in Glen Gelden. The Princesses visited the Falls of the Gaurawalt, where they lunched, and drove thence to Invercauld-house, returning home by the north side of the Dee. At night the deer at Abergeldie were shown by torchlight to the Royal party. A dance on the green sward followed. On Friday evening their Royal Highnesses gave a grand ball at the Castle to a distinguished party from the neighbourhood, the Prince and Princess, and Princess Mary joining heartily in the Scotch dances to the music of the bagpipes. On Saturday, the woods of Abergeldie were beaten for deer, but only one stag was killed, the wind being very rough, and rain falling heavily. During the day the Princess drove out, accompanied by Princess Mary. On Sunday the Prince and Princess and the Princess Mary attended Divine worship in the parish church. In the afternoon Colonel Farquharson, of Invercauld, paid a visit to their Royal Highnesses at Abergeldie. In the evening their Royal Highnesses had a drive. On Monday night the Prince and Princess gave another ball at Abergeldie, to which the tenantry on the Birkhall estate were invited. It is stated that their Royal Highnesses will stay in the Highlands till about the 10th of September, and that the Prince is about to erect a palace at Abergeldie, for which Mr. Smith, of Aberdeen, the architect of Balmoral Castle, is preparing the designs.

Prince Napoleon in Scotland.—On Thursday week his Imperial Highness left Kinross for Edinburgh, where he took up his quarters at the Royal Hotel. In the afternoon he drove to Roslin, returning to Edinburgh in the evening. On Friday morning the Prince left Edinburgh for Greenock, visiting Glasgow on his way. In the course of the day the Prince visited the works of Messrs. Robert Napier & Son, in Govan, and inspected the three frigates building there for the Turkish Government. He afterwards drove through the city. In the afternoon the Prince left by train for Greenock, where he embarked for France, after a few hours' stay at Arran.

The Ex-Royal Family of France.—On Wednesday the Count and Countess de Paris returned to York House, Twickenham, from their wedding excursion. The inhabitants of the village gave their Royal Highnesses an enthusiastic welcome; triumphal arches were erected in the street, while flags and streamers floated from every house. A congratulatory address was presented by the vicar, and in the evening a display of fireworks took place from the river. On the following day the Count de Paris sent 2000 francs (80*l*) to the vicar, to be distributed among the poor of the parish, accompanied by the following answer to the address which had been presented to him:—

"York House, Twickenham, Aug. 25, 1864.

"Sir,—I beg you to convey to the members of the committee of which you are chairman, and to all those who have taken part in the demonstration of yesterday, the expression of our gratification for the kind reception given to my wife and myself by the inhabitants of Twickenham. I thank you for the hearty welcome contained in your address. As I told you, we see in it an auspicious beginning for our new life, whose first happy days shall ever be associated with this place. It is, indeed, no new association for my family. Three times in this century has it found, during exile, an hospitable retreat in Twickenham, and the grateful memory of it has lived through its various fortunes. I still remember that when a boy, my grandfather used to point out to me among the groves of Twickenham the former abode of his younger years. That place is again occupied by one of us. You have alluded to the Duke d'Aumale in terms which, I dare say, he fully deserves, and which I regret only he has not been able to hear; for to him, rather than to me, ought to have been addressed yesterday's demonstration. What at least I can do is to tell you how highly all my family appreciate the feelings which have prompted it, and to address, in my turn, to all my new neighbours the good wishes which they have expressed to me yesterday.—Believe, me, Sir, very truly yours,

"Louis Philippe d'Orleans."

The Maharajah Dhuleep Singh is expected with the Maharanee to arrive at his estate at Elveden, near Thetford, in the course of next month. The Maharajah while residing on his estate last autumn and winter, made many improvements, and appears anxious to fulfil his duties as a country gentleman in an exemplary manner.

The Channel Fleet sailed from Spithead yesterday, for a cruise between Portland and the Lizard.

This arrangement differs from that announced last week, by which the fleet was to sail for Leith Roads to escort the Prince and Princess of Wales to the Baltic.

THE VOLUNTEERS.—At the review of the Liverpool Volunteers on Saturday, Colonel M'Murdo confirmed the report which has been in circulation for the last few weeks that he is about to retire from his post as Inspector-General of Volunteers. Instructions have been issued from the Horse Guards to the commanding officers of volunteer corps, that the "badge of efficiency to be worn by volunteers entitled to that distinction shall be a rim of silver round the right arm, to be worn above the cuff and below the elbow, passing over any other embroidery with which the uniform may be ornamented."

Foreign.

FRANCE.—A grand fete was given at Versailles on Saturday in honour of the King of Spain. The Emperor, the Empress, and the King of Spain drove from the Trianon in an open carriage, and witnessed the grand waterworks. They then dined in the grand salon. In the evening "Psyche" was performed in the palace theatre, which was illuminated by 3500 lights. After the performance there was a display of fireworks, and an illumination of the fountains and gardens. At midnight a grand supper of 200 covers was served in the Galérie des Glaces. At one o'clock in the morning their Majesties returned to St. Cloud. On Sunday the King intended to go to Havre to visit Queen Christina, but the visit was rendered unnecessary by the arrival of the Dowager Queen in Paris. The King had an interview with her Majesty on Saturday, and left Paris on Sunday night for Madrid, his departure having been hastened by the death of the Princess Czartoriska, daughter of Queen Christina. The King gave a costly emerald necklace to the Empress before leaving, and the Emperor gave the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour to the Marquis de Santa Cruz and the Count de Montezuma, who were in attendance on his Majesty. Prince Napoleon has returned from Scotland. His yacht entered the port of Havre on Tuesday morning, and the Prince immediately left by rail for Paris. The Constitutionnel contradicts the rumour that the Emperor was about to make a journey to Ostend. The Emperor and Empress received Prince Metternich on Monday. The Prince will leave for Johannisberg on the 31st inst. The Emperor's fête, which passed off so successfully last week, has been followed by several hundred arrests. It appears that the police took offence at a cry of "Eh, Lambert!" which was heard in all parts of Paris, supposing that it meant something disrespectful to the Emperor, and 300 young men and boys were taken into custody for uttering it No one could give any account of the precise meaning of this cry, but it has since been ascertained that it was first raised by travellers in the English excursion trains, who were as usual noisy and boisterous, and ready to catch at any trifle to relieve the ennui of their journey. As, however, the French eagerly caught up the cry without knowing its meaning, the Prefect of Police has issued an order prohibiting inquiries after "Lambert" or any one else, and in default threatening prosecution for impeding the traffic. The cry however has spread much further than Paris, and is now heard at Madrid and Toledo. The Council-General for Puy de Dôme was opened on Tuesday. M. Rouher, the Minister of State, delivered a speech, stating that the new law affecting the Councils-General would have a largely decentralising character. It would also be very liberal, and confer upon the Councils-General the most entire authority over departmental affairs, restraining their bonds of subordination towards the State solely to the subjects affecting general interests, the unity of the territory, or the rights of political sovereignty. M. Rouland, Minister of the Council of State, has delivered a speech at Rouen, in which he said that the Emperor wished to have authority powerful and respected, in order to restrain evil passions and to widely promote the welfare of the country; but he also desired the free action of citizens in all the legitimate directions of human activity. At the opening of the Council-General for the Department of the Loire, the Duke de Persigny described the Emperor as the founder of liberty in France. He then gave a complete review of the theory of the Imperial Constitution. He showed the form of liberty to vary with every free people. "The present physiognomy of liberty, properly so called," he said, "may be recognised by the striking signs of the solidity and duration of the Government which it founds, and above all by the passion it inspires for great things." He then demonstrated that the political institutions of England are not adapted for France, "it not being possible for authority and liberty to remain in the hands of one class, as in England. Instead of subordinating one class to another, it is natural to render them independent, and this is the fundamental principle of our institutions. In order that the liberty of the Press may be a benefit, it is necessary in a country newly constituted that a new, vigorous, and independent political generation should arise to replace the minds enervated by revolutions." M. Behic, the Minister of Agriculture, Commerce, and Public Works, at a banquet given to him on Thursday by the merchants of Marseilles, announced that the time approached when the Customs dues will be assessed with a view to the financial interests of the country only, and that the completion of the whole system of railways in France would be hastened. He likewise promised the establishment of a new code of commercial legislation, an extension of the right of association, and an organisation for professional tuition. The Moniteur of Thursday announces that the Courrier du Dimanche has been suspended for two months, on account of an article signed by M. Alfred Assolant. Monsignore de Merode has arrived at Marseilles from Rome, on his way to Paris, where he will remain a few days. M. de la Ponterie, one of the editors of the France, has been sent to Mexico, taking with him the funds requisite for the creation of a Moniteur in that city.

ALGERIA.—Fresh disturbances have taken place in the province of Oran. Si-Mohammed has raised the tribes of Larbas and several other districts of Boghar. They have committed acts of incendiarism and assassination, cut the telegraph wires, and pillaged several caravanserais. The other districts of Oran and the province of Constantine are tranquil. The troops have established a military cordon, confining the insurrection, and preventing any reinforcements reaching it.

SPAIN.—The King of Spain arrived at Bayonne from Paris on Monday morning. The Queen is not expected to leave La Granja before the 10th September. Her Majesty will go to the Escurial, where she will stay a few days. The Ministerial journals reproduce the financial articles recently published by El Diario Español, which endeavoured to prove that the Passive Debt of Spain was equitably settled by the last law. The Correspondencia of Wednesday proposes an increase of the Custom's duties on the importation of foreign textile fabrics. The Epoca replies that it would be better to abolish those on the raw material.

PORTUGAL.—The Gazette officially denies the report of the establishment of convents.

BELGIUM.—The Belgian Chambers were re-opened on Tuesday without a speech from the Throne. The Prince de Ligne was re-elected President of the Senate. The session will only last a few days.

SWITZERLAND.—At the election of a member of the Conseil d'Etat, which took place at Geneva on Sunday, M. Chenevière, a Conservative, was returned by a majority of 300 over M. Fazy, the Radical candidate. The Radical committee annulled the election, and on the following day the Conservatives surrounded the building in which the sittings of the Council were held. The inhabitants of the Faubourg St. Gervais armed themselves, barricades were erected, and a conflict ensued, in which eight persons were killed and 15 wounded. The Government of the canton being unable to re-establish order, called for Federal intervention. The Federal Council thereupon sent M. Fornerod as Special Commissioner to the scene of the outbreak with a battalion of militia. The contending parties having refused to lay down their arms, the Commissioner ordered the Federal troops to enter the city, where they were well received by the population. There is still considerable excitement in the city, but it is hoped that tranquillity will soon be restored, as the Grand Council of Geneva have decided to submit the affair of the late election to the judgment of the Federal Council. The funeral of the eight victims who fell in the late disturbances took place on Thursday. The presence of a large body of militia prevented any further outbreak.

DENMARK.—The Crown Prince Humbert of Italy arrived at Copenhagen on Tuesday. The Prince and Princess Oscar of Sweden have also visited Copenhagen, and have now returned to Stockholm, which Prince Humbert is expected to visit shortly. The official Berlingske Tidende of the 16th states that at the last sitting of the Landsthing the President of the Council read a declaration, in the name of the Government, that in consequence of the cession of Schleswig to the two great German Powers, the Constitution of Nov. 18, 1863, had ceased to exist. M. Lehmann, alluding to the projects of solution by personal union, asked if the Government recognised the stipulation of the Constitution by which the King is unable to assume the government of a country separated from the Monarchy. M. de Bluhme answered that the King could not take such a step without the consent of the Rigsraad. In reply to further questions of M. Lehmann, the President of the Council stated that the present Rigsraad must, of course, cease to exist, but that the Ministry was unable to say what would be substituted in its place. In accordance with the armistice protocol signed on the 1st inst, the Plenipotentiaries of Denmark have given the required assurance that the Danish prisoners of war now in Prussia shall not serve again in the Danish army until the conclusion of peace.

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.—The occupation of Holstein by the Prussians and Austrians appears to be decided upon. General Gablenz, the commander of the Austrian troops, has arrived in Altona, and is making the necessary preparations. The municipalities from several of the Holstein towns met at Neumunster on Wednesday. A resolution was passed thanking the allies, and recognising the necessity of the Duchies joining Germany, and, so far as German interests demanded, Prussia in particular, without prejudice, however, to their independence. The resolution further states that the establishment of a provisional Government cannot be regarded as a proper means to secure the object in view, and fears are expressed lest the generally-desired speedy settlement of the affairs of the country, as regards its internal and foreign relations, be thereby unnecessarily deferred. Meetings in favour of the Prince of Augustenburg have been held in several of the other towns in the Duchies, at which resolutions were passed that no other claimant should have the support of the inhabitants. On Wednesday the Duke of Augustenburg despatched a memorial to Frankfort, with a view to establish the validity of his claims, as requested by the Federal Diet.

SAXONY.—The Saxon Diet was closed by the King on Tuesday. His Majesty, in his speech, mentioned the favourable financial state of the country, and referred upon the fact that the renewal of the Zollverein treaty on the part of Saxony will secure her commerce in future. He expressed a hope that the Schleswig-Holstein question would find a favourable solution, and one in accordance with the rights and wishes of Germany. He regretted that the Saxon troops were prohibited from actively taking part with the allies in the late war, and said:—

"The unshaken discipline and the strict fulfilment of their duty under difficult circumstances by the Saxon troops must, however, be acknowledged, and those are qualities as necessary to the soldier as valour on the field of battle. Full testimony is due to those brave men."

WURTEMBURG.—It is officially stated that Wurtemburg intends to propose that the minor German States, with Bavaria at their head, should form a third Power in the German Confederation, the other two being Austria and Prussia. It is not known in what form Würtemburg will embody this resolution at the Federal Diet.

HANOVER.—The King of Hanover is said to be slightly indisposed.

PRUSSIA.—Lieut.-General von Roon, the Minister of War, will visit the camp at Chalons, on the invitation of the Emperor of the French.

AUSTRIA.—The King of Prussia arrived at Vienna on Saturday evening, and was received at the railway station by the Emperor. His Majesty proceeded to the Palace of Schönbrunn, where he remained till Thursday, when he left for Stuttgard and Baden-Baden. Count von Bismark, who accompanied the King, had a long conference with Count Rechberg on Monday. It is reported that a complete understanding has been arrived at between Prussia and Austria, that the claims of the Grand Duke of Oldenburg gain ground, and that Prussia will not quit Schleswig-Holstein without territorial, political, and military compensations. It is said that the Austrian Government no longer disapproves the policy of Prussia. The statement of some foreign journals that a project for Federal reform drawn up by Count von Bismark was to be the subject of negotiations, is considered to be unfounded. The evening edition of the official Gazette says:—

"The visit of the King of Prussia is one of the most essential guarantees for peace in Europe. It also assures the safety and independence of Germany, and consequently the welfare, development, and tranquillity of our own provinces and of the other nations of Europe."

THE TYROL.—In consequence of a treasonable conspiracy which had been discovered in South Tyrol, several arrests have taken place at Trent, Pergine, Roveredo, Riva, Mori, and other places.

RUSSIA.—The Czar has ordered a reduction of the army, granting an immediate and unlimited discharge to those soldiers of the Guards, Artillery, Engineers, and the Interior Guard whose service expires on the 1st of January next.

POLAND.—According to an Imperial decree the Palatinate of Augustowo will be incorporated with Russia on the 27th inst., but will remain under the administration of a Polish Governor. General Zboloski has been nominated to that post.

ITALY.—The approaching visit of Prince Humbert to Paris is said to be connected with a project of marriage which, by the good offices of the Empress, has been arranged between him and the Princess Anna Maria. It is stated that as the Queen of Spain has not recognised King Victor Emmanuel as King of Italy, the Prince has decided not to be in Paris during the visit of the King of Spain. The inauguration of the statue of Rossini took place on Sunday at Pesaro, in presence of a very large number of spectators. The hymn sung on the occasion, composed by Mercadente, was much applauded. The Ministers Signori Peruzzi and Manna were present. Signor Peruzzi delivered a speech in presenting the medal sent by the municipalities of Florence and Brescia. The greatest enthusiasm was displayed by the people. Accounts from Rome state that Monsignor de Merode has left for Paris and Brussels on account of family affairs. Mgr. Meglia will be despatched to Mexico as Papal Internuncio. General von Willisen, Minister of Prussia at the Papal Court, died on the 20th inst. at Genzano of a malignant fever. It is reported in Rome that an attempt is making to induce the ex-king Francis II. to quit Rome "for a consideration," and that the Pope is to be allowed two years to provide himself with means of defence, as the French army is to be withdrawn.

GREECE.—Advices from Athens announce that the Cephalonian members have brought forward a motion in the National Assembly, proposing that the Government should declare it to be the wish of the nation that Candia, Thessaly, and Epirus should be peaceably annexed to Greece by means of treaties. The ministerial candidate, M. Messinezi, has been elected President feeling. The loss is estimated at 3500*l.*, and the amount will probably be increased, as some of the injured animals will prove all but useless.

Brighton.—In the thunderstorm of Sunday morning a waterspout, the second of those which were observed off Worthing, was seen at sea off this town. A few minutes before the storm burst it became visible in the form of a dark blue column, about two miles distant. It rapidly rose from the water like a thick cloud of smoke from a chimney, and joined the dark clouds above. There seemed to be several other smaller connections with the sea, but the atmosphere soon became so thick and dark that the separation of the clouds and sea was not discernible. The downfall of hail was terrific, the streets being quickly covered with large pieces of ice, one of which was as large as a sparrow's egg.

Eccles.—During the last few days some thousands of silver pennies have been found in making a new road past the boundary wall on the west side of the ancient residence known as Monk's Hall, where it is probable the monks of Whalley Abbey, who were formerly the lords of the greater part of Eccles, Monton, and Swinton, had a grange with tithe barns, where they collected rents and tithes from their tenants and other inhabitants of the neighbourhood. About 1000 of these pennies have been examined, and of these 964 are coins of Henry III., 19 of John, and 17 of William I. of Scotland, known in history as William the Lion. The Solicitor of the Treasury has claimed the coins as the property of the Crown, being "treasure trove" by the common law of England, and has intimated that the Lords of the Treasury will consider the case of the finder when they have determined as to the disposal of the coins.

Farnham.—On Wednesday, the 17th inst., a fire broke out in Longmoor enclosure in Woolmer Forest, and continued to burn until Saturday. It commenced just below Sleaforth Gate, to the right of the Petersfield Road. It broke out simultaneously in a dozen different places, and owing to the dryness of the heath and furze, it spread with alarming rapidity. At Godalming, Guildford, and Aldershott, the fire was plainly seen, and when the military authorities of the latter place had ascertained its situation, a body of troops consisting of the 75th and 83d Regiments, and detachments of the Military Train and Royal Engineers—in all, about 1000 men—were despatched to Woolmer to dig a trench and employ other means for cutting it off. On their arrival, however, the flames had extended over a vast area of fir plantations, and it was evident that the reduction of the fire would be a work of days. The soldiers immediately began to dig trenches, and were relieved every two hours, each relay consisting of 160 men, while a large number of civilians were employed by the owners of the private property in the immediate vicinity, as great fears were entertained for the farmhouses and other houses near the wood, which owed their escape to the fortunate circumstance that there was scarcely any wind. Notwithstanding these exertions the fire continued to rage during Thursday, Friday, and a part of Saturday, leaving little but the blackened embers of thousands of fir trees in once flourishing plantations, and transforming the landscape for a long distance into a blighted wilderness. On Friday for a mile beyond New Inn the fire was burning to Weavers Hill, a distance of at least five miles, scaring from the coverts every living thing that it did not destroy, and darkening the air as far as the eye could see with smoke. Several cottages and outbuildings fell a prey to the flames, and of the quantity of game destroyed some idea may be formed from the fact that 12 hares were taken out of one hole burnt to death. On Saturday the military succeeded in arresting the progress of the flames, and on Sunday morning they returned to Aldershot through Farnham, where they were met by the bands of their regiments. The detachments of the Military Train and Royal Engineers left at a later period of the day, and arrived at the camp shortly before noon. The officers and men presented a most singular appearance, being completely begrimed in smoke, smut, and dust, which the absence of water and the nature of their duties had necessarily allowed to collect upon them. The fire, although apparently subdued, continued at intervals on Monday to break out suddenly in various places, having penetrated the peat for some distance, but no further danger is apprehended, as all communication has been cut off from the unconsumed portion of the forest by means of broad trenches. The damage is variously estimated; but as at least 1200 acres of timber in various stages of growth have been destroyed, it is supposed to amount to several thousands of pounds. The fire is believed to have been the work of incendiaries. The gipsies and broomsellers who were allowed to gather broom and depasture their cattle in the neighbourhood, have this year been denied those privileges, and some of them were heard to say that they would be revenged.

Oxford.—The Bishop of Oxford has addressed the following letter to the Rev. A. M. W. Christopher, Rector of St. Aldate's, explaining his views of the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, which appear to have been erroneously reported in the newspaper accounts of the Diocesan Conference recently held in this city:—

"Near Chesham, Aug 17.

"My dear Mr. Christopher.—Many thanks for your very kind letter. I had not seen either of the newspaper extracts you send me, but if I had I should not have answered them. It is a hopeless endeavour to set oneself right by answering anything, and if you reply to one you must to all. I therefore, leave matters to right themselves. It is quite a different matter replying to you, and I do it with the greatest pleasure. I said nothing of the sort attributed to me in these extracts. Perhaps the subject was too abstruse to be treated so briefly, and this has led to misapprehension. In brief, my belief is this:—The whole Bible comes to us as 'the Word of God,' under the sanction of God the Holy Ghost. We cannot pick and choose amidst its contents. All is God's Word to us. But as I believe that this, which I hold as the only orthodox view, is encompassed with many difficulties by what is called the theory of 'verbal inspiration,' I desired to show how, in my judgment, a careful scrutiny of the Bible which revealed the 'divers manners' in which the Holy Ghost spake—i, sometimes by the mere mechanical use of the human agent who conveyed the message; as when (1) God wrote words on the first tables, or (2) dictated them on the second, or (3) committed them to prophets simply to repeat, or (4) spake through the prophets in rhapsody; sometimes by possessing the human instrument with a complete knowledge of that he was to speak, and leaving him to express it under the mere suggestion and guardianship of His own special presence, according to the natural use of the human faculties;—I desired, I say, to show how this would greatly lessen these difficulties, and enable men to realise the essential difference between Holy Scripture and any other books,—namely, that, as all truth comes from God, other books may be in a sense said to be inspired because they are true; but Holy Scripture alone can be affirmed to be true because it is inspired. You are quite free to make any use of this you see fit.—I am, ever yours most truly, "S. Oxon"

Sheffield.—Mr. Roebuck attended the annual dinner of the retiring Master Cutler on the 17th inst., and spoke as follows on Public Affairs:—

"The present Parliament has been described as a do-nothing Parliament. That do-nothing Parliament received into its hands a grand deposit. It was appointed to watch over the welfare and the interests of England. Thirty-five years ago there arose among the people of England a desire for reform. The reform began by liberating the Catholics. Then came the grand reform—the reform of Parliament itself. We then reformed the municipal corporations. We reformed the poor law, we reformed the government of the colonies, we reformed the municipalities of Ireland, and then we freed trade. That is the result of the reform of Parliament. Well, now, what is the result of that? I look round me, and I am proud of being an Englishman. Thrones have tumbled down, empires have been destroyed, the model republic has been rent in twain. But England stands serene in her greatness, and dares the world to oppose her onward progress. I am very much of that class of men who say, think not of rest while aught requires to be done; but still I cannot help considering the grand deposit that is in my hands—the great happiness, welfare, and well-being of the great people of England that is committed to me. Shall I hastily, rashly, imprudently do things which shall render doubtful and dangerous that which I am attempting to perfect? There were three things upon which the Parliament and the Government acted in a manner foreign to my view, and yet I am here to vindicate the course they pursued. First of these was the great schism that occurred in the model Republic on the other side of the Atlantic. My feeling was to at once recognise the Confederate States; and had I been Prime Minister it should have been done. Though out of every 20 men I meet 19 are sympathisers with the Confederate States, still I must say that the sympathy of England went not to the point of risking war for those States. Well then, Parliament taking its view, taking its cue—its command—from the kingdom over which it was destined to rule, said we will do nothing to risk the danger of a war. The Ministry, following Parliament, did the same thing. I think, as a bold politician, Lord Palmerston was wrong; but he is a much older man than I, and though I do not accord with his opinion, I cannot mistake the prudence of his conduct. He did what England desired he should do. He has followed what is called perfect neutrality, and we are now as we were at the beginning of that conflict. The next case in which Parliament acted differently from my view was that of Denmark. I thought Denmark was oppressed by the bandit powers of Germany, and I would have sent the English fleet to defend her. Again Lord Palmerston said 'No.' He followed the people of England. They felt for Denmark, but they did not feel so much for Denmark as to be willing to go to war for her. Lord Palmerston, a very wise old gentleman, took his view from the people of England, and we allowed Denmark to be made the prey of the robber Germany. Shame it is, no doubt, but I cannot help feeling that the shame rests with the people of England. Well, now I come to touch upon a ticklish subject—I mean the question of reform. Now you have returned a middle-class Parliament. I have been in that middle-class Parliament. I form a portion of it. I live in it from day to day, and from night to night. I know its feelings. I have probed its wishes. I know what it will do, and it will not reform itself. But still comes the question, are the people of England in such a state of mind as to compel Parliament to reform itself? I say they are not, and Lord Palmerston—again I quote the prudence of that wise old gentleman—said that Parliament is against reform. I will not propose reform until Parliament compels me. Well, now these are the three great things that the present Parliament have done. When you say they have done nothing, let me bring to your mind what would occur to a patient in a high fever if he sent for a doctor, and the doctor were to determine not to bleed him, is not that as positive a proceeding as bleeding him? I say, then, that determining not to go to war is as positive a proceeding as if they had determined to go to war. Though the patient might recover, and you would then say the doctor was a clever man; or he might die, and you might say he was a fool; still the fact would remain that the doctor had taken a step as complete in the one case as in the other. If he had bled him he would have been acting; by not bleeding him he would be equally acting. The do-nothing Parliament, by not going to war, has in every case been as active as if it had determined to batter down the whole world. Now, I look around me and I ask myself, what is the state of England? Is not property safe? Is not every man able to say what he likes? Does not every man enjoy that privilege so dear to Englishmen of grumbling as much as he wishes? Cannot you walk from one end of England to the other in perfect security? I ask you, the world over, or in past history, is there anything like it. Nothing. All I ask, and as I ask it the trembling and fear comes over me which came over the old superstitious heathen when a man had pursued a course of uninterrupted success, and he thought the gods were envious of his happiness and would turn a great catastrophe against him—I pray that our unrivalled happiness—unrivalled I call it, for it is such as the world never saw before—I pray that our unrivalled happiness may escape the terrible ending that the superstitious fear and tremble for. I say to you now that you ought to be very careful how you decide that your representatives ought to act. You are so happy, you are so distinguished from the rest of the world, that every step a wise man takes is taken with trembling and in terror lest he should in any way whatever render insecure that great happiness you now enjoy, which the world sees, and which the world envies."

Southampton.—On Saturday the inquiry respecting the murder on the high seas was resumed, when it appeared that there was some doubt whether the ship had a right to carry the English flag, and consequently whether the prisoner was within the English jurisdiction; but it was agreed that the point should be reserved for the superior court, and the prisoner was committed for trial.

Tiverton.—Lord Palmerston paid a visit to his constituents on Tuesday, for the purpose of attending the Tiverton Races, and was received with the greatest enthusiasm. The station and its approaches were crowded with people, by whom he was loudly cheered; and after his lordship had reached the hotel, he appeared at the window and made a speech, in which he made them merry by congratulating them on the good looks which they all, whether old or young, and especially those of the fair sex, derived from the healthy air and prosperity of the town. In the evening his lordship was entertained at a public dinner under the presidency of the Mayor, and in returning thanks for the toast of his health, spoke as follows on Public Affairs:—

"The rev. gentleman who returned thanks for the clergy did me the honour to allude to matters which are the personal acts of the Minister who fills the office that I do—I mean the choice of the persons who are to fill the high dignities of the Church. I am glad that the selections which I have thought it to be my duty to make have met with general approval. I hold the task of making those selections to be one of the most important duties that can devolve upon the person who holds the office which I have the honour to fill, because there are many things which depend upon a good choice—these are, in the first place, the moral and religious training of the country—of those who are members of the Church of which these persons are chosen to be high dignitaries; but there is a further bearing on a good selection in these cases, because in a free country like this, where every man is entitled to hold his own opinions, where men are accustomed to investigate the grounds of the opinions which they entertain or which they may intend to adopt, there must necessarily be great differences on religious subjects. No doubt we might all wish that the whole nation could be of one creed. That is impossible in a free country; but what can be done, and what ought to be done, is that those who hold high office and those who are at the head of the Established Church should by their bearing towards those who differ from them in religious opinions mitigate those acerbities which are, perhaps, inherent in the diversities of opinion on so important a matter, both here and hereafter; that they should, by their manner and bearing towards those of different opinion, render those differences as little perceptible as possible, and endeavour to inculcate that charity which is the basis of our common religion. I trust and believe that the choice which it has been my lot to make has been made in this direction, and that those who have been elevated to fill high positions in the Established Church will by their bearing towards different communions continue to prove that, although each may be sincere in holding opinions at variance one with another, all will, nevertheless, feel that there are common feelings, common interests, and common obligations which pervade the mass, and that those feelings, interests, and obligations ought not to be embittered by any asperities between different sects. We have most unhappily seen very recently proofs that in the sister kingdom those differences of religion have led to most disastrous and lamentable outbreaks; but let us not ascribe events entirely to difference of religious opinion; they are rather connected with long-established feuds, and should be looked upon rather as political demonstrations than as uncharitable feelings in regard to the religions of the two parties who came in contact. Notice has also been taken of the circumstance that it has fallen to the lot of the Government of which I am a member to preserve to this country the blessings of peace. Now, gentlemen, no doubt the preservation of peace, with honour, with consistency, with the interests and dignity of the country, with its interest at home and its dignity and reputation abroad—the preservation of peace upon such conditions is the primary duty of any administration that may be charged with the conduct of national affairs. I do not think it desirable that we should be of that section, which I believe really does not now exist, although it is a by-word sometimes used—I do not think it desirable that we should be of the peace-at-any-price party. I do not believe that those who are commonly designated by that name are at heart insensible to the honour and interest of the country. There may be differences of opinion as to the magnitude of the case, as to the validity of the reasons which may induce the country to draw the sword; but I am persuaded that there is no Englishman who would not, if he thought the interests and honour and dignity of the country were at stake, join in its defence by whatever means, personal or otherwise, which he might be able to command. There have been, indeed, of late years during the five years which I have been in office, several cases which might have led this country into war. We might have embarked in war, and with great acquiescence in popular feeling, for the rescue of the Poles. Well, we deplore their unhappy fate; we endeavoured to enlist in their cause the moral and political action of all the different Powers of Europe, and we did so; but they unfortunately failed, and perhaps it was in the nature of things that our efforts should not succeed. But however the enthusiasm of a large portion of the community might have urged us to take more active measures, we did not think—and I believe the majority of the country is of opinion that we thought right—we did not think that was an occasion on which it would be justifiable to call on the people of England to make those exertions and sacrifices which such a war would have called for. Then there was the American civil war. There is much diversity of opinion as to the merits of the contending parties. Some are for the North on the ground of their hatred of slavery; some are for the South on the ground of their love of freedom and independence. We might have been involved one way or the other if we had listened to many of those who urged different courses of action, we might have been involved in the quarrel; but I believe the country is glad we have abstained from taking that course. We could have had nothing to gain, and we should only have added thousands of our own sons to the hecatomb of victims which that calamitous and bloody slaughtering war has sacrificed. We may hope that time and reflection—and recent advices from America show some favourable symptoms—we may hope that time and reflection, and the fact of the immense losses which have been sustained, and the slight hopes of success which appear on the part of the North—we may hope that many months will not elapse before some progress will be made towards healing that tremendous breach which now exists. But of this I am convinced, that if we had yielded to those who, from the purest motives and from a sincere conviction, urged us to interfere to offer our mediation to endeavour to reconcile the quarrel between the parties before matters were ripe for our adjustment, we should not only have failed in accomplishing that object, but we should have embittered the feelings between that country and this, and have rendered the future establishment of good relations between us and them less easy and more difficult. Therefore I think our neutrality was wise, and I am sure that it is appreciated by the country at large. Well, then came that unfortunate Danish question, and I am sure every Englishman who has a heart in his breast and a feeling of justice in his mind, sympathises with those unfortunate Danes, and wishes that this country could have been able to draw the sword successfully in their defence; but I am satisfied that those who reflect on the season of the year when that war broke out, on the means which this country could have applied for deciding in one sense that issue, I am satisfied that those who make these reflections will think that we acted wisely in not embarking in that dispute. To have sent a fleet in midwinter to the Baltic every sailor would tell you was an impossibility, but if it could have gone it would have been attended by no effectual result. Ships sailing on the sea cannot stop armies on land, and to have attempted to stop the progress of an army by sending a fleet to the Baltic would have been attempting to do that which it was not possible to accomplish. If England could have sent an army, and although we all know how admirable that army is on the peace establishment, we must acknowledge that we have no means of sending out a force at all equal to cope with the 300,000 or 400,000 men whom the 30,000,000 or 40,000,000 of Germany could have pitted against us, and that such an attempt would only have insured a disgraceful discomfiture—not to the army, indeed, but to the Government which sent out an inferior force and expected it to cope successfully with a force so vastly superior. We are, as a nation, I trust, sufficiently strong to defy attack from any enemy. We have, in round numbers, 300,000 militia and Volunteers, in addition to the regular army, and, as they can be immediately increased, we have force amply sufficient to defy attack from whatever quarter it may proceed. We have a fleet growing every year, adapting itself to the modern requirements of naval warfare, and fully adequate for the defence of the country. Our object is defence—not aggression. But this state of things does not allow this country to undertake vast operations beyond its confines; calling on the nation to make great exertions, to make great sacrifices, both of men and money, in order to send out an army fit to cope with the vast establishments maintained by other countries. Well, we did not think that the Danish cause would be considered as sufficiently British, and as sufficiently bearing on the interests and the security and the honour of England, as to make it justifiable to ask the country to make those exertions which such a war would render necessary; and I am sure that the verdict of the country will be that, in this respect, the Government judged rightly. But, while we have preserved peace, the nation has been doing its work too. It is the duty of the Government to keep the country at peace as long as it can do so without sacrificing its honour, its dignity, or its interests. It is the duty of the people of the country to foster its trade, to extend its commerce, to increase its resources, and to promote its welfare of every sort and kind. This duty has been nobly performed by the people of this kingdom; and there never was a period of equal length during which this country has made such enormous strides in wealth, and in everything which constitutes the comfort, the happiness, and the welfare of the nation. The Government can only contribute to these results by removing obstacles and affording facilities, but it remains for the people themselves to make those exertions by which alone these results can be obtained. Government cannot interfere with private enterprise. Every now and then we are called upon to subsidise or assist this or that enterprise; we are told that a little contribution from the public revenue would set up this manufacture, would assist another, would give scope to industry, and would foster a rising commerce; but these things are only done in countries where the people are paralysed by despotic power, and where they require the vivifying and electrical touch of the Government to rouse them to an exertion which is not their natural condition, nor their habitual practice. In this country every man is alive, every man knows best how to employ his capital, how to direct his genius, whatever it may be; whatever line you may take, whether it be active exertion in distant parts, or the studious labour of invention at home, or the direction of the industry of thousands of our manufacturing workmen, in this country every man knows best how to contribute to the public wealth and to his own prosperity and advantage, and all that the Government has to do is to leave things alone, to throw down barriers and obstructions, where barriers and obstructions are pressed, and to give that freedom to industry and activity to commerce by which alone the general welfare of the country can be advanced. That has been our task, and I think we have performed that task well and successfully, and if anybody will take the trouble to look back, which few men are disposed to do, because they are too busy looking forward; if any man will look back and glance at the immense progress which has taken place in this country during the last 30 years, he will be astonished at the magnitude of the improvements which have been made, the magnitude of the obstructions which have been thrown down, the magnitude of the new doors to industry which have been opened, and the progress which the country has made in national wealth and the comfort and happiness of the people."

WELLS.—The sentence of death passed upon John Allen, at the recent Assizes, for the murder of his wife, has been commuted to penal servitude for life. The respite appears to have been the spontaneous act of the Home Secretary. A memorial, signed by upwards of 500 of the principal gentry, clergy, and inhabitants of Taunton and neighbourhood, had been forwarded to London on Saturday, but it could not have been presented at the time the respite was despatched. Since the trial several facts have transpired which show the gross provocation to which Allen had been subjected by his wife, and these were all embodied in the memorial. The greatest satisfaction is therefore felt in the neighbourhood that his life has been spared. The receipt of the respite was at once made known to him by the governor of the gaol. On receiving the announcement he appeared stunned, and fainted. He was removed to the hospital of the gaol, where he now remains under the care of the surgeon.

WINCHESTER.—A court of inquiry, ordered by the Lord-Lieutenant of Hampshire at the instance of the Secretary of State for War, was held in this city a few days ago to investigate the circumstances which led to the recent disbandment of the Basingstoke corps for insubordination at the Albury review on Easter Monday. The court was composed of Sir George Pechell, Colonel-Commandant of the 4th Administrative Battalion of Hampshire, as president; Captain Burton, of the 31 Hants; and Captain Brace, 7th Hants. Colonel Luard, Assistant-Inspector of Volunteers, attended from the War Office. It appeared from the evidence that previous to the review a general order was issued by Colonel M'Murdo that no company in any battalion was to consist of less than 24 files. Lieut.-Colonel Humphery, M.P., previous to the commencement of the day's proceedings, found that the 1st Hants battalion which he commanded was composed of six companies, each under 24 files. He ordered Lieut. Brooks of the Basingstoke Company, which was the junior, to break it up and distribute the men among the others. Four of the men positively refused to obey this order, and one of them addressed the Colonel, saying that the 18th were the strongest on the ground, and asking him why he did not break up his own corps. Lieutenant Brooks having officially reported their refusal, Colonel Humphery broke up his own company (the Andover), thereby strengthening the Basingstoke Company to its requisite number, and thus enabling it to remain on the field, but administering to it a sharp rebuke on its insubordination and unworthiness of its conduct. After the review, Lieutenant Brooks resigned his commission, on the ground that, as he possessed no authority over his men, his services were useless. The Colonel reported the case to the Lord Lieutenant, who referred it to the Secretary of State for War, and eventually, by command of the Queen, the Basingstoke Company was disbanded. This decision caused great dissatisfaction to the inhabitants of Basingstoke, who petitioned for inquiry, on the ground that the insubordination was the act of but a few men, and should not therefore have been visited upon the whole corps. The inquiry lasted four hours, and the result will be reported to the Secretary of State for War before it is made public.

WORTHING.—During the thunderstorm of Sunday morning two waterspouts were seen off this place. An observer from the tower of Worthing College, in describing their appearance, says that the sea at nine o'clock was quite calm, with a slight breeze blowing from the N.E. At 9.5 the clouds were seen to revolve in a circle, about half a mile in diameter, and gradually approach the centre, which descended, diminishing in size, till, when about 50 feet from the surface of the sea, it increased, and united with a dense vapour arising from the water, in the shape of a cone. The sea for about a circle of 300 feet was in a most disturbed state, the immense waves rolling to a centre and throwing up masses of foam. At 9.15 the waterspout broke, and an exceeding heavy hailstorm attended its dissolution, some of the stones being about three-quarters of an inch in diameter. The disturbed water travelled to the eastward at the rate of nearly 40 miles an hour, and when opposite Brighton another waterspout was formed, but far more graceful in appearance than the first, the upper part not being so bulky, but much higher. Its existence, however, was but of short duration.

YORK.—The local papers contain a long account of a complaint preferred by the Lord Mayor of York to the Secretary of State for War, respecting the conduct of Colonel Dickson and the officers of the 16th Lancers, while in barracks in this city. It appears that on the regiment leaving York the Lord Mayor addressed a letter to the Secretary of State, saying that he deemed it his duty to lay before him the conduct of the officers and the discipline of the regiment. He complained, first, of being grossly insulted by Colonel Dickson and the officers, by "a most uncourteous and ungentlemanly act," in their neglecting, after his election, to leave their cards at the Mansion House, and then subsequently sending him an invitation to attend a ball without any cards accompanying the invitation. His next complaint was that two of the officers, on a Sunday night had amused themselves on the way to barracks by endeavouring to extinguish the gas lights, for which conduct they were summoned before the magistrates, and fined 2*l.* each. That subsequently Colonel Dickson, on leaving a ball, assaulted one of the policemen who had been the means of convicting the two officers, for which he was summoned before the magistrates, and after a number of adjournments eventually paid 5*l.* to the police fund rather than submit to a conviction. The officers having set such an example, his lordship said that the soldiers under them harboured an ill feeling towards the police; that collisions took place, and that he had found it necessary to write to Colonel Dickson, threatening to lay the matter before the Horse Guards unless the soldiers were kept quiet. He said that on one occasion, when police were endeavouring to identify an offending soldier on parade, the soldiers hissed them; that on another the soldiers used strong language to the Volunteers, of which the Lord Mayor was an officer; that his lordship had, on the occasion of a Volunteer non-commissioned officer's ball, been compelled to order special means to prevent a disturbance on the part of certain of the Lancers, who were taking supper in the neighbourhood; that numerous reports were made to him by the police of the conduct of the soldiers, and that his lordship and the citizens were glad when the regiment left the city. On the citizens becoming aware of the course the Lord Mayor had taken in the matter, they at once got up a memorial to the Duke of Cambridge, which was signed by the recorder, sheriff, nine aldermen, 29 councillors, eight magistrates, three deputy-lieutenants, the clerk of the peace, city coroner, the under-sheriff, one admiral, two retired colonels, two bankers, and several other gentlemen and tradesmen of the city, certifying that the conduct of the regiment was not such as to justify the complaints the Lord Mayor had made; but that, on the contrary, Colonel Dickson and those under his command, both officers and men, were [illegible] in very high esteem and respected by the citizens who greatly regretted their departure from the city. A similar memorial was also sent from officers of Rifle Volunteers, and the statement was further endorsed by an influential inhabitant in the neighbourhood of the barracks, by the town clerk, and by an extract from the minutes of the Watch Committee. Colonel Dickson himself also explained that the non-calling at the Mansion House was the result of ignorance of the custom, and that the invitation to the military ball sent to the Lord Mayor was given as a compliment, and not as an insult. To the latter allegation Colonel Dickson further alleged that the Lord Mayor gave an uncourteous reply, and this was the origin of a systematic display of ill feeling on the part of the Lord Mayor. The result of the investigation in this singular case is that the Commander-in-Chief has given a decision to the effect that the conduct of the regiment while in York was not such as to justify the complaints preferred against it.

THE RIOTS IN BELFAST.—On Friday morning another outbreak of the rioters took place in the Millfield district, and the police were fired at. At 9 o'clock the riots were renewed with unabated fury. Several persons were severely injured. A little boy was taken to the hospital with a bullet wound in the abdomen, and a little girl was shot in the wrist; nine civilians and four constables also received gunshot wounds. During the day a meeting was held, at which deputations of Protestant and Catholic gentlemen were appointed to visit the disturbed districts and reason with the rioters. This step appears to have been successful, and tranquillity has now been restored, though the military, as a matter of precaution, still patrol the town by day and night. It was feared that disturbances would take place at the funerals of the Roman Catholic party which took place on Sunday, but they passed off quietly. The friends of the deceased parties only were allowed to accompany their remains. Two inquests have been opened on the bodies of two of the men shot by the police, but the juries, who were half Protestants and half Roman Catholics, could not agree, and had to be discharged without finding a verdict.

Railways.

OPENING OF THE ISLE OF WIGHT LINE.—The first section of the railway from Ryde to Shanklin was opened for passenger traffic on Tuesday. Eleven trains are to run each way on week days, and two trains each way on Sundays. Coaches and omnibuses, under the management of the company, will complete the communication between Ventnor and Shanklin until the second section of the line from Shanklin to Ventnor is opened. The completion of this last work has been delayed by the difficulties met with in tunnelling through the high downs north of Ventnor.

COLLISION ON THE WEST MIDLAND.—A fearful collision between an excursion train and a mineral train occurred on Tuesday evening at the junction of the West Midland and Taff Vale Extension, at Pontypool Road. It appears that in the morning excursion trains ran at cheap fares from Shrewsbury, Worcester, and other places, to enable persons to view the Crumlin Viaduct and the neighbouring mountain scenery. Among the trains was one from Shrewsbury, Ludlow, and Leominster, but as the driver was not acquainted with the line except between Shrewsbury and Hereford, he was, in accordance with the company's rules, furnished with a pilot. The line from Crumlin to Pontypool is one which requires great care and judgment to drive over, having a descent on which some of the gradients are as high as 1 in 46. It is necessary, therefore, to have the line between Crumlin and Pontypool perfectly clear of all obstruction before a train is started from the former place, as a man is constantly kept in a box at Blandare, halfway down the descent, whose duty it is not to allow any train to pass until he has been telegraphed that the line to Pontypool is clear. The Shrewsbury and Hereford excursion train, which left Crumlin at 5 o'clock on Tuesday evening, was preceded by a coal train, which had reached the foot of the descent at Pontypool, and should have been shunted to a siding before the signalman at Blandare had signalled the line "clear" to the driver of the excursion train. It appears, however, that the man, knowing that the driver of the coal train had ample time to get out of the way, allowed the excursion train to pass. Unfortunately, while the coal train was shunting, one of the coupling chains broke, and when the excursion train was due at Pontypool a large portion of the coal train was still upon the main line. The train came down the incline with tremendous velocity, though the break was applied, and no danger was apprehended until, on rounding the curve towards the base of the hill, the pilot observed the coal train in the way. He at once blew the whistle, telling the guard to put all the pressure possible upon the breaks, which was done. Simultaneously with this the driver reversed the engine, and the stoker applied the engine break, but all was useless. Such was the speed now attained by the train that the breaks became ignited by the friction and thus became powerless. There were on the

of the National Assembly, by a majority of 182 votes to 142, over M. Delyorghi, the Opposition candidate.

Turkey.—Intelligence has been received of the submission of a chief tribe of the rebellious Arabs in Yemen. The city of Smyrna has been the scene of some disturbances, caused by the arrival of a Dervish from Medina, who announced the end of the world. This prophecy produced a great impression on the Mussulmans, and a band of Candiotes went through the streets, threatening fire and pillage, in concert with the Mussulman population. The disturbance was suppressed by the arrest of all the Candiotes, on the recommendation of the French consul-general.

Egypt.—The differences between the American Consul and the Egyptian Government have been settled, and the former has resumed his relations with the Government. Nubar Pacha has arrived at Alexandria, and left for Cairo.

Cape of Good Hope.—Accounts from the Cape to the 21st July state that the alarm raised on the frontier of an intention on the part of the Krelis to cross the Bashee was proved to have been groundless. Efforts were making to discover the authors of the rumour. Traders and travellers passing through the Canda country represented the country along the whole coast line to be in a disturbed state. The tribes are said to be more insolent than usual, and several councils had been held among the chiefs. A war amongst the natives in that locality was expected. Sir Walter Currie has returned to Graham's Town from the Transkei. The embodiment of the Irregular Horse had been abandoned. The conditions upon which grants of Transkeian territory were to be made were found to be too high, and were to be modified if the scheme was continued, but it was considered doubtful whether the territory would be given out for occupation. Parliament was to be prorogued on the 13th ult. Its removal to Graham's Town was considered unnecessary, and it was doubted whether the experiment would be repeated. In consequence of the stoppage of several Government works throughout the colony, a large number of working men had collected at Cape Town in search of employment, which could only be obtained at a low rate of wages. An intimation that free passages to New Zealand would shortly be offered by the Government of that colony, had induced large numbers to determine to emigrate there. The proposal of the Diamond Company to establish mail steam communication with Port Elizabeth, was agreed to without a division, but only on its containing a condition to call at Table or Simon's Bay also. The proposal of the Union Company to extend mail communication to the Mauritius, was rejected.

India.—By the Bombay Mail of the 23d ult. we learn that the Bhootanese are preparing to attack and seize the British territory of Kooch Behar, and have made a demand on the British Government for the arrears of subsidy alleged to be due for the Dooars of Assam. The British authorities in Assam have suspended all communications with Bhootan. The Rangoon papers mention a rumour that the King of Burmah is making preparations for war with the English in the province of Pegu. The four Italian silk-growers, who were imprisoned in Bokhara, with one Frenchman and 13 Russians, have been released by the Emir, after having been imprisoned for a year. The Italian Government in January last sent an agent, M. Bonhomme, to do what he could in the matter. Provided with letters from the Sultan, the Viceroy of Egypt, and other Mohammedan sovereigns, M. Bonhomme proposed to travel to Bokhara through India, but was dissuaded by the Viceroy of Egypt, as his death would have been insured by so doing, on account of the Emir regarding all Europeans as Englishmen, and entertaining a mortal hatred to them. M. Bonhomme then travelled through Persia to Russia, the only country with which the Emir holds regular relations; but even in Russia he was advised not to make the venture, and thus he could only forward his letters through the officials. The letters, however, remained unanswered, as the Emir dislikes such means of communication, and had only sent one answer to four letters from the Russian commandant at Orenburg. Notwithstanding all these difficulties the prisoners have been liberated, and have arrived at Orenburg on their way to St. Petersburg. The civil war between the Ameer of Cabul and his brothers is not yet at an end. The rumour that Sir Hugh Rose was to return to England in October is contradicted, and it is now stated that his Excellency will not leave India until the spring.

China.—The Portuguese Plenipotentiaries have been unable to obtain the ratification of their treaty with the Chinese Government. No fresh movements have been made by the rebels. The Futai, the Imperial Commander-in-Chief, has occupied two more cities.

New Zealand.—The Gazette of Tuesday contained a despatch and inclosure from General Cameron, from which it appears that, after abandoning the entrenchment at Tauranga where the English troops suffered so severely, the natives retired to two strong pahs in the ranges about 10 miles off, to which places, owing to the advanced season—being the middle of the New Zealand winter—it was not deemed prudent to follow them. The settlement of Whanganui being reported in danger, General Cameron transferred his head-quarters to Auckland, and Colonel Warre, with 300 men, was ordered to proceed from New Plymouth to resist the threatened attack, but in the meantime the rebels were met and defeated by a body of natives friendly to the English rule, and Whanganui was thus placed in a position of complete safety. The troops and militia are described as having been animated with but one desire to punish the perpetrators of the mutilations of Colonel Lloyd and his unfortunate comrades, on whom the natives appear to have practised all their ancient and most barbarous rites. The remains of one soldier are said to have borne unmistakeable evidence of acts of cannibalism too atrocious to record. All the troops not required for the defence of Tauranga were concentrating in Auckland, ready to be moved to any point that might be threatened. Since the affair at Tauranga there has been only one collision with the troops. That occurred in the neighbourhood of New Plymouth, where the rebels attacked a redoubt and were repulsed with great loss, whilst there was only one casualty on our side. Until the beginning of September further military operations are not considered practicable in any part of the island.

Australia.—The University Library at Sydney has been enriched by a present from the Queen. The Governor received by the last mail a copy of the collected Speeches of the Prince Consort, with an autograph from the Queen dedicating it to the University. His Excellency delivered this gift in person on the 1st of June. The Senate resolved, "That an address to her Majesty, expressive of their gratitude, should be prepared by the Vice-Chancellor." The volume is bound in white vellum and gold, and stamped with the crest, motto, and name of the Prince Consort. In the first page are the following words written in the Queen's own hand:—"Presented to the Sydney University Library, in memory of her great and good husband, by his broken-hearted widow. Victoria R., 1864." The book is to be preserved, as a Royal gift, in a box of oak and lined with purple velvet.

United States.—The situation at Petersburg remains unchanged. General Sheridan has superseded General Hunter in command of the Middle Military Division, embracing the department of Washington, the Susquehanna, Maryland, and Western Virginia. On the 5th a Confederate charge at Petersburg was repulsed with slaughter. General Grant visited General Sheridan, at Monocacy, Maryland, on the 6th, and returned to his head-quarters on the 8th. General Sheridan's forces have since occupied Martinsburg, and are marching to attack General Early in the Shenandoah Valley. Skirmishing commenced near Winchester on the 10th. The World's Washington special correspondent says there is reason to believe that a battle has been fought near Winchester between General Sheridan's forces and the main body of the Confederates under General Early. Very heavy cannonading was heard from that direction at Harper's Ferry on the 11th. General Sherman reports that he is shelling Atlanta. An explosion occurred on board the ammunition boat at City Point, on the James River, on the 9th inst., blowing the boat to atoms, prostrating all adjacent buildings, and killing and wounding 180 soldiers, labourers and others. The cause of the explosion is as yet undiscovered. Confederate official despatches from Mobile of the 5th report that Admiral Farragut, after a desperate engagement with the Confederate fleet, in which the Federal Monitor Tecumseh was sunk, and the Confederate ironclads Tennessee and Selina captured, entered the harbour, with 14 ships and three Monitors, and was approaching the city. The Confederate Admiral Buchanan lost a leg and was taken prisoner. It appears from the Confederate despatches that Fort Powell, on Dauphin Island, was evacuated and destroyed by the Confederates on the night of the 5th; and that Fort Gaines, through the treachery of its commander, Colonel Charles Anderson, of Alabama, was surrendered to the Federals on the morning of the 8th. The work was of great strength, was amply provisioned for six months for its garrison of 600 men, and Colonel Anderson had received explicit orders from General Payne, the commander of the department, to defend it to the last. It is asserted that General Beauregard has been ordered from Petersburg to take command at Mobile. Deserters to General Grant's lines report that Mobile has since been captured by Admiral Farragut, but their statements are discredited. General Banks issued an order on the 2d inst., enrolling all the able-bodied coloured men in his department, between the ages of 18 and 40 years, to be put into the existing coloured regiments. The 50 Confederate and 50 Federal officers, prisoners of war, who were to have been placed under fire at Charleston and Morris Island by their respective custodians, have been exchanged. The New York Times asserts from Washington that Secretary Stanton has resigned, and that his resignation has been accepted by Mr. Lincoln; but the statement is said to be unfounded. Governor Seymour has remonstrated with the authorities at Washington on the excessive quotas assigned to the cities of New York and Brooklyn under the President's late call for troops. A mass meeting to nominate General M'Clellan for the Presidency was held in New York on the 9th. It is estimated that upwards of 100,000 persons were present. The speeches and resolutions were all denunciatory of Mr. Lincoln, and declared Gen. M'Clellan to be the only man capable of suppressing the rebellion and restoring the Union. References to General Grant's military operations met with but slight applause.

Mexico.—Advices to the 23d ult. state that the Emperor Maximilian had accepted the surrender of Uruguay. Several unimportant engagements had taken place between some bands and the troops. The sanitary condition of the army was satisfactory.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

CAPTURE OF THE GEORGIA.—The Federal steam frigate Niagara arrived in Dover Roads on Wednesday morning, having on board Captain Withycombe and 33 men belonging to the screw steamer Georgia, which was captured by the Niagara while sailing under the British flag on the 15th inst. about 20 miles off Lisbon. The capture was made by the Commodore commanding the Niagara, on the ground that the Georgia was formerly in the service of the Confederate States as the celebrated cruiser of the same name. It appears that she was sold by auction a few months ago to Mr. Edward Bates, shipowner of Liverpool, though the Government is said to have warned the public against purchasing any vessel alleged to have been owned by the Confederate Government. The Georgia left Liverpool on the 8th inst. for Lisbon, having, it is said, been chartered by the Portuguese Government for the alleged purpose of conveying passengers between that place and the Cape de Verdes or the Azores. She had been regularly fitted up for such traffic, having accommodation for 30 first-class and 20 second-class passengers. There is reason to believe that the American commodore was kept informed of the destination of the vessel, and that she had been closely watched at Liverpool. This was her first voyage under her new ownership, and her crew had all received a month's pay in advance. Nothing unusual occurred till she arrived about 20 miles of Lisbon, when the Niagara was seen waiting for her. Captain Withycombe, her commander, who is a well-known blockade runner, did not deviate from his course until brought to with a couple of shots fired across his bows. He was shortly afterwards boarded by an armed boat's crew in command of an officer of the Niagara, who requested his attendance before the commodore. He protested against the insult which had been offered to the flag under which he was sailing, and insisted that as the Georgia was a British ship engaged in legitimate and peaceable traffic, no right could exist under which his course could be arrested. Upon getting on board the Niagara, the commodore explained that it was his duty to seize the Georgia, but he wished to cause Captain Withycombe and his crew as little discomfort as possible. The ship's papers were then taken possession of, the ship herself was sent to New York, and the crew detained as prisoners till the Niagara reached Dover, when they were landed at the Sailors' Home, in order to be forwarded to Liverpool. The Niagara saluted on bringing up in the bay, a compliment which was returned by the artillery from the Castle batteries. Soon after landing the Captain and crew of the captured vessel, she steamed off in the direction of the Downs.

AMERICAN SHIPS IN BRITISH PORTS.—The Commissioners of Customs have issued a general order to the collectors at the various ports that, in pursuance of instructions from the Lords of the Treasury, "no ship of war belonging to either of the belligerent powers of North America shall be allowed to enter any of her Majesty's ports for the purpose of being dismantled or sold."

ENTICING ENGLISH SOLDIERS TO DESERT.—On Monday, at the Woolwich Police Court, a well dressed man, who gave the name of Miles Ellison, aged 40, of 10, Newcastle Street, Strand, was charged before Mr. Traill with being in the Engineers' Barracks, Woolwich, for the purpose of inducing Royal Engineers to desert into the American army. Colour-Sergeant Wright said that the prisoner was on that morning discovered sleeping in the barracks with the other soldiers, and on investigating the matter there was reason to think he was there for the object of enticing men to desert for the American army. The prisoner arrived at the barracks on Friday, and during his stay there the American question had been continually under discussion. Henry Williamson, a private in the Royal Engineers, said that when he woke on Sunday morning he was surprised to find the prisoner sleeping next to him. The prisoner had taken men out of the barracks to publichouses and treated them. George Farnall, another Royal Engineer, said that on the previous Sunday he was in the barrack-room, and heard the prisoner in conversation with the persons present on the American question. He heard some Sappers say they would like to go out to America, if they were free from the English army. James Neale, another Royal Engineer, said he met with the prisoner at a public-house, and the latter induced him to take him to the barracks and allow him to occupy any spare bed. On the previous evening the prisoner was talking on the American question to him in the barrack-room. The witness appeared very unwilling to say what the prisoner said. On being threatened with commitment for not answering the magistrate's questions, he acknowledged that the prisoner had asked him if he would like to join the American army, but would not tell more than that he had expressed a conditional wish to go. Mr. Traill ordered the witness's sergeant to report his conduct to his commanding officer, remarking that an English soldier ought to be ashamed to express a wish to join the American army. A constable said the address given by the prisoner was false, and a clerk to Messrs. Hutton and Co., wholesale Berlin wool and trimming manufacturers in Newgate Street, identified the prisoner as having absconded in May with 8*l*. worth of samples intrusted to him as a traveller to the house. Mr. Traill said he would remand the prisoner till Saturday, and if the charge of tampering with the allegiance of the soldiers was fully established, he should commit him for a long term of imprisonment.

WESTMINSTER BRIDGE.—On Tuesday, by order of the Chief Commissioner of Works, preparations were made to complete the approaches to Westminster Bridge, and the last portion of the houses required for that purpose in Bridge Street, Parliament Street, and New Palace Yard, including Fendall's Hotel, will forthwith be pulled down. The Chief Commissioner of Police, acting under the provisions of the new Act for the regulation of metropolitan traffic, finding that the passage of heavy vehicles along the tramways in the centre of the bridge impedes the traffic, has placed police constables at either end to compel all heavy vehicles to cross the bridge at the sides next the footways, the centre of the bridge being reserved for light carriages and equestrians.

DWELLINGS FOR THE LABOURING CLASSES.—The efforts which have been making for some time past to improve the domestic condition of the working classes of the metropolis, are rapidly effecting a great change in various districts of the city and suburbs. The corporation of the city of London has recently set apart a valuable plot of ground near Farringdon Road, Clerkenwell, and voted 120,000*l*. towards the erection of houses expressly for working men and their families; Miss Burdett Coutts has lately expended about 50,000*l*. for a similar purpose in Bethnal Green; Lord Stanley and his co-trustees have devoted upwards of 20,000*l*. of the munificent gift of Mr. George Peabody to the erection of a substantial and commodious block of houses in the heart of Spitalfields, and are building others on a much larger scale at Islington; and the company in the city, established by Alderman Waterlow, and of which Lord Stanley is chairman, has raised upwards of 30,000*l*. for a like object. The houses erected by Miss Coutts at Columbia Square, Bethnal Green, afford by far the largest amount of accommodation, as they are the most imposing in appearance of any in London. They consist of four blocks, each five stories high, and form a square, with a large and commodious play-ground in the centre. There are in all 189 separate tenements, accessible by common entrances and stairs, and inhabited at present by 705 persons, of whom 417 are adults and 288 children. They are fitted up with every domestic convenience, and with a proper regard to ventilation and drainage. The rents vary, according to the number of rooms, from 5*s*. 6*d*. to 2*s*. a-week, and produce a gross annual sum of about 1800*l*. Of the present occupants 49 are porters and 46 labourers. The rest in smaller numbers are for the most part woodcarvers, turners, cabinetmakers, carpenters, corkcutters, clerks, weavers, stonemasons, harnessmakers, compositors, and bookbinders. In the centre of the playground is a clock-tower with tapering spire, and surrounded by flowering plants well tended. Flowers and creeping plants adorn most of the windows of the occupants, and the whole place has an air of cheerfulness and comfort, in marked contrast with the squalor and poverty of some parts of the surrounding neighbourhood. The Peabody block is situated in Commercial Street, Spitalfields, and is built on the same plan as those of Miss Coutts. It was opened in February last, and has from the first been fully occupied. It gives accommodation to 231 persons, including 53 men, 56 women, and 122 children; the number of rooms being 126. The site selected for the next series of buildings which the trustees of Mr. Peabody are about to erect, and which will be three times as large as that in Spitalfields, is in Greenman's Lane, Lower Road, Islington. Alderman Waterlow's company are expending 3200*l*. in improved dwellings in Redcross Street, Southwark, for 16 families, with two shops and basements, at a gross rental of 440*l*.; 7200*l*. in Brewhouse Lane, Wapping, for 60 families, at a rental of 850*l*.; 14,200*l*. in Old St. Pancras Road, for 100 families, at a rental of 1602*l*.; and 3230*l*. in King's Cross Road, Bagnigge Wells, for 20 families, at a rental of 382*l*.

INCREASING VALUE OF LAND IN THE CITY.—We stated last week that Weigh House Chapel, on Fish Street Hill, is about to be removed to make way for one of the new railways. As a proof of the present value of land in the city it is said that the railway company has offered for the small plot of freehold on which the chapel stands, and which 30 years ago cost 7000*l*., the sum of 95,000*l*., besides compensating Mr. Binney, the minister. A building has been erected in the present year in the neighbourhood of the Mansion House, on ground bought for the purpose, at the enormous rate of 1,800,000*l*. the statute acre; and two freehold houses in Old Broad Street, near Gresham House, were sold by auction on Thursday last for 23,500*l*., being at the rate of 300,000*l*. per acre, or 560*l*. per foot frontage. It is also said that the Grocers' Company have offered 40,000*l*. for the little chapel in the Poultry belonging to a congregation of Independents.

FORESTERS' FETE AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—The great annual fête of the Foresters took place on Tuesday at the Crystal Palace, but, owing to the wet weather, was not nearly so numerously attended as on preceding occasions, when from 70,000 to 80,000 persons have been present. In spite of the continuous rain, however, at an early hour in the morning the roads leading to Sydenham were alive with four-horse vans, filled with Foresters and their friends, while the railway stations were crowded. About 46,000 persons attended, a large proportion of them wearing the Robin Hood costume, while nearly all wore the regalia of the order. The amusements on account of the rain were necessarily confined to the interior of the building until late in the afternoon, when some games took place on the lawn. The weather was too stormy to allow Mr. Coxwell to make his promised balloon ascent. To accommodate the many thousands of visitors who had purchased tickets beforehand, and were unable to make use of them, the directors of the Palace agreed to allow the tickets for Tuesday to be made available on Monday next, when the fête of the London Gymnastic Society, the French excursion, Mr. Coxwell's balloon ascent, and other entertainments will take place.

THUNDERSTORM.—On Sunday morning, between 9 and 10 o'clock, London was visited by a storm of thunder, lightning, and rain, which, with a short intermission, lasted until 1 o'clock. A house in Bell's Court, Golden Lane, and another at Wandsworth, were struck by lightning. A barge moored off Vauxhall was also struck, the stern was split open, and a man on board injured. At Chelsea, Richmond, Isleworth, and other places, numbers of trees were injured, but it has not been ascertained that any serious damage was sustained.

THE INCENDIARY FIRE AT PADDINGTON.—On Friday the police reported that they could obtain no further evidence to implicate the servant girl in the recent fire at the Artesian Saw Mills, and the girl was accordingly discharged.

THE MURDER OF MR. BRIGGS.—On Sunday afternoon a report was received from Inspector Tanner, the head of the detective police at Scotland Yard, stating that he had safely arrived by the City of Manchester at New York, in company with Sergeant Clarke, of the detective police, and the two witnesses who went out for the purpose of identifying the supposed murderer Müller. Chief Inspector Tanner, on his arrival in New York, put himself in communication with the Government and police authorities, and received from them every possible assistance. The most complete arrangements have been made to effect Müller's capture on the arrival of the Victoria, a special steam vessel being kept in readiness, with steam up night and day, to start the moment the Victoria is sighted, in order that the pilot-boat may be anticipated, lest by any means information should reach Müller that the officers of justice are on his track—it being feared that he might in desperation seek by suicide to evade justice. Inspector Kerrissey, who followed with the second warrant in the City of Cork steamer, had arrived out safely. The adjourned inquest was resumed on Monday, when several of the acquaintances and countrymen of Müller were examined, and gave their evidence as to his showing them a chain and a ring, and selling the pawn-ticket to one of them. On the whole, however, no new light was thrown upon the case. The inquest was further adjourned till the 8th of September, by which time it is expected that Müller himself, as well as the witnesses who have gone to New York to identify him, will be present.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths registered in London in the week that ended Saturday, August 20, were 1451. The average number in the corresponding week of the ten years 1854-63, corrected for increase of population was 1364. The present return is therefore 87 above the average. During the week there were of 1048 boys and 903 girls, in all 1951 children, registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1842.

Provincial.

ABERYSTWITH.—On Friday the Montgomeryshire and Cardiganshire Volunteers assembled in this town for battalion drill. A spirit of rivalry has for some time existed between the 2d and 3d (Welsh) companies, and as the Montgomeryshire men were marching to the railway station on their return to some members of these companies threw down their rifles and commenced a fight. With some difficulty they were separated, and Captain Johns, of the 3d company, succeeded in getting his men into line. Having done so, with sword in hand he approached the offenders and administered a sharp rebuke. He was very badly received, a number of persons in both companies rushing out of the ranks and beginning another struggle, in which Captain Johns was struck over the eye, drawing blood. Major Drew interposed and contrived to quell the disturbance. The greatest excitement prevailed in the town, and it was with a feeling of relief that the inhabitants saw the volunteers take their departure.

BANBURY.—On Sunday morning Mr. Gulliver, of Swalcliffe Paddocks, near this town, the well-known breeder of racing stock, sustained a severe loss by the thunder storm. The lightning killed four valuable colts and a brood mare, and seriously injured some other animals. One mare is paralysed, and other is still suffering from partial paralysis, the lightning having apparently affected their brains. Redemption, the well-known brood mare, whose stock has always commanded high prices, has sustained a fracture of the near fore-leg, and to add to the misfortune, she is so engine at the time the driver, stoker, pilot, and the son of Mr. Walker, of the Barton station. Seeing that destruction was almost inevitable, the driver jumped off and escaped. The stoker followed, but was seriously injured about the head and face. Mr. Walker placed his foot on the step of the engine, and was hurled down the bank with little injury to himself, though his clothes were torn into shreds. The pilot followed him, but was hurled into the river among large stones, and was much injured. The collision which immediately followed was terrific. The engine dashed several of the coal trucks into fragments, and mounting the remains of the break van of the coal train, stood on end. The tender also turned over on end, and the break van was smashed to atoms. A saloon carriage and a third-class carriage were also broken to pieces. The passengers, of whom there were nearly 100, were almost all injured, but no lives were lost, and it is hoped that death will not ensue from any of the injuries received. Those most seriously hurt are Mr. Fairburn, of Bristol, who sustained a concussion of the brain; Mr. Beavan, of Hereford; Mr. Shaw, of Holmer; Miss Emma Gee, of Worcester (with serious injuries); Mr. Choute, of Worcester; Mrs. Hartland, of Ledbury; Mr. Beavan, of Grosmont; Mrs. Hapton, of Hereford; Miss Rosa Thomson, of Malvern; Mr. C. F. Jones and Mrs. Steward, of Worcester. Six medical men were without delay summoned to the assistance of the injured persons, who were all sent to their homes, except the guard and stoker, who were conveyed to Hereford Infirmary. The passengers complain of the treatment received from the railway officials at Pontypool Road and especially of the apathy of the managers of the refreshment room there, who refused to supply warm water for the injured when required. Complaint is also made that no arrangements had been made at Worcester for the removal of the injured persons when they arrived by train at 1 o'clock in the morning. The loss to the company will be very serious.

Accident in the Liverpool Tunnel.—An accident, which might have been attended with fatal results, took place in the Waterloo tunnel on the London and North-Western Railway at Liverpool, on Monday night. Eleven workmen were proceeding with a truck through the tunnel to commence work on the line, when the truck came in collision with a goods waggon which had been left standing in the tunnel, without any light to warn advancing trains. The men were thrown off the truck and severely injured, but they are all likely to recover.

Law.

Central Criminal Court.—Threatening Letters.—Robert Ward, a respectably-dressed man of 50, was indicted for feloniously sending a letter to Edward Lloyd, threatening to murder him. The prosecutor is a draper in Shoreditch, employing upwards of 50 persons, and the prisoner, whom he had known for about 15 years, was formerly in his service as shopwalker, but left him in 1859. On his leaving, the prosecutor put a person named Gadd, already in his employment, into the vacant place of shopwalker. About six months ago the prisoner again applied to enter his service, alleging that he had been out of a situation for 12 months, that brokers were in his house in the possession of his furniture for rent in arrear, and that he was in great distress. Upon that the prosecutor took him into his employment as a buyer, but the prisoner again left him in April last, assigning as a reason that he wanted to better his condition. The prisoner being at that time indebted to him was asked by the prosecutor to pay. He wrote some letters in reply, but did not pay, and the prosecutor at length put the matter into the hands of his solicitor, though with no better result. On the 14th July the prosecutor received by post a letter in, he believed, the handwriting of the prisoner, but feigned, It was dated on the previous day, and was as follows:—"Mr. Lloyd,—Look out for next Saturday night, you Welsh ——. I shall put a stop to your life and serve you in the same way as I did old Briggs on Saturday night; also old Gadd. Yours, the Man that Means to Murder You." Mr. Gadd and another witness were also of opinion that the latter was in the prisoner's handwriting, with which they were familiar. It was a curious incident in the case that after the receipt of that missive by the prosecutor the prisoner was arrested on suspicion of being the murderer of Mr. Briggs, but was eventually released on inquiry, the police being convinced that he was not the man. The defence was that the threatening letter was not in the handwriting of the prisoner. His counsel also suggested that it was a piece of mere vulgar abuse, and was not a threat within the meaning of the Act. He admitted, at the same time, that it was a disgraceful production if the prisoner had any ill-feeling against Mr. Lloyd, and still more disgraceful if he had no such feeling. The jury, after a few minutes' deliberation, found the prisoner guilty of sending the letter, but recommended him to mercy, believing that he did not intend to execute the threat. Mr. Lloyd, the prosecutor, also said he did not think the prisoner intended to carry his threat into execution. He had a wife with 10 or 11 children depending entirely on him. Mr. Justice Byles, in passing sentence, addressed the prisoner, and said—"The jury have found you guilty of sending and delivering a letter threatening to kill and murder your employer. I have no doubt that when you wrote that letter or caused it to be written you had no notion of the gravity of the offence. Nobody could live in this country if such letters were allowed to pass with impunity. It is a very serious offence. I was under the impression until this moment that your offence was committed after the 25th July, for after that day for offences of this description I have now by the wisdom of the Legislature no power to pronounce a sentence of penal servitude for less than five years. Fortunately for you, however, the letter in question was written on the 13th and received on that day or the 14th July, and I therefore I have power to mitigate your sentence to some extent, but that sentence must be one of penal servitude; and, giving full effect to the recommendation of the jury and of the prosecutor, as an example to others, I cannot be otherwise than pronounce a sentence of penal servitude for three years."

Outdoor produce, though not yet abundant, is improving in quality; prices, however, for some things continue high. Cherries, Gooseberries, and Strawberries, are all but over. Of Grapes and Pine Apples there is still a good supply. Currants are nearly over. Foreign goods comprise Apricots, Greengage Plums, and West India Pine Apples, all of which are abundant and cheap. Kent Filberts fetch from 65s. to 65s. per 100 lbs; French kinds realise 32s. 6d. to 35s. per 100 lbs. New Walnuts are just coming into market, and will be plentiful. Potatos from Yorkshire and the midland counties are abundant. Peas are scarce. Flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Heaths, Pelargoniums, Mignonette, and Roses.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Aug. 22.

The number of Beasts is nearly as large as on Monday last. Choice qualities are still scarce, and are readily disposed of at fully late rates. Trade is slow for inferior, and a clearance cannot be effected. The supply of Sheep and Lambs is about the same as last week. The demand for Sheep is good, and in some instances higher prices are obtained. Trade is still bad for Lambs. From Germany and Holland there are 2400 Beasts, 1065 Sheep, 335 Calves, and 50 Pigs; from Spain, 106 Beasts; from Ireland, 280; and 2780 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

Of Sheep and Lambs the supply is not so large as on this day week, but the demand is slow at about Monday's values. Best descriptions of Calves made 2d. per stone advance. Pork trade is also about 2d. per stone higher. The foreign arrivals are 640 Beasts, 2480 Sheep, and 500 Calves from Germany and Holland.

MARK LANE.—Monday, Aug. 22.

There was a fair supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market, consisting mostly of the new crop, which was all cleared at the rates of this day se'nnight. In foreign very little business was transacted, and we do not alter our quotations. Barley, Beans, and Peas, brought last week's rates, but Oats were 6d. per qr. dearer. Flour was unaltered in value. There were about 400 qrs. of new White Mustard Seed at market, quality mostly good, but being held beyond the views of the trade, no sales had taken place at a late hour.

FRIDAY, Aug. 26.

The weather during the past week has been less settled than of late. Some quantity of rain fell between Sunday and Tuesday afternoon, which does not appear to have been general; since then it has been fine. The Wheat trade throughout the country has shown more tone, and prices have been maintained, but business was not extensive; Liverpool and some of the Scotch markets quote a slight improvement in the value of Wheat. Flour remains a slow sale. Spring Corn of all descriptions sells readily at the last advance, the consumption being large. Since Friday last 24 vessels have been reported off the coast. A moderate business has been done in floating cargoes; there was a little more inquiry for Wheat, and prices for this article have recovered a trifle. Barley was less inquired after. Paris, Aug. 25.—The trade is very quiet, at a further decline of about 1s. per 280 lbs The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 31s. 3d. per 280 lbs. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 29,550 cwts. The transactions in Wheat have been very limited, and prices have declined 6d. to 1s. per 480 lbs. The arrivals of grain and Flour, both English and foreign, during the week have been short, with the exception of Oats, of which we have a fair supply from abroad There was a moderate attendance at market this morning; the little English Wheat on offer was taken at Monday's quotations, and the few sales made of foreign were upon that day's terms. Spring corn of all descriptions was firm at late rates.

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 23.—With a very fair attendance of both local and country buyers at this morning's market, Wheat has found rather a better inquiry than of late, and some descriptions, such as amber and spring, may be quoted 1d. dearer than on Friday last. Flour exhibits no improvement either in demand or value. Indian Corn is held pretty firmly, but the demand is quite in retail at about previous rates. Oats and Oatmeal steady. Beans scarce and fully as dear. Peas and Barley in good consumptive request at former prices. The market closes with some degree of firmness.

FRIDAY, Aug. 26.—The market is moderately attended. Wheat in fair demand at Tuesday's prices. Flour quiet, but unchanged in value. Indian Corn more plentifully offered, and 30s. is the top price for mixed American. Beans steady. Oats and Oatmeal quiet, but prices keep steady.

The Furnishing of Bed Rooms.

HEAL AND SON have observed for some time that it would be advantageous to their customers to see a much larger selection of BED-ROOM FURNITURE than is usually displayed, and that to judge properly of the style and effect of different descriptions of Furniture, it is necessary that each description should be placed in separate rooms. They have, therefore, erected large and additional Show Rooms, by which they are enabled not only to extend their show of Iron, Brass, and Wood Bedsteads and Bed Room Furniture, beyond what they believe has ever been attempted, but also to provide several small rooms for the purpose of keeping complete suites of Bed Room Furniture in the different stones.

Japanned Deal Goods may be seen in complete suites of three different colours, some of them light and ornamental, and others of a plainer description. Suites of Stained Deal Gothic Furniture, Polished Deal, Oak, and Walnut, are also set apart in separate rooms, so that customers are able to see the effect as it would appear in their own rooms. A Suite of very superior Gothic Oak Furniture will generally be kept in stock, and from time to time new and good Furniture in various woods will be added.

Bed Furnitures are fitted to the Bedsteads in large numbers, so that a complete assortment may be seen, and the effect of any particular pattern ascertained as it would appear on the Bedstead.

A very large stock of Bedding (HEAL & SON's original manufacture) placed on the Bedsteads.

The stock of Mahogany goods for the better Bed Rooms, Japanned Goods for plain and Servant's use, is very greatly increased. The entire Stock is arranged in eight rooms, six galleries (each 100 feet long), and two large ground floors, the whole forming as complete an assortment of Bed Room Furniture as they think possibly be desired.

Every attention is paid to the manufacture of the Cabinet Goods, and they have just erected large Workshops on the premises for the purpose, that the manufacture may be under their own immediate care.

Their Bedding trade receives their constant and personal attention, every article being made on the Premises.

They particularly call attention to their Patent Spring Mattress, the Sommier Elastique Portatif. It is portable, durable, and cheaper and lower in price than the old Spring Mattress.

HEAL & SON'S ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of Bedsteads, Bedding, and Bed Room Furniture sent free by Post.

News of the Week.

THE accounts from the United States, though still undecisive, continue to show unabated energy in the prosecution of the campaign. During the night of the 13th ult., General GRANT transferred two of his corps to the north bank of the James River, and obtained a position within six miles of Richmond. After this operation he occupied Dutch Gap, defeating a force of Confederates, but the latter having subsequently been reinforced drove back the Federals, whose loss is said to have been upwards of 1000 men. It was at first supposed that this movement was intended to protect the engineering operations at Dutch Gap, where General BUTLER is constructing a canal to enable the Federal gun-boats to pass up the James River without encountering the formidable batteries below Drury's Bluff; but the real object of the movement has not yet been developed. On the 19th, the 5th corps of GRANT'S army took up a position on the Weldon Railroad, where they were surprised by the Confederates and driven back with the loss of 3000 men. The Federals were subsequently reinforced and recovered the lost ground, but as the fighting continued, General GRANT is said to have recalled his troops from the north bank of the James River. Meanwhile General SHERIDAN, who had moved up the Shenandoah Valley to check the Confederate movements in that quarter under General EARLY, was obliged by the arrival of Confederate reinforcements to retreat to Winchester, where he was attacked and routed by Gen. BRECKENRIDGE. It is said that he subsequently fled to Harper's Ferry, and that his waggon train crossed the Potomac on the evening of the 19th. This reverse, coupled with General EARLY'S advance northward, has created much excitement in Maryland, which had already been alarmed by the report that General LEE was making preparations for another invasion of the North in force. From Atlanta we learn that General SHERMAN was rapidly completing his preparations for the bombardment of the city, but General HOOD was known to have received heavy reinforcements, and there were indications that he was likely to assume the offensive. The Confederate General WHEELER attacked the town of Dalton on the 14th, and two days afterwards had a severe engagement with General STEADMAN at Graysville, in which the latter was wounded, but the result of the action is not stated. General BEAUREGARD with 20,000 men has arrived at Atlanta; but it is not known whether his movements are for the reinforcement of HOOD, or for the defence of Mobile. Despatches from Mobile announce that a battle between Fort Morgan and the Federal fleet had been in progress for several days, and that the Confederate commander had refused Admiral FARRAGUT'S summons to surrender, stating that he had the requisite forces as well as provisions for six months, and would hold out to the last extremity. A great Peace Convention has been held at Syracuse, at which resolutions were adopted denouncing Mr. LINCOLN, and appealing to the people to unite in efforts to bring about an armistice and a convention of the States. A similar meeting has been held at Springfield, in Illinois, and several of the Northern journals confidently predict that the peace delegates will control the Chicago Convention. The Confederate cruiser Tallahassee has been ordered away from Halifax by Admiral HOPE, and has sailed in an easterly direction, pursued by two Federal gunboats.

The peace Conference at Vienna, which was to have resumed its sittings on Monday, has been again adjourned, in consequence, it is supposed, of the announcement of the Danish Ministers to the Folkething that their Plenipotentiaries would be instructed to make an effort to recover the north of Schleswig for Denmark. The Prussian official journals refer to this announcement in terms which show that the German Powers will make no concessions, and they significantly add that until the definitive conclusion of peace the question of the withdrawal of the Prussian troops from Jutland and the Duchies cannot even be raised as a subject of discussion.

Accounts from Geneva state that the Federal Council have declared the election of M. CHENEVIERE to be valid. Tranquillity however is not yet restored. The people have not resumed their occupations, and fresh arrests have been made among the adherents of both parties, M. FONTANEL, the former State Councillor, being among the number. In consequence of the excited state of the city, the Federal Commissioners have ordered the postponement of the September fêtes, and the removal of the arsenal from St. Gervais, while a third battalion has been despatched from Berne in support of their authority.

Their Royal Highnesses will travel by the Deeside Railway to Ferryhill, and proceed thence by special train to Dundee, where they will embark in the Royal yacht Osborne for Copenhagen, accompanied by the Earl and Countess Spencer, and the Countess De Grey and Ripon. The Aurora, screw frigate, Captain Sir Francis M'Clintock, will escort their Royal Highnesses to the Baltic. It is said that after their visit to Copenhagen the Prince and Princess will visit Stockholm, St. Petersburg, and Paris. On Thursday week the Prince was successful in bringing down two stags in the Abergeldie woods while on a deer-stalking expedition. In the afternoon the Princess and the Princess Mary of Cambridge walked up to the wood to see the stags. In the evening the animals were shown in front of the castle, and there was a torchlight dance in the open air to the music of the bagpipes. Friday being the anniversary of the birthday of the Prince Consort, the tenantry were invited to meet the Prince of Wales at the obelisk erected by them to the memory of his Royal Highness. Here they were each served with a glass of spirits, which was drunk in silence. In the afternoon his Royal Highness went to Glengelder, deer-stalking, but was not so successful as on the previous day. Princess Mary of Cambridge left Abergeldie for London, the Princess of Wales accompanying her as far as Aboyne. Her Royal Highness was joined on her way south by the Duke of Cambridge, who had been on a visit to the Earl of Dalhousie. On Saturday, the Prince and Princess took a long drive to Donside, passing by Corndavon Lodge and Holmsdale to Lochbuig. Their Royal Highnesses then took ponies and rode by Larmagauld, to Sir Charles Forbes's shooting quarters at Corgarff. At this point carriages were in waiting, and their Royal Highnesses proceeded down Donside by Skellater, Invernan, and Candacraig to Castle Newe, where they took luncheon with Mr. and Mrs. Charles Forbes. After a stroll through the grounds around the castle, the Royal party started for home, and passing Blelack and Ballater, reached Abergeldie in the evening. On Sunday the Prince and Princess attended Divine service in the parish church of Crathie. The Rev. Dr. Norman M'Leod, of Glasgow, officiated.

DEPARTURE OF PRINCE AND PRINCESS LOUIS OF HESSE.—On Saturday afternoon their Royal Highnesses Prince and Princess Louis of Hesse, with their infant daughter, Princess Victoria, left Windsor Castle for Gravesend, where they embarked in the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert for Flushing. At that port the Royal travellers embarked in the Alberta, and proceeded to Dordrecht. The embarcation at Gravesend was witnessed by crowds of spectators, and the Coastguard cutters and other vessels were dressed in colours. Professor Priestley, of King's College, has been appointed to attend the Princess at Darmstadt in her approaching confinement, which is expected to take place about the end of next month.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF SAXE-COBURG landed at Dover on Saturday afternoon, and proceeded to Windsor on a visit to the Queen by the South-Eastern and South-Western Railways. Their Royal Highnesses accompanied her Majesty to Balmoral on Monday evening.

He arrived at Berlin on Monday evening, and has since proceeded to Potsdam, where he will reside in the new palace of the Crown Prince and Princess.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—At the Privy Council at Windsor on Saturday it was ordered that Parliament, which stood prorogued to Thursday, the 13th October, be further prorogued to Friday, the 11th November.

THE NAVY.—The recent Admiralty regulations by which the white ensign becomes the flag of the royal navy, the blue the flag of the royal naval reserve, and the red the flag of the mercantile marine, came into operation on the 1st inst. The white ensign was accordingly hoisted on Thursday by all her Majesty's ships in the home ports.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Crown Prince Humbert of Italy arrived at the Palais Royal on Saturday, and was met at the railway station by his sister, Princess Clotilde, and Prince Napoleon. On Sunday he went to St. Cloud, where the Emperor and Empress had a dinner in his honour, at which the Princess Matilde was present. On Monday the Emperor, accompanied by the Prince Imperial, Prince Humbert, and Prince Napoleon, left St. Cloud for the camp at Châlons, where they were joined in the evening by General von Roon, the Prussian Minister of War, who had been invited by the Emperor to visit the camp. Prince Humbert will remain at Châlons 11 days, and afterwards return with the Emperor to Paris. Prince Murat and his family have embarked at Toulon in the steam frigate Cacique, on a visit to the Holy Land. An Imperial decree was signed at Châlons on Thursday appointing the Duke of Magenta Governor of Algeria. Another decree provides for the reorganisation of the administrative staff of the colony. Senator Vaisse died suddenly at Lyons on the 29th ult. His abilities and firmness rendered valuable service to the Emperor after the coup d'état, and he has since 1853 administered with great tact the affairs of Lyons, the most revolutionary city in France. The Bulletin des Lois publishes two decrees, the first maintaining and confirming in favour of the Duke of Hamilton, the hereditary title of Duke de Châtelherault, created by Henry II., King of France, in favour of James Hamilton, Earl of Arran; the second conceding to Count de Talleyrand Périgord, and his direct legitimate descendants, in the male line by order of primogeniture, the title of Duke de Montmorency, which became extinct in the person of his maternal uncle, who died without issue in 1862. The recent speech of Count de Persigny is still the subject of much private discussion, but the papers generally, in the present condition of the press, touch but lightly on his designation of the Emperor as "the founder of liberty in France," and for the most part confine their criticisms to his expositions of the history of England. In former speeches he discussed the origin of the House of Hanover. In this last speech he dealt with the Conquest, and endeavoured to show that up to the present day the Anglo Saxon race labours under the yoke of the Norman conquerors, who exclusively monopolise power and freedom. The following passage will suffice to give an idea of the originality of his views on the subject of English liberty:—

"There is in England a whole political class, scattered all over the surface of the country, which being a traditional heir to the Conquest, possesses, since the days of William the Conqueror, all existing means of influence, which administers the counties, which renders justice, which collects taxes, secures public order; and, in a word, enjoys all the prerogatives which, in France, belong to the administrative hierarchy."

The Opinion National publishes an Irish manifesto, signed by The O'Donoghue, M.P., and Mr. John Martin, in the name of the Irish National League. It revives the numerous grievances of Ireland, and deplores the condition to which the country has been reduced under English misrule. The following extracts will indicate the general tone of the document:—

"The ruin of the national independence has brought about in Ireland, as everywhere else, the decay of public spirit, of genius, of the arts, of literature and industry. Moreover, the foreign government which is imposed upon us is the source of abuses and suffering to be seen nowhere but in Ireland. Ireland during the last 63 years, even in those called the famine years, has always produced more corn, more cattle, and other alimentary substances, than its whole population could consume. However, like Hindostan, she is subject to the visitation of famine, and whilst officially she is termed an integral part of the richest of all empires, her population is the poorest in Christendom . . . Ireland, which under the English government is the poorest country in Europe, has, with a few insignificant exceptions, to bear the same imposts as England, the richest country of Europe. The proportion of financial duties which weigh upon the two countries is partly shown in a parliamentary report for the year 1863. This report shows that the amount of imposts which Great Britain contributes to the revenues of the British empire is upon the basis of 20 per cent. for that portion of the United Kingdom, whilst for Ireland the proportion is 31¼ per cent. After having provided for all her local expenses, Ireland is still obliged to send annually to England, as the amount of the imposts due from her, three million pounds sterling for the expenses of the empire, that is to say, of England. About five million pounds sterling—the revenues of Irish estates—are sent annually to England to the proprietors of those estates who reside there, and of which nothing returns to Ireland. Since the 'Union' England, having seized upon our industry and our commerce, receives from Ireland considerable sums in exchange for the manufactures which she exports into the country, and which would be all manufactured in Ireland were Ireland self-governed. . . . . It is said we have a free press. It is true that in ordinary times the English Government tolerates much from us in this respect, through a haughty contempt of a people disarmed, disorganised, and which has virtually lost its franchise. When, however, as in 1848, there is danger that the press will provoke the Irish people to some manly effort, editors of journals can be and are condemned as guilty of treason by means of packed juries. They are loaded with chains and transported for having expressed the sentiments which five-sixths of their fellow-citizens entertain. We will not add any commentary to this simple exposition. But we profit by this occasion to congratulate the French people on being subject to none of the oppressions and calamities we have specified. May Divine Providence ever preserve to France her national liberty and power, and spare her the sufferings which afflict Ireland beneath a government adorned with the name of a free constitution."

The trial of Latour and Audouy for the murder of M. Bugad de Lassalle, of the Chateau de Baillard, and his three servants, terminated on Saturday at St. Foix, in the Basses Pyrenées. The trial lasted more than a week. There was strong presumption against both prisoners, one of whom was a baker, and the other a mountebank, but little that in England would be called evidence. The most important points against Latour were, that he had been dodging about the chateau some time before the crime was committed, and that in the bed of one of the victims was found a pocket comb, which was believed to be his. A number of witnesses were examined as to this comb. Many said that they had seen one like it in Latour's possession, but could not swear to its identity. It was alleged that after the murder he had been in possession of large sums of money, but it was not denied that he had engaged in smuggling. The charges against Audouy rested on two points—one, that he had announced the commission of the crime at Foix, 25 miles off, at a time when it had not been discovered in the neighbourhood; and had, moreover, been seen on the road. The second point was that he had asked a laundress to wash some of his clothes which were soaked in blood. The public prosecutor assumed that Latour had plotted the crime, and retained Audouy, whose strength was immense, to assist him in carrying it out. The Court found them both guilty. Latour was condemned to death, and Audouy to hard labour for life. On hearing the sentence Latour shouted "Vive l'Empereur!" proclaimed his innocence, and called down "everlasting infamy" on the judges and jury. Complaints have been general all through France of the effects of the excessive drought. The grass has been literally burnt up, the supply of water has been running short in the wells and springs, and man and beast have been alike suffering. On Wednesday the 24th ult. the inhabitants of Chalons-sur-Saone were much astonished to see the sun, which was shining brightly, suddenly obscured by a cloud of insects which intercepted its rays. The inhabitants began to shower water over them, and the ground and the towers of the cathedral were quickly covered. They proved to be winged ants, very rare in France, but frequently seen in hot countries. A change of weather was predicted by some old people, and the prediction was speedily verified by a fall of rain.

ALGERIA.—Advices from Algiers state that the expedition sent out against the assassins of M. Mollard Eginelles has been instructed to drive the insurgent population from Tell. Fresh fires have taken place in the forests of the Province of Constantine.

SPAIN.—The Contemporaneo and the Discussion publish articles demanding the dissolution of the Chamber of Deputies. The Opposition journals assert that Señores Salverria and Canovas have resigned. All these rumours are at present, however, unfounded. Señor Frazio, the representative of the Emperor of Mexico, has arrived at Madrid, and left for La Granja. He is the bearer of letters announcing to her Majesty the accession of the Emperor Maximilian to the Mexican throne.

SWITZERLAND.—Accounts from Geneva of Thursday last state that tranquillity is not yet restored. The people have not resumed their occupations, and arrests continue to be made among the adherents of both parties. Among the latest arrests is that of M. Fontand, the former State-Councillor. The Federal Council has despatched a third battalion from Berne, and the Federal Commissioners have ordered the removal of the Arsenal from St. Gervais. The September fêtes have also been postponed. Yesterday the election of M. Cheneviere to the Council of State was declared valid by the Federal Council. Geneva was then quiet. The Committee appointed to report on the Franco-Swiss treaty has unanimously decided to recommend its ratification to the Chamber. An International Medical Conference has been recently sitting at Geneva, and has terminated in the conclusion of a convention in 10 articles, affirming the neutralisation, in time of war, of military hospitals, of the whole official medical staff and of the wounded. Twelve States only appear as contracting parties, namely, France, Baden, Belgium, Denmark, Spain, Hesse, Italy, Holland, Portugal, Prussia, Switzerland, and Wurtemburg; but the protocol having been left open, all the other Powers may accede to the convention.

DENMARK.—The Grand Duke Nicholas was expected at Copenhagen on Thursday. The steamer Slesvig has left for Lübeck to convey his Imperial Highness from that place to Copenhagen. In the sitting of the Rigsraad on Saturday the President of the Council solemnly declared that at the peace negotiations the Government would endeavour to protect the interests of the Schleswigers, both as to their national and political rights. The declaration was received with general applause by the whole Assembly. The Finance Minister had previously stated in the Folkthing that the instructions sent to the Danish plenipotentiaries at Vienna were drawn up with the object of recovering the north of Schleswig for Denmark. The Chamber then adopted the budget for extraordinary expenses by 73 to 13 votes.

BAVARIA.—Count von Bismark, who has visited Munich on his way to Baden, was engaged in discussing important negotiations with the Minister of State, Baron von Schrenck, both on Saturday and Sunday. He left on Sunday evening, and was accompanied to the railway station by Adjutant-General Baron von Tann. The official Baierische Zeitung of Saturday, in an article on the interview between the Kings of Prussia and Bavaria says:—

"We hail this meeting with joy, since it proves not only the existence of an amicable and kindred feeling, but also affords hope that the hearts of the two monarchs will be drawn together by a mutual desire to further the interests of Germany. Many a dark cloud which still overshadows the horizon may vanish before this Royal meeting. In the interviews of German Princes distrust and ill-feeling may disappear, however deeply those evils may be rooted in the minds of the people."

PRUSSIA.—Lieut.-General von Roon, the Minister of War, has left Berlin to visit the camp at Chalons, on the invitation of the Emperor of the French. The semi-official Nord-Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, in reference to a declaration of the Danish Minister of Finance made in the sitting of the Folkething on the 25th ult., says:—

"Only on the supposition of the loyalty and absence of reservation on the part of the Danish Cabinet in signing the preliminaries were the German Powers prepared to accede to the conditions of the treaty."

The Neue Preussische (Kreuz) Zeitung of Tuesday says:—

"There can be no question of a withdrawal of the troops even from Jutland, before the definitive conclusion of peace. The return of all Prussian troops from the Duchies is, therefore, far less to be expected."

The semi-official Provinzial Correspondenz of Thursday in an article on the visit of the King of Prussia to Vienna, says:—

"The Austrian and Prussian Sovereigns are desirous of maintaining true friendship towards each other as allies, being convinced that not only their own States, but the whole of Germany, will thereby be benefited, while on the other hand Austria will have no cause to regard with jealousy the increase of power obtained by Prussia through her future relations with Schleswig-Holstein. On the other hand, it will require an effort for Prussia to support Austria in the fulfilment of her mission as a German Power in the south and south-east of Europe. The settlement of the future commercial relations between Austria and Prussia cannot be supposed to depend upon the fulfilment of certain political conditions."

AUSTRIA.—The General Correspondenz of Monday says that the Conference, which was to be held on that day, has been adjourned, probably because the Danish Plenipotentiaries are still awaiting several necessary documents. The Presse says that up to the present the Conference has been occupied solely with the territorial question, and that it has been resolved to appoint a committee as soon as possible for the regulation of the frontier line. The Danish Plenipotentiaries are M. de Quaade and Colonel Kauffmann, with Baron Guldencron and Captain Bille as secretaries. The Danish financial interests are represented by State Councillor Fenger, assisted by other financiers. The Prussian Ambassador at Vienna has received a note from Count von Bismark in reference to Austria and the Zollverein. Having first discussed the expressed desire of Austria to modify her relations with the Zollverein, the Minister proceeds to state that Prussia is willing to enter upon the subject, and that negotiations can be opened at Berlin so soon as the Austrian Government is prepared to treat.

THE TYROL.—Arrests continue at Trent and Venetia. It is rumoured that the police have discovered depôts of arms, munitions, and tricoloured flags.

ITALY.—The Opinione denies the rumour that a marriage has been arranged between Prince Humbert and Princess Murat. The envoy sent to the Italian Court by the Emperor Maximilian was received by the King on Tuesday. He expressed a hope that he might strengthen the understanding existing between two peoples of the same race, whose Government was based on the national will, the basis of every free country. The King, in reply, expressed his satisfaction at receiving the Minister of the new Monarch, whom he had long esteemed. He was confident that the Emperor Maximilian would secure the happiness of his subjects by following liberal principles, and had no doubt that Italian subjects would find security and protection under the new reign. His Majesty concluded by expressing his best wishes in favour of a Sovereign whose personal qualities stood as high as his great mission. All the Ministerial journals formally contradict the rumour respecting the approaching issue of a new loan.

SICILY.—A great fire has taken place in the forest of Picuzza, a Crown domain near Palermo. The people assembled, and hastened to assist in arresting the progress of the flames.

GREECE.—An insulting letter addressed to the King by a member of the Opposition gave rise to an excited sitting of the Assembly on the 26th ult. Exasperation prevailed in the capital, and protests were signed by large numbers of persons. On Friday the Assembly expressed its indignation at the letter by a majority of 193 to 27 ; 28 members abstained from voting.

TURKEY.—The difficulties which had arisen between Turkey and Montenegro in reference to the frontier have been satisfactorily arranged by a mixed commission.

DANUBIAN PRINCIPALITIES.—A law has been published authorising the purchase by foreigners of estates in Roumania. A rural law has also been published dividing the peasants into three classes, proportionately to the number of cattle they possess. They will respectively receive about 14, 8, or 4 acres of land in Wallachia; 16, 12, or 6 acres in Moldavia; and 18, 12, or 8 acres in Bessarabia, according to the class to which they may belong. Compulsory labour is abolished. Great enthusiasm prevails throughout the country.

TUNIS.—Official advices from Tunis to the 27th ult., state that 14 tribes have made their submission, but 40 tribes are still in insurrection, and several chiefs who had manifested a wish for peace have been killed. A chief who signed conditions of peace was obliged to take refuge in Tunis. Most of the tribes demand the dismissal of the Kasnadar. It is asserted that as the Kasnadar persists in his present course of action, the Admirals of the various foreign fleets have advised the Turkish Commissioner to leave the country, in order to simplify the question and bring about a more speedy pacification.

INDIA.—A telegram from Bombay of August 9 says that Sir Charles Trevelyan recommends the introduction of the sovereign into India as a legal tender for ten rupees. The Persian Gulf telegraph cable is broken.

UNITED STATES.—On the night of the 13th two corps of Grant's army were transferred to Deep Bottom, north of the James, and on the following morning they attacked the Confederates, who retired skirmishing to within six miles of Richmond, when they were reinforced and drove back the Federals, who claim to have captured eight cannon and 500 prisoners, and assert that the Confederates left their dead and wounded on the field, including two brigades. General Grant's loss was upwards of 1000. This movement was supposed to be for the purpose of protecting General Butler, who is engaged in opening a new channel for the James River through Dutch Gap or across the Peninsula of Farries Island, to enable his gunboats to avoid the river obstructions below Drury's Bluff, which fortification, it is asserted, will be shortly attacked by the combined water and land forces. The real object of the movement, however, is not yet developed. Reconnaissances and skirmishing continue daily with considerable loss to both sides, but with no decisive results. In one of these reconnaissances Grant advanced to Fair Oaks, his right wing lying four miles from Malvern Hill towards Richmond. On the 15th the Confederates were repulsed in an attack upon Ridney, at Deep Bottom. The losses were heavy on both sides. On the 18th Warren occupied the Weldon Railroad at Reams. On the following afternoon the Confederates attacked but failed to dislodge him, On the 19th the Confederates at Petersburg shelled Grant's lines for three hours. The Federals were in readiness to repel an assault which was expected to follow, but none was made. On the same day the 5th corps of Grant's army took up a position on the Weldon Railroad, where they were surprised by the Confederates, and driven back with the loss of 3000 men. The Federals were subsequently reinforced, and recovered the lost ground. Grant's troops have since re-crossed from the north bank of the James River. Gen. Burnside has been replaced in the command of the 9th army corps, before Petersburg, by General Wilcox. Washington is filled with rumours of important movements by the armies of both Lee and Grant, which, it is declared, will shortly change the entire aspect of the campaign in Virginia. General Lee is reported to be preparing for a Northern invasion in force. The investigation of the late disaster at Petersburg was commenced on the 9th ult. under the presidency of General Hancock. General Sheridan's forces occupied Martinsburg on the 10th, and marched to attack General Early in the Shenandoah Valley. General Early evacuated Winchester on the 12th, retiring towards Strasbourg. There has been frequent skirmishing between Early's and Sheridan's forces, in one of which Sheridan's cavalry under Merritt, defeated Longstreet's cavalry at Front Royal, and took 300 prisoners. On the 18th a train of 70 waggons and 300 mules for Sheridan, with its guard of 150 men, were captured by Mosby near Berryville. On the 15th Sheridan entered Strasbourg, and learnt that Early had been reinforced and was advancing. Sheridan then retreated to Winchester, and thence to Berryville. His rear was attacked and routed at Winchester by Breckinridge on the 17th, with the loss of 300 men. On the 20th there were reports, viâ Philadelphia, of his defeat and retreat to Harper's Ferry. His waggon train is asserted to have crossed the Potomac during the night of the 19th, and to be now at Hagerstown in Maryland. Confederate despatches from Atlanta report that General Sherman assaulted the Confederate left on the 5th, gaining a temporary advantage, but was ultimately repulsed. Sherman unsuccessfully renewed his attempts to occupy the Macon Road on the 6th and 7th. The Federal losses upon each occasion were upwards of 500 men. The Confederate General Wheeler, operating in Sherman's rear, demanded the surrender of Dalton on the 14th, which being refused, he attacked the town. The garrison held out until aid from Chattanooga arrived on the following day, when Wheeler retired. On the 16th a severe engagement occurred at Graysville, 18 miles from Chattanooga, between the Confederate General Wheeler and General Steadman. Steadman was wounded, and Colonel Straight killed. The result of the action is not stated. The Confederates are in force at Cleveland, Tennessee. A Federal force has been sent from Chattanooga to dislodge them. Despatches of the 7th state that General Beauregard with 20,000 troops had arrived at Atlanta, but whether for the reinforcement of Hood or the defence of Mobile is unknown. Admiral Farragut's official report of the operations at Mobile on the 5th recounts that his fleet of 18 frigates and Monitors, lashed two and two together, moving in close order, ran up to Fort Morgan, and at short range poured in broadside after broadside of grape and canister, driving the artillerymen from their guns, silencing the fort and covering the passage of the fleet into the harbour, excepting the Monitor Tecumseh, which was blown up by a torpedo, and sank with nearly all on board. The vessels then separated and attacked the Confederate fleet, consisting of the ram Tennessee and the gunboats Selma, Morgan, and Gaines. The Selma was speedily captured, and the Morgan and Gaines driven into shoal water, but the Tennessee fought the whole Federal fleet for one hour and a half, and only surrendered when disabled in her rudder, and a combined movement was made by the Federals to run her down. The Federal loss is stated at 250; that of the Confederates at 300, principally prisoners captured on board the Selma and the Tennessee. The Federal ships the Hartford and Oneida were disabled, and the Philippe burnt during the action. The Federal land forces, under Federal General Granger, afterwards effected a lodgment on Dauphin Island. On the 9th, Admiral Farragut demanded the unconditional surrender of Fort Morgan. The Confederates refused, stating that it had been provisioned for six months, and strongly garrisoned, and would be held to the last extremity. Admiral Farragut then ordered an attack on the fort, which is exposed to an enfilading fire from the fleet and land forces, while Granger's forces have cut off communication with it in the rear. Two monitors and five gun boats have made a reconnaissance across the Dog River bar to within two miles of the Mobile batteries. The Richmond Whig of the 12th declares that with the reduction of Forts Gaines, Powell, and even Morgan, but a very small portion of the work before the Federals at Mobile will be accomplished, and that there will yet remain a succession of formidable earthworks upon either side of the bay, and numberless obstructions and torpedos in its bottom, for a distance of 30 miles, to be overcome and removed before the city can be reached. Hostilities by the Indians in the North-West have been renewed. Many of the settlers in Kansas have been murdered, their houses and crops burnt, and their cattle driven off. The inhabitants generally are fleeing to the towns for protection. General Blunt and Sherry, commanding on the border, are organizing a large military force to pursue and attack the Indians. Great agitation prevails in the press and among the people, and the desire for peace is increasing. The New York Herald recommends the sending of commissioners to Richmond to arrange an armistice for six months, and to call a convention of all the States to consult upon the best means of obtaining peace. The Democratic Peace Convention has assembled at Syracuse, and resolved not to support the nominee of the Chicago Convention unless a peace candidate is nominated. It further passed resolutions favouring an armistice and the calling a convention of the States, with a view to adopt a mode of reconciliation. Messrs. Vallandigham and Fernando Wood attended the Convention and made peace speeches. A Convention for a similar purpose has been held at Springfield, Illinois. Secretary Stanton has declined to appoint a commission to investigate the excessive quotas assigned to the cities of New York and Brooklyn, proposed by Governor Seymour, on the ground that it would operate to postpone the draught, and perhaps fatally delay the strengthening of the armies in the field. The Confederate privateer steamer Tallahassee has commenced operations off New York Harbour, and has already captured several vessels, including the emigrant ship Adriatic from London, the barque Tilconleon from Glasgow, the ship James Littlefield, and the pilot boat James Finch. Her officers state that since leaving Wilmington, from which port they ran the blockade, they have taken 50 vessels, of which 16 were captured within 30 hours. The Tallahassee on the 18th ran into Halifax for coals, and had obtained 300 tons when Admiral Hope ordered her away. She sailed on the 20th, steering eastward. Two Federal gunboats are in pursuit of her.

WEST INDIES.—Accounts received by the Canadian mail steamer Hibernian state that yellow fever is decimating the islands of Bermuda and Nassau. To such an extent has the epidemic spread in both islands, that the resident medical practitioners are quite unable to cope with the emergency, and all the principal army surgeons of the British troops in Canada have left for Bermuda.

MEXICO.—Advices to the 23d ult. state that the Emperor Maximilian had accepted the surrender of Uruguay. Expeditions were preparing against Monterey, Matamoras, and Victoria, in order to drive the Juarists from those places. Vidaurri held the chief power at Matamoras. Juarez had taken to flight. The naval squadron was to participate in the expedition against Matamoras, and land troops on the backs of the Rio Bravo. Acapulco had been surrounded by the force of Alvarez. General Meraga had declared for the empire, but only a few hundred of his men followed him. A large Liberal force holds Colima. The blockade of Mangenalla is not enforced.

SOUTH AMERICA.—Accounts from Buenos Ayres of July 27 state that the peace arrangement has fallen through, and hostilities have recommenced.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

THE LAST OF OLD BLACKFRIARS BRIDGE.—The demolition of Blackfriars Bridge goes on rapidly, and the structure is now a mere wreck, 9 feet in perpendicular depth, measuring from the level of the former parapets, having already disappeared. The stone and other materials are lowered into barges moored in the river at several points, and are then taken away. During the removal it has been made clear that the necessity for closing the old bridge was not decided upon a day too soon. The only wonder is that it held together so long, considering the enormous traffic to which it has been constantly subjected. In order safely to secure their object the contractors have had recourse to every practicable plan suggested by modern engineering skill, and have adopted the use of a timber "gantry" of enormous strength, which will be continued completely across the river from the Surrey to the Middlesex shore, and upon which rails are laid for a new description of "steam traveller," for lifting the masonry and removing it from its former bed. Gangs of workmen are employed day and night in fixing the piles, and up to the present time no accident has occurred to any person employed upon the works.

THE HOLBORN VALLEY VIADUCT.—In the late session an act was passed to enable the City of London to form a viaduct across the Holborn Valley, and the wine and coal duties received by the corporation were extended for a further period of 10 years, for the purpose of providing means to defray the expense of the undertaking, including the alterations in Holborn Hill and Skinner Street. The duties were continued until 1872, and are now therefore further continued until 1882. Of the duties of 12*d.* per ton on coals a sum of 4*d.* is to be taken towards paying the interest on the money obtained for the City improvements, and for the purpose of this new act. Plans have been deposited of the intended viaduct and other improvements on both sides of Holborn Hill. The last portion of Field Lane will disappear, and the City are empowered to build proper dwellings for the poorer classes. The works are to be completed in five years, and within that time all property must be purchased. Steps have already been taken to carry out these great improvements.

REMOVAL OF THE COLOSSEUM.—It is announced that the Colosseum in the Regent's Park is about to be pulled down. The necessary sanction from the Crown has been obtained for the alterations, which include the erection of a handsome crescent on the Park side, and a pantechnicon—or warehouse for storing goods, on the Albany Street side.

FRENCH EXCURSIONISTS AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—On Monday, excursion boats and trains by the South-Eastern Railway from Boulogne, by the Chatham and Dover from Calais, Arras, &c., ran to the Crystal Palace. With both of these excursions 800 or 900 persons availed themselves of this opportunity of visiting the Palace, and nothing could exceed the delight and satisfaction of the French visitors at witnessing for the first time the Palace and its contents. The great fountains were played, Mr. Coxwell made a balloon ascent, the London Gymnastic Society competed for prizes, and the band of the Coldstream Guards and that of the Musique des Sapeurs Pompiers of St. Pierre, added to the enjoyment of the day.

ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL.—On Tuesday, at a numerous meeting of the governors of this hospital, Mr. Francis Hicks was unanimously elected to the office of Treasurer, in the room of Mr. R. Baggallay, who had resigned.

MAIN DRAINAGE ANTIQUITIES.—The following antiquities, fossil remains, &c., discovered in the progress of the main drainage works, have been presented to the British Museum by the Metropolitan Board of Works:—Human cranium, of the brachycephalic type; one of the cymbicephalic type; and one of full oval type, with frontal suture persistent, as in most Frankish skulls; portions of skull and horn cores of Bos primigenius; two crania of Bos longifrons, or primeval marsh ox; scapula, portion of humerus and astragalus of Bos; portion of cranium, and of upper and lower jaws of horse; lower jaw, with one molar tooth of Elephas primigenius; [articular head of femur of ditto; portions of antler of large reindeer (Taxandus priscus); left ramus of lower jaw of bottle-nose whale (Hyperoodon bidens); portions of right and left scapulæ of two different whales; six fragments of Ammonites multipostatus (lias); Bellovacina (Woolwich sands); mass of Ostrea and Cyrena cuneiformis (pliocene); Nautilus imperialis (London clay); a plain Roman sarcophagus of Purbeck marble, three Roman leaden coffins and some fragments of pottery, found at East Ham, in Essex; two Roman horseshoes of peculiar form, a flint celt, a fragment of Samian ware, inscribed "Julius," and a number of miscellaneous fragments of Roman and mediæval pottery.

UNION OF CITY LIVINGS.—Arrangements have been completed, under the Union of Benefices Act, for the incorporation of the rectories of St. Mary, Somerset, and St. Mary, Mounthaw, of which the Rev. Dr. Stebbing is rector, with the rectories of St. Nicholas, Cole Abbey, and St. Nicholas, Olave, of which Dr. Kynaston is rector. The former livings are in the gift of the Bishop of London and the Duke of Buccleuch alternately, and the latter in the gift of the Lord Chancellor and the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's alternately. A portion of the endowment is to be applied to a church at Hoxton.

THE CRYSTAL SANITARIUM.—A Company has been formed, with Sir David Brewster as its chairman, for the purpose of bringing the climate of Madeira, as well as its accompaniments, within the reach of those whose health will not permit them to run the risk of a sea voyage. It is proposed to cover in with glass a large area of ground, and to preserve therein an equable temperature; to build residences having communication with the grounds so enclosed, and to lay out the interior in the most attractive form of landscape gardening, with the fruits and foliage suitable to a climate like Madeira. The property, which has been fully reported upon by upwards of 50 eminent physicians, consists of a mansion and park of about 140 acres, possessing all the advantages of salubrity and contiguity to the metropolis, and may now be purchased upon favourable terms. Suites of apartments and residences will be let furnished. There will be an hotel, from which the residents may have the option of being supplied, and which will also have apartments opening into the interior; the whole communicating externally with the surrounding landscape, and with sheltered walks for mild weather. The building will be strictly private to the residents. The class of persons likely to embrace the advantages of residence in such an establishment are those who are usually obliged to leave this country from September until May or June; many of whom are separated from their friends, or business occupations. The plan will also be available to many who during the greater portion of the year never stir out of their own homes, as a measure of precaution; and to numerous other individuals who will be advised to resort there during medical treatment by their own professional advisers. The capital is fixed at 250,000*l.*, in shares of 20*l.* each.

THE ENLISTMENT CASE AT WOOLWICH.—The man who was apprehended last week on the charge of enticing the soldiers at Woolwich to enlist in the Federal army was again brought up for examination on Saturday, when the evidence of some more soldiers were taken, but the charge of inciting to actual desertion was not made out. The magistrate in discharging the prisoner remarked on the bad state of discipline in the barracks, which admitted of a civilian passing the night there. The prisoner was again taken into custody on a charge of robbing his lodgings in London, and as the evidence in that case was complete, he was committed for trial.

THE GOVERNMENT CLOTHING FRAUDS.—The garrison court-martial, under the presidency of Col. Gibbon, of the Royal Artillery, has found nine soldiers guilty out of the 10 implicated in the recent robberies at the Government clothing establishment in Woolwich garrison, and have discharged the tenth. The prisoners were condemned to various terms of imprisonment—one, a corporal, to be reduced to the ranks and 56 days' imprisonment, four gunners to 84 days, and four to 112 days' imprisonment, all with hard labour. The inquiry at the Woolwich Police Court respecting the robbery of Royal Marine clothing has terminated in the discharge of the pensioner Clark, the magistrate's request for the attendance of some officer who could explain the mode in which the materials were served out to the master tailors, not having been complied with. The magistrate, under these circumstances, said that he had no alternative but to discharge the prisoner, but at the same time he felt it necessary to observe that the proceedings throughout this case exhibited a looseness of administration with regard to this Government establishment, such as he had never heard of. It was not for him to say how Government property should best be protected, but he would say that this case fully proved that a very loose state of things now prevailed.

FATAL COLLISION OF STEAMERS NEAR THE NORE.—At an early hour on the morning of the 24th ult., a collision took place between two screw steam colliers, the John Fenwick and the Amity, by which the latter was sunk, and her captain drowned. They struck near the Maplin Sands in the Swin, a few miles below the Nore, and the captain of the Amity, finding his ship sinking, ran her on the sands. Unfortunately she fell off as the tide rose, and sank in deep water. The rest of the crew got on board the John Fenwick, which remained by the wreck, but the captain, who was in the cabin at the moment arranging his papers, was carried down in the ship.

DEATH OF A CLERGYMAN'S CHILD FROM NEGLECT.—On Tuesday an adjourned inquest was held in the Finsbury Market House on the body of William Webb, five years of age, son of the Rev. S. T. Webb, recently curate of All Saints. It appeared from the evidence adduced at this and the previous sitting, that the father had been dismissed by the Rev. Mr. Hugo, the incumbent, for general misconduct, of which intemperance was admitted to form a part. His wife died in March last, and after giving the servant notice to quit, he went to Ireland on the plea of ill health, leaving four children—the eldest, a son, being only 13 years of age—for a whole month without any one to take charge of them, and with only 1*l.* 12*s.* to supply them with food. During this time the eldest daughter, who was 11 years of age, did everything connected with the domestic arrangements, but was obliged to borrow a sovereign from a lady for their support. The eldest brother sometimes washed the children. The money was all expended when the father returned home. The eldest daughter on being examined said that they had three rooms and a kitchen; that she and her sister slept with her father, and her two brothers slept with the servant girl. The medical evidence showed that the deceased had not received proper nourishment and attention, and that the other children also exhibited painful symptoms of want. Other evidence was given as to the filthy and emaciated state of the children, and one witness deposed to having heard Mr. Webb, on his return, using the most violent and brutal language towards his children, and throwing the saucepans and other articles at them. Other witnesses contradicted this statement, and on the whole the evidence as to the positive cruelty of Mr. Webb to the children while he was with them was conflicting. The jury, after a long deliberation, returned the following special verdict:—

"That William Samuel Webb, being an infant of tender age in charge of his father, died from spasm of the glottis; that improper food and the sadly neglected condition of the said child, predisposed to the disease from which he died; and that the conduct of the father is censurable."

MYSTERIOUS AFFAIR AT MILE END.—A tragedy, which is at present involved in mysterious circumstances, was brought to light in the east of London on Saturday. A man named Beckingham, a superannuated officer of the Post Office, resided at Mile End New Town with his wife and his wife's sister, but as they had not been seen for some days the neighbours broke in the doors and found the two women dead, and the man lying below the bed alive, with only his shirt on, and in a state of idiocy. The sister was kneeling with her face buried in her hands, but there were no marks of violence on either of them. The rooms were respectably furnished, and there appeared to be no want of anything except food. Beckingham, who is paralytic, and has exhibited symptoms of insanity for some time past, could give only incoherent answers to the questions addressed to him, so that nothing has yet been discovered as to the means by which the women met with their deaths. He stated however that he had not eaten anything for three days. At the inquest on Monday he was examined by the coroner, but his answers betrayed such mental imbecility that nothing could be gathered from him except the one point, that the women had not come by their death through him. The other evidence showed that the unfortunate women had drunk themselves into as imbecile a state as the man, and had given up eating altogether for the sake of drink. The inquest was ultimately adjourned in order that the stomachs might be submitted to chemical analysis, with a view to the detection of poison.

MURDER IN HATTON GARDEN.—On Sunday night a man called Henry Wilkinson, 29 years of age, a stonemason's labourer, residing at 9, Cross Street, Hatton Garden, murdered his wife, aged 28, by kicking her on the stomach. From the evidence at the Police Court on Monday, it appeared that the prisoner and his wife had for some time lived unhappily together in consequence of his jealousy. On Friday they quarrelled very seriously, but subsequently arranged their dispute and all went on quietly till Sunday, when some friends went to see them. After drinking a little they went to see their friends off by the last train on the Metropolitan Railway, where one of the friends kissed the deceased. This seemed very much to exasperate the prisoner, who abused and threatened his wife, and then struck her a fearful blow. Being afraid that he would still further ill-use her, she went home and asked the lodger to allow her to sleep with her. This request was complied with, and about midnight the prisoner went home, made use of most dreadful oaths and imprecations, broke into the lodger's room, and pulled his wife out of bed by the hair of her head. He then kicked and knocked her about, and at length kicked her in the pit of the stomach. After this kick the unfortunate woman said, "You have now given me my death blow," and immediately rolled over and died. He then carried her down into his apartment, and laid her dead by the side of her sleeping children, one of them being eight, the other four years old. Although he was very drunk at the time, he seemed to be suddenly sobered by the death of his wife, and cried on finding that he had killed her. He was then taken into custody, and at the inquest on Wednesday the medical evidence proved that death was caused by a rupture of the spleen. The neighbours deposed that he was very kind to her when sober, and also to his two children, but had frequently ill-used her before when under the influence of drink. After some further evidence the inquest was adjourned to yesterday, when the jury returned a verdict of Manslaughter against the prisoner, the foreman stating that they had taken into consideration the fact that he had evidently no intention of causing his wife's death. He was then committed on the Coroner's warrant for trial at the Central Criminal Court. The prisoner was loudly hissed by the dense mob in the street as he was removed from the court.

RESPITE OF THE CONVICT MARY HARTLEY.—The sentence of death passed on Mary Hartley at the last session of the Central Criminal Court, for the murder of her illegitimate child, has been commuted to penal servitude for life.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the number of deaths registered in London in the week that ended on Saturday, August 27, was 1413. The average number in the corresponding week of the 10 previous years, 1854-63, corrected for increase of population, was 1349. The present return is, therefore, 54 above the average. During the week the births of 992 boys and 923 girls, in all 1915 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1844.

Provincial.

BOSTON.—It is asserted that Asiatic cholera has made its appearance in the Lincolnshire Fens, and proved fatal in several cases. The medical men attribute this attack to the long-continued drought, which has caused the drains to become little better than stagnant pools. The East Fen, in the neighbourhood of Boston, and along the banks of the Bell drain, are the places where it has made the greatest devastation.

DORCHESTER.—A few days since a fire broke out at Blackwood, in the New Forest, by which a large quantity of heath and furze was burnt. The fire extended to the Dorchester Railway, and burnt some of the telegraph posts on the line.

FLEETWOOD.—A singular case has been under investigation by the magistrates of this town. A person named Bond, salesman to the New Fylde Timber Company, was charged with stealing two 50*l.* notes, the property of the company. The history of the notes is a curious one. In October, 1863, they were paid to a young man called Mayor, the book-keeper of the company, in the presence of Bond. They were afterwards missed, and Mayor was charged with stealing them, Bond being the principal witness in the case. The young man was, however, discharged, but he took the disgrace so deeply to heart that he became paralysed, and has now been bedridden for about three years. On Wednesday week a pocket-book belonging to Bond was found, in which were the two missing notes. On being apprehended he declared that he knew nothing about them, and that they must have been wilfully placed in his pocket book to do him an injury. The case was remanded for a few days, when the prisoner was committed for trial at the sessions, On Saturday, at the Preston intermediate sessions, application was made for a postponement of the trial, and also that the prisoner might be set at liberty on bail. The court agreed to take bail for 400*l.*, the prisoner in 200*l.* and two sureties of 100*l.* each.

GLOUCESTER.—The execution of Lewis Gough, who was convicted at the last assizes of the murder of the blind woman Curthoys, at Thornbury, took place on Saturday in front of the county gaol. He died penitent, and acknowledged the justice of his sentence. The execution took place at the unusually early hour of 7 o'clock, so that the number of spectators present did not exceed 5000.

ISLE OF MAN.—The local papers state that at the recent dinner of the local agricultural show, the Bishop of Sodor and Man, in responding for The Church, made the following remarks on hunting:—"There was another matter to which he must refer now that he was speaking. He believed that they were in a great measure indebted to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, who was working day and night for the interests of the island, for the pack of hounds which was exhibited at the show that day. In old times the clergy had to keep a pack of hounds for the parish. He did not know whether he would be asked to join the hunt, but he believed they had asked the archdeacon to do so, if he would preach a sermon for them. He would have no objection to the archdeacon doing so, provided he preached the sermon in pink, with top boots on."

KENDAL.—On Tuesday and Wednesday of last week the property of the late Miss Kate Southey was sold by auction on the lawn at Lairbeck Cottage. From this picturesque auction mart in Underskiddaw might be seen the lakes of Derwentwater and Bassenthwaite, and numerous mountain tops. Collectors and visitors from all parts were attracted on the occasion. The first day's sale was confined to furniture, but it was noticeable that whenever any article was stated to have come from Greta Hall, the poet's residence, the price invariably went up. On the second day the books and manuscripts were sold. There were not many lots of books, and those which contained no autograph scarcely elicited a second bidding. A presentation copy of "Wordsworth's Poetical Works," in five volumes, was sold for 1*l.* 16*s.*; the "Last Essays of Elia," two volumes, presentation copy, with Charles Lamb's autograph, for 15*s.*; a one-volume edition of "Shakspeare," with Southey's autograph, for 14*s.*; and a very fine edition of "Bacon's Essays," inscribed "R. Southey, Bristol, 1802," for 11*s.* 6*d.* Nineteen of Sir Walter Scott's letters to Southey were sold separately, the whole realising 11*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.* One of the most interesting of these (which is undated) thus refers to a favourable change in Scott's prospects—"I have been in London, pursuing Fortune's slippery ball, and have been fortunate enough, notwithstanding the change of men and measures, to secure the reversion of a considerable patent office, which was destined for me by Mr. Pitt and Lord Melville. I venture to hope my success has given some pleasure to my friends at Greta Hall and Grasmere; it is particularly acceptable to me, as it enables me without imprudence, or even injustice to my family, to retire from the bar, which I have always thought to be an irksome and even hateful profession." The manuscripts of the first sketch of "the Life of Nelson" and the "Vision of Judgment" (the copy from which the poem was printed), in Southey's handwriting, and handsomely bound, yielded the very inadequate sum of 4*l.* 5*s.* A reserved price being placed on the MS. "Life of Cowper," "Pilgrimage to Waterloo," and other works of the late Laureate, they were not sold. Among the correspondence announced for public competition were letters from Lockhart, Wordsworth, C. Lamb, Thomas Clarkson, and other public characters, but as the biddings were not in excess of the reserve they were not knocked down. A few of the letters were privately disposed of, among which was a very curious one from Clarkson, dated "Playford Hall, November 25, 1834." Referring to a forthcoming biography of Wilberforce by his son Robert, Clarkson writes:—"He was, I suppose, greatly surprised and hurt to find that the great labour of the abolition had fallen upon me, and therefore that he had less to tell of his father than he imagined, supposing, but falsely supposing, that his father had done everything in that great question. He had imagined, again, that his father was the author of the inquiry concerning the poor slaves, and that he had moved in it before me, if not that he had employed me in aiding him. It could not then but put him to pain to find that I was the first person who gave birth to the inquiry, and that I first suggested it to his father, and not his father to me."

MANCHESTER.—A new bridge across the Irwell, affording another means of communication between this city and Salford, was opened to the public last week. The cost has been defrayed by the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, but the work has been carried out by the Corporation of Salford. There are now 10 bridges used as public thoroughfares between the two boroughs.

NORWICH.—A few days since Brother Ignatius and the Benedictine brethren celebrated in their monastery the Festival of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary. A procession was formed, consisting of monks, young ladies, and boys, all splendidly dressed—the officiating priests wearing robes of cloth of gold and satin, the ladies dressed in white robes and veils, the boys in red stoles, cambric surplices, blue tippets, red sashes, and caps. Incense was freely used, and hymns were sung in praise of the Virgin. On the next morning the monks attended one of the parish churches of Norwich, and Brother Ignatius played the organ, thus identifying the festival of the previous day with the service of the Church of England.

OTTERSPOOL.—A Liverpool paper states that the Great Northern Railway Company have purchased Otterspool for 140,000*l.*, and that they propose to construct a dock there in direct communication with Manchester.

SUNDERLAND.—The mayor of this town has received an intimation that a portion of the French fleet, now cruising in the North Sea, may shortly be expected to visit this port. The visit will not be made by the whole of the fleet, but by a frigate and some gunboats. The commander of the frigate will examine the port; and if he is satisfied that it will accommodate the whole fleet, there is every probability that Sunderland may next summer be honoured with a visit from the entire squadron, the summer being now too far advanced to admit of the visit this year.

SWANAGE.—On Thursday afternoon (the 25th ult.) a waterspout of great size was seen from this port at a distance of between five and six miles. The atmosphere at the time was thick, with dark heavy clouds. Its first appearance was like a cloud of smoke, bright at the top and dark downwards. It was funnel-shaped at the top, narrowing until it was within 50 feet of the sea, when it gradually increased in size till it reached the water. Its height seemed to be about 150 feet, and its base had an apparent diameter of 30 feet. The surface of the sea at the spot whence it ascended was in a perfect foam, the whiteness of which strangely contrasted with the dark column rising upwards. It lasted about ten minutes, when it suddenly broke.

TIVERTON.—Lord Palmerston, before leaving this town last week, attended the races, and afterwards dined at the race ordinary. In returning thanks for the toast of his health, his lordship spoke as follows on the management of his Irish estates, and on the analogy between Parliament and the turf:—

The Chairman has adverted to what I have been doing in Ireland as an Irish proprietor. I will only say, that if, as my worthy friend stated, that man is a benefactor to mankind who makes two blades of grass grow where only one grew before, I may claim some merit, because I had at one time nearly 1000 acres of blowing sand where no blade of grass grew, and now, in consequence of having assiduously planted that sand with bent, which dies away after it has come to a certain growth, and is followed by grass, I have succeeded in covering the whole of that barren spot with grass, and therefore I have done something more than make two blades of grass grow where only one grew before. I am glad to say that I and my tenantry are on very good terms, and although I am happy to see a great many faces when I visit that part of the country, for their own sakes I should be glad if many of them would go to a place where they would be more able to benefit themselves. But so long as they choose to remain in their present position, I shall be most happy to allow them. I beg leave to advert in a certain degree, I will not say to politics but to political conditions, and especially to Government and Parliamentary conditions, for there is a great similarity between Government and Parliamentary conditions and the racing which we have been attending to-day. The House of Commons very much resembles a racecourse. First of all, parties go there and run for the Queen's Plate. It is a general sweepstakes, and more than one takes the stakes if he wins. Then, again, there is the match, and he is a lucky man who does not meet with his match, but almost every man does meet with his match, and he is not at all contented in that encounter. Our rules are somewhat similar to those which guide the turf, because there is that good feeling in the House of Commons which gives weight for age. It is very true that the young ones are sometimes very apt to bolt out of the course. We have one rule, which is not enjoyed to the same degree by the turf—that is to say, that sometimes we run a dead heat, which in Parliamentary language is expressed by the words 'a tie.' But then our judge does not make us run the heat over again, does not make us go through the debate again, and take the division over again. Our judge decides the matter on the spot, and a dead heat having been run, he decides in favour of one horse or the other just as he may think it best to do. The Speaker settles the matter. He gives the casting vote. Then there is another thing in which we greatly resemble the turf—that is to say, it often happens that a very good-looking horse breaks down. And so there is a great analogy in reality between things that apparently differ very much. I think I have shown—perhaps you were not aware of it before—that there is a great analogy between Parliament and the turf. I think I have kept my word, and given you a little of Parliamentary conditions. I hope in so doing that I have not intruded anything that was not strictly in accordance with your rules, and that I have not introduced anything which is not entirely appropriate to a race meeting."

WARRINGTON.—On Friday a young man, who gave the name of John Edward, and stated that he was an American, was brought before the borough magistrates, charged with having burglariously entered the Museum, and stolen upwards of 200 gold and silver coins of great value, including many of the reigns of Henry VIII., Elizabeth, James I., Charles I., and Charles II. On the previous Wednesday the prisoner was seen twice upon the premises; and on the next morning, when the curator and his family got up, it was discovered that several tables had been broken open and the coins extracted. The thief had obtained ingress through one of the windows. The chief constable immediately telegraphed to the authorities of Liverpool, London, Manchester, and elsewhere, requesting that notice of the robbery might be given to the bullion dealers. Early on the following morning the prisoner presented himself at the shop of a bullion dealer in Liverpool, and offered a large number of the coins for sale. He was detained and given into custody. It was ascertained that he had already disposed of some to the amount of 4*l.* 12*s.*, but the whole of the coins, fortunately, were recovered. The prisoner was remanded.

WORCESTER.—On Saturday a man named John Butler, keeper of one of the navigation locks on the Severn at Holt Fleet, about six miles from this city, was charged with the wilful murder of Catherine Gulliver, his housekeeper. The accused is 62 years of age, and the deceased was about 44. The prisoner is the oldest servant of the Severn Improvement Commissioners, and had charge of the locks at Holt. About four years ago his wife died, and the deceased woman went to live with him as his housekeeper, and there is no doubt that they lived together as man and wife. Some jealousy, however, arose between them. On one occasion the prisoner threatened to drown deceased, and she had consequently appealed to the police, and the officer of the district had remonstrated with Butler, and cautioned him as to his conduct. On Saturday, the 13th ult., which was the last time the deceased was seen alive, she went to a neighbour's at half-past 11 at night, and said Butler had threatened to lock her out. She then proceeded towards his house, and about midnight cries were heard, resembling, as one of the witnesses said, the bleating of a sheep. The noise at first appeared to proceed from between Butler's house and the lock (about 30 feet distant), and gradually grew fainter. The neighbours did not interfere, thinking it was only an ordinary quarrel between the two. The woman was never seen afterwards alive, and when the prisoner was questioned about her he answered in a sullen manner, and evasively, though he admitted that it was Mrs. Gulliver that was bleating at midnight. The neighbours do not appear to have had their suspicion aroused until three days had elapsed, when rumours got abroad that the woman had been foully dealt with. The clergyman of the parish visited Butler, and questioned him about her, but he made no answer beyond saying that he did not know where she was. This confirming the suspicion excited, he was taken into custody. On the same day the body of deceased was found about 20 yards below the lock at Holt. A surgeon who examined the body deposed that death had been caused partly by a blow and partly by drowning. It was proved that the lock was full of water late on the Saturday night, and that it appeared in the same state on the following morning, when the gates were raised so as to pass water out of the lock into the river. A labouring man saw the prisoner standing by the side of the lock at half-past 5 o'clock on the Sunday morning, looking anxiously into the lock, but on seeing that the man was there he retired to his house, peeped from the door, and watched him go away. The bonnet of deceased, which had been torn from her head, was produced by the police, and the prisoner was committed for trial on the charge of Wilful Murder.

YARMOUTH.—A new hotel is erecting on the edge of a cliff at Alum Bay, and will be the largest in the Isle of Wight. It has been rendered necessary by the numerous visitors who cross from Lymington to Yarmouth, which is close to Alum Bay.

MURDER IN OMAGH.—A brutal and unprovoked murder was committed in Omagh on Saturday evening. The victim is Mr. John M'Crossan, a solicitor of considerable repute in the county of Donegal, who at the last assizes was solicitor for the plaintiff in the case of "Doyle v. M'Loughlin," coach builder, when a verdict of 8*l.* damages and 6*d.* costs was found for the plaintiff. M'Loughlin, the defendant, not paying the damages and costs, an execution was brought against him, and the sub-sheriff, Mr. Charles M'Crossan, brother of deceased, was on Saturday last about to proceed with the execution. M'Loughlin resisted, and had his house barricaded against the sheriff and his bailiffs. The sheriff, seeing that resistance was offered, sought the advice of his brother, who went to him, and while they were speaking together in the street before M'Loughlin's house, an iron rod, 5 feet 8 inches in length, having a hook with a barb at the point, was thrust by M'Loughlin out of the window on the upper story, and plunged into the throat of Mr. M'Crossan, lifting him off the ground, and inflicting a dreadful wound. The carotid artery was cut, and the blood gushed out in profusion. All the remedies which medical skill could devise were applied, and up to Sunday afternoon faint hopes were entertained of his recovery, but during the night a change for the worse set in, which became more serious, until he finally expired, after intense suffering, at 5 o'clock on Monday morning. The constabulary immediately forced their way into the house, and arrested M'Loughlin, and at the inquest on Tuesday the jury unanimously returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder" against the prisoner, who was then committed for trial.

INAUGURATION OF THE PRINCE CONSORT'S STATUE AT PERTH.—On Tuesday morning the Queen inaugurated with solemn ceremonial the statue which has been raised to the memory of the late Prince Consort by the city of Perth. The statue, which is by Mr. Brodie, of Edinburgh, though only of Redhall freestone, bears the stamp of artistic execution and fidelity, and serves, on a spot often visited by the Prince, to commemorate not only his name but his appearance. The figure is 9 feet in height, and the robe is that of a Knight of the Thistle; the dress is the doublet and trunk hose of the old Scottish Court, with the Garter below the left knee. The collar and star of the Thistle show very effectively on the richly embroidered doublet, and the mantle falls gracefully in the rear of the figure. The right hand rests on a square column or pedestal and holds an open scroll, on which the outlines of the Exhibition building of 1851 may be traced. The figure stands on a pedestal 18 feet high, making the whole height 22 feet. The pedestal is octagonal, approached by four octagonal graduated steps, and is surrounded by a circular railing of bronzed malleable iron of a star cross and floral pattern. The site chosen for the statue is on the North Inch of Perth, in the corner nearest to the Bridge of Tay; and the Pavilion erected for her Majesty's use on the occasion, was erected on the spot on which King Robert III. of Scotland is said to have viewed the sanguinary battle between Clan Chattan and Clan Quhele, commemorated in the "Fair Maid of Perth." The train bringing the Queen and Royal family from Windsor arrived at Perth at 20 minutes to 9. Her Majesty was accompanied by the Princesses Helena, Louisa, and Beatrice, Prince Leopold, and the Duke and Duchess of Saxe-Coburg. The Royal party were received at the station by the Lord Provost, magistrates, and Town Council, the Lord Provost of Edinburgh, the directors of the railway, the Sheriff and Sheriff-Substitute, the Procurator Fiscal, and other official persons, and proceeded in state to the site of the statue, through Marshal Place, Princes Street, St. John Street, George Street, and Charlotte Street. The procession was escorted by two troops of the 15th Hussars, and the streets were lined with detachments of Highlanders and other regiments brought for the occasion from various garrisons in Scotland. Several companies of Perthshire Volunteers were also on the ground. On arriving at the site, the municipal bodies, the Memorial Committee, and the high constables took up their places within the barrier, with the guard of honour of the 92d Highlanders and band of that regiment, while a large company were accommodated within the Royal pavilion. On the Queen's arrival the band played one stanza of the National Anthem, but without the sound of drums. The Rev. Mr. Burdon, Minister of East Church, Perth, then offered up a prayer that the Almighty would prosper and guard the work that they had finished, prolong her Majesty's reign, and fill it with the blessings of peace, of progress, and of Christian enterprise. The Lord Provost of Perth then presented a loyal address to her Majesty, after which the statue was uncovered, the guard of honour presented arms, the band of the 92d played the National Anthem, the pipes of the Highland regiments sounded a pibroch, and a battery of artillery placed at the top of the Inch fired a Royal salute. Having silently regarded the statue for a few minutes the Queen turned round, and commanding the Lord Provost of the city to kneel, conferred upon him the honour of knighthood, and to him, now Sir David Ross, her Majesty expressed her satisfaction with the statue, and with the proceedings of the day. The Duke of Saxe-Coburg, the brother of the deceased Prince, then presented the sculptor, Mr. Brodie, to the Queen, who repeated to him the expressions of her appreciation of the statue, both as a work of art and as a faithful resemblance of the Prince. The Royal party then, attended by the Lord Provost and magistrates, returned to the station, and at 20 minutes before 11 took their departure for Balmoral. The whole route from the railway station to the site was thronged with people, and her Majesty was welcomed during her progress through the city with the greatest enthusiasm.

GIFT OF A PUBLIC PARK.—Lord Willoughby de Eresby has resolved to give a park for the use of the inhabitants of Crieff. The ground selected stretches from the upper part of Burrell Street west to the Wool Mills, and extends to about 12 acres. The low ground is to be levelled, and part of it to be converted into a bowling-green, curling-pond, cricket-ground, &c., and the brae on the north side, next the town, is to be laid out as a promenade. The management of the park will be handed over to the Commissioners of the burgh, under the General Police Act.

THE YELVERTON CASE.—It is reported that Mrs. Yelverton (formerly Mrs. Forbes) is about to commence an action for a judicial separation.

Railways.

COLLISION ON THE MIDLAND.—An alarming accident took place on Monday morning at Stavely Station, near Chesterfield. The mail trains do not stop at this station, and as the driver saw the signal indicating that the line was clear he went on at full speed, and the engine dashed into a goods train from Derby, which, by an error of the pointsman, had been shunted across the main line instead of into a siding to await the passage of the mail. An awful crash was the consequence. The engine completely cut the goods train in two, and several carriages were shattered. The Post-office van was turned completely over, and the officer in charge of the mails received such injuries that his life is despaired of. The line was completely blocked, causing the stoppage of all for about two hours.

COLLISION ON THE EAST LANCASHIRE.—On Tuesday, a collision between two luggage trains took place on the East Lancashire section of the Lancashire and Yorkshire, close to the Burnley station. The goods train from Liverpool had entered the station, and the stoker, instead of allowing the waggons to run down the up main line, shunted them across the down line instead of the siding, at the very moment when a luggage train from Colne was approaching on the down line. Eight of the 23 waggons forming the Colne train were totally demolished, and the engine was thrown off the line, with the foremost waggons. Traffic was stopped on both lines for six hours. The damage is supposed to amount to between 500*l.* and 1000*l.*

THE LATE EXPLOSION ON THE NORTH LONDON.—The inquest on William Davis, the fireman killed by the explosion of the locomotive on the North London line on the 10th ult., was concluded on Thursday, when Captain Tyler, the Government inspector, read an elaborate report which he had made to the Board of Trade, the substance of which was that the copper stays supporting the fire-box had become weakened by long use and had ultimately given way. He stated that as these stays were covered, the gradual decay could only have been detected by taking the engine to pieces, or by subjecting it more frequently than appeared to have been done to hydraulic pressure. He added that the engineer on this line tested his engines more frequently than engineers were in the habit of doing, but still, as this case showed, not frequently enough. The jury returned a verdict of death by misadventure, with an expression of opinion that the engine ought to have been more frequently tested than it was, considering its age.

OPENING OF THE MID-WALES.—This important link in the Welsh railway system, extending from Llanidloes to Brecon, was opened for traffic on the 23d ult. The event was celebrated by a dinner at Brecon, presided over by Mr. Whalley, M.P., the chairman of the Company, supported by about 300 guests. The line, which is one of great interest, on leaving Llanidloes enters the vale of Tylwch and skirts the river Marteg until that stream empties itself into the Wye, about 12 miles from Llanidloes. It then proceeds along the banks of the Wye, passing the towns of Rhayra, New-bridge, and Builth, and continues its course to Boughrwd, where it crosses the river by a lattice girder bridge of 191 feet span. It then becomes a cross-country line until it joins the Brecon and Merthyr at Talyllyn, or "the Head of the Pool," a small village lying in a pretty valley at the base of Cader Idris, and five miles distant from Brecon.

OPENING OF THE WIGAN, ECCLES, AND TYLDESLEY.—The new line from Eccles, through Tyldesley to Wigan, constructed by the London and North-Western Company, was formally opened on the 24th ult., with considerable éclat. The new line, though only 12 miles in length, is likely to prove of very great utility.

THE EARLY DAYS OF RAILWAY TRAVELLING.—In the dinner given to celebrate the opening of the Eccles, Tyldesley, and Wigan Railway, on the 24th ult., Mr. Oliver Heywood, in proposing "The Landowners," said "he remembered travelling by rail when passengers had to give their names and spell them, in order to their being written on a large green paper ticket; and between Liverpool and Manchester there was a long stay at Newton, in order that passengers might refresh themselves with Eccles cakes. A 'guide' to the line to London cost 5*s.*, and there was a cheap edition at 2*s.* 6*d.* The former told the number of bricks in the Kilsby and Watford tunnels, and how they were fed on the company by the landowners of the neighbourhood. Now landowners knew their interests to be identical with the railway companies. He had heard that the London and North-Western carried into London daily two tons of watercresses and a ton of mushrooms."

A NEW RAILWAY DANGER.—The long list of casualties which have recently been published showing the necessity of protecting the railway traveller from the madman, the murderer, and the libertine, has now been increased by an enemy more remorseless still, the danger of fire. Several cases have occurred during the past few weeks, both on English and French railways, in which live coal sparks from the engine have been blown among the luggage or into the windows of passenger carriages. A lady travelling on the Strasbourg line a few days since had a narrow escape from being burnt to a cinder by a spark falling upon her dress; and on the 11th ult. the luggage piled on a first-class carriage of a North-Western train from London to Fleetwood was burnt almost to the roof before it was possible for the passengers to arrest the attention of the guard. In other cases the sparks have ignited fields of corn and farm buildings in the neighbourhood of the line. These accidents have been caused in every instance by the practice of burning coal, instead of coke, without any fender or other appliance for preventing the sparks flying through the chimneys of locomotives.

Obituary.

THE EARL OF MORLEY died on the 28th ult. after a short illness, at Whitaway, near Chudleigh, the residence of his mother-in-law Mrs. Parker, in his 54th year. He had been staying at Whitaway on a visit, and was in his usual health to within a week before his death, when he was seized with affection of the throat, which terminated fatally. He was born in 1810, and succeeded his father, who was the first Earl, in 1840. He married in 1842 the only daughter of Mrs. Edmund Parker, Esq., of Whitaway, and relict of W. Coryton, Esq., of Pentillie Castle, Cornwall. The Countess survives him, and he leaves by her two children—the Hon. Edward, Viscount Boringdon, now Earl of Morley, born at Kent House, Knightsbridge, in 1843, and Lady Catherine Parker. The deceased earl was a Liberal in politics, but had been attacked by paralysis in early life, had been an invalid several years, and was consequently unable to take any active part in public affairs. He was appointed colonel of the South Devon Militia in 1845, and was for some years a lord in waiting to the Queen, but resigned in 1852. He was a special deputy warden of the Stannaries, and for several years filled the office of chairman of the Plymouth Chamber of Commerce and chairman of the South Devon and Tavistock Railway Company, but had resigned the latter office. His lordship resided for many years, and up to within a recent period, at his family seat at Saltram, near Plymouth, where he was a large landed proprietor.

SIR CHARLES KNIGHTLEY, Bart., died on the 30th ult. at his seat, Fawsley Hall, near Daventry, in his 82d year. He was the eldest son of the Rev. Charles Knightley, by the daughter of Mr. Henry Boulton, of Moulton, Lincolnshire, and was born in 1781. He married in 1813 the eldest daughter of Mr. Felton Lionel Hervey, of Englefield Green, grandson of the first Earl of Bristol, and by her had a son and a daughter, both of whom survive—namely, Rainald, born in 1818, M.P. for South Northamptonshire, and Sophia Selina, married to the Hon. Henry F. H. Gage, eldest son of Viscount Gage. In 1849 he succeeded his uncle, the Rev. Sir J. Knightley, who was created a baronet in 1798, with remainder in default of male issue to the heirs male of his deceased brother Charles. He was educated at Rugby School, and afterwards completed his education at Oxford. He contested the southern division of Northamptonshire in 1831, and from 1832 sat for the division of the county. Since his retirement from Parliament he chiefly devoted his leisure to agricultural improvement and the welfare of his tenantry. He was a deputy-lieutenant and a patron of three livings.

SIR SAMUEL O'MALLEY, BART., died on the 16th ult., at his seat Kilboyne House, Mayo, in his 85th year. He was the of Mr. Owen O'Malley, of Borrishowle, and was created a baronet in 1818. Independent of being the head of an ancient family, his name has been associated with the public affairs of Mayo for more than half a century. He was appointed a magistrate immediately on becoming of age, 68 years ago, and was the eldest magistrate, and the eldest deputy lieutenant of the county. He was the first to propose the introduction of a railway into Mayo, which he advocated for the last 30 years, but the accomplishment of that measure was reserved for the present Earl of Lucan. During the 38 years in which he held the commission of the peace no act of his ever met the censure of the superior tribunals or the Government of the country. In 1809 he married a daughter of Mr. J. Reilly. His eldest son, Sir William O'Malley, Knight, succeeds to the baronetcy.

SIR THOMAS SEBRIGHT, BART., died on the 27th ult. at Beechwood House, near Dunstable, in his 62d year. He had been suffering from dropsy for some time past, but his death was the result of congestion of the lungs. He is succeeded in the title and the large entailed estates by his eldest son, now Sir J. G. S. Sebright, who was educated at Christ Church, Oxford.

SIR JOHN RATCLIFFE died at his residence, Wyddrington, near Birmingham, on Thursday, after a few weeks illness, the immediate cause of death being diabetes. He was Mayor of Birmingham three times consecutively, and on the occasion of the Queen's visit to open Aston Park he received the honour of knighthood. He was for many years engaged in trade in the town, and had realised a large fortune.

ADMIRAL LORD HOTHAM died in London on the 20th ult., in his 78th year. He entered the navy in 1801, and was present at the blowing up of the Insolente in the Morbihan river in 1800; and at the cutting out the French corvette Guipe, from Vigo, in 1801. He afterwards served at the reduction of Aux Cayes and other ports of St. Domingo in 1803; at the attack on Curaçoa in 1804, at the capture of the French corvette Diligente, the destruction of the French privateer General Ernouf; and at Walcheren. He next served in the operations on the coast of America, including the attack on Craney Island and Hampton, and at the destruction of the United States schooner Asp in 1813. He also held other active employment up to 1826. He became a rear-admiral in 1854; vice-admiral in 1857; and admiral, a few weeks ago.

MR. CHARLES DASHWOOD PRESTON BRUCE, of Leckie House, died on the 25th ult. from the effects of a melancholy accident. He was returning home from the moor with Mr. Campbell, of Boquhan, when his horse reared, and threw him over a precipice on Boquhan Hills, killing him on the spot. On the death of Lady Preston Hay about two years ago, Mr. Bruce succeeded to the estate held in fee-simple of the late Sir Robert Preston. Circumstances had precluded his taking possession then; and just at the moment when he was about to enter upon his inheritance he has been killed by the restiveness of his horse. Mr. Bruce was born in 1802; in 1841 he married the Hon. Harriet Elizabeth, a daughter of Lord Rivers, but as the lady has no issue the estates fall to the late Earl of Elgin's second son, to be his possession so long as he does not succeed to the earldom, Sir Robert Preston's will having provided that his family name and estates shall never merge in the title or estates of the Lords of Broomhall.

THE REV. DR. MARSH, D.D., honorary canon of Worcester, died on the 24th ult. at the rectory of Beddington, near Croydon, about a month after he had completed his 89th year. He was almost the last of that company of earnest men who in the close of the last century and in the commencement of the present were the means of renewing the life and energy of the Church of England. He was also the intimate friend and associate of Charles Simeon, Henry Venn, Henry Thornton, and William Wilberforce, and had outlived them all. He became first known to the religious world about 1815 as an earnest fellow-worker with Mr. Simeon for the conversion of the Jews. He went to Amsterdam to convert the Dutch Jews, and became the friend of the late Dr. McCaul and of Dr. Alexander, who afterwards accepted the bishopric of Jerusalem. He was a great preacher, and whether before the University of Oxford or from a more congenial pulpit, he never failed to advocate the conversion of the Jews, and other favourite projects of the Evangelical School. He published a sermon on the return to health of George III., and one on the death of that sovereign; sermons on Justification by Faith, and on the death of the late Rev. James Haldane Stewart; "Plain Letters on Prophecy," a pamphlet "On the Claims of the Church of England on the Affections of the People," a "Catechism on the Church of England," and numerous other works. He was taken ill only a few days before his death, and retained his faculties to the last. His son, the Rev. William Tilson Marsh, of Oriel College, Oxford, is the incumbent of St. Leonards. Miss Catherine Marsh, one of his daughters, is widely known as the author of "English Hearts and English Hands," the "Memoirs of Captain Hedley Vicars," &c., and is distinguished for her energetic benevolence and success in reclaiming the navvies at Beckenham when railway works were in progress in that neighbourhood.

THE REV. THOMAS CATOR, rector of Kirk Smeaton and vicar of Womersley, died somewhat suddenly at his residence, Kirk-Smeaton, near Pontefract on the 24th ult. He had only been ill three days, and the fatal termination was not anticipated by his family. Mr. Cator had been for upwards of 30 years a magistrate of the West Riding. He married Lady Louisa, the daughter of the late Earl of Scarborough, who survives him. He had been 47 years vicar of Womersley, and 35 years rector of Kirk Smeaton.

WILLS.—The will of the Rev. Sir Thomas C. Miller, Bart., LL.B., late vicar of Froyle, Southampton, has been sworn under 60,000*l.* personalty. Major-General Hardinge, K.H., 35,000*l.*

Miscellaneous.

DIVORCE AND REMARRIAGE.—The marriage returns for 1862, which have just been issued, distinguish the marriage of 28 divorced persons in the year. Ten of these marriages took place in London. Fifteen divorced men married spinsters, and two divorced men married widows; nine divorced women were married to bachelors, and two divorced women to widowers. There was also an instance, at Birmingham, where a man and woman, once husband and wife, but divorced, were remarried. The number of divorced persons is increasing, anp hence these marriages of divorced persons increase; the number reported in 1862 was about three times as many as in any previous year.

INCOME TAX.—The number of persons charged with income-tax under Schedule D in Great Britain, gradually increases. In the year ending April 5, 1862, the number was 285,157, and they were charged upon incomes amounting to 89,013,493*l.*; and in the year ending April 5, 1863, the number rose to 293,468, and the income charged with tax to 93,322,864*l.* The increase extended to taxpayers of all classes, with one exception; those charged on incomes between 800*l.* and 900*l.* a year declined in number from 2048 to 2005, but the income taxed declined only from 1,672,431*l.* to 1,643,428*l.* In the year 1861-62 67 persons were charged with income-tax under Schedule D, upon incomes exceeding 50,000*l.* a year; in the year 1862-63, 80 persons. The schedule would, of course, include not only merchants and manufacturers, but joint-stock companies with the exception of the gas, railway, and canal companies, these being taxed under Schedule A as making their profits out of the use of land. Ireland presents in this return an unfortunate contrast with Great Britain. In the year 1861-62 17,602 persons were charged with income-tax in Ireland under Schedule D upon incomes amounting to 4,677,568*l.*; in the year 1862-63 only 17,438 persons, but the income still amounted to 4,637,743*l.*, or not 4000*l.* less than in the former year. The number charged on incomes between 5000*l.* and 10,000*l.* fell from 35 to 29, and on incomes between 10,000*l.* and 50,000*l.* from 26 to 22. Two were charged on incomes of 50,000*l.* and upwards in the year 1861-62, and three in 1862-63. The net amount of income-tax under all schedules is stated as follows for the year ending April 5, 1863:—England, 9,551,214*l.*; Scotland, 901,257*l*; Ireland, 796,170*l.*; total, 11,248,641*l.* The rate was 9*d.*

BRITISH WOOLS.—LONDON, Sept. 1.

The past month has been characterised by its usual dulness, and not more than an average business has been transacted. Our stocks are lower in farmers', merchants', and manufacturers' hands than ever was known at this season of the year, and we therefore expect a good trade this month at full prices. The consumption of this year's clip of wool commenced in February with the fat sheep, and has continued with unprecedented activity to the present time and under ordinary circumstances must soon exhaust the supply. If any extraordinary demand should arise through the establishment of peace in America (a probability not sufficiently strong to speculate on), a considerable advance in price may be anticipated, in consequence of the exchange of our worsted manufactures for cotton, the stocks of goods being very small in the Confederate States.

HOPS.—BOROUGH MARKET, FRIDAY, Sept. 2.

Messrs. Pattenden & Smith report the demand for Hops principally confined to those of last year's growth, which command fully last week's quotations. As yet there is but little doing in new Hops, the majority of the samples being of an inferior quality. Picking next week will become general, when a supply of good ones may be expected, and the demand increase.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Aug. 29.

The number of Beasts to-day is very large, but the average quality is still very inferior. The choicest kinds are selling quite as dear as on Monday last, and in some instances rather dearer. The supply of Sheep and Lambs is about the same as of late. Trade is very dull for them, and it is difficult to obtain late rates. Calves are selling as on Thursday. From Germany and Holland there are 2580 Beasts, 10,470 Sheep, 99 Calves, and 50 Pigs; from Ireland, 270 Beasts; and 3540 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, Sept. 1.

The number of Beasts is large, and the demand very limited. Prices are on the average lower, and several remain unsold. Sheep are not so plentiful as of late, but the supply far exceeds the demand. Trade is exceedingly heavy, and a clearance cannot be effected, notwithstanding a disposition to sell at rather less than their own quotations. Lamb trade is very bad, and Calves are selling at the same as on Monday. Our foreign supply consists of 1029 Beasts, 3030 Sheep, and 660 Calves.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Aug. 29.

There was a moderate supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market, which was sold at the extreme rates of this day se'nnight. Foreign was held for late prices, but the business done was extremely limited. For new Malting Barley there was a good demand at the prices of this day week, but for grinding there was little inquiry. Beans and Peas were unaltered in value. The Oat trade was steady at former quotations. Flour was neglected. Of Mustard Seed the supply was small, and it was sold 1s. per bushel below the prices of last week.

FRIDAY, Sept. 2.

With the exception of some showers on Tuesday and Wednesday, the weather has been fine and hot. Although business in he Wheat trade has been limited in extent, former prices, more particularly for English Wheat, have been fully supported, excepting in Liverpool and Glasgow, where purchases might have been rather more easily effected. The malting season not having commenced, the sale of Barley is almost necessarily confined to grinding qualities, the value of which remains unaltered. Former prices of Beans, Peas, and Oats were well supported. The sale of Flour has been dull, and in Liverpool slightly lower rates have been accepted. The reports of the Wheat and Barley crops continue to be favourable. Since Friday last 120 vessels have been reported off the coast. The floating trade has not been very active; for Wheat cargoes off the coast only 1s. per qr. lower rates are obtainable. Paris, Sept. 1.—In Flour, only a moderate amount of business has been done, but late rates have been well maintained. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 31s. 6d. per 280 lbs. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 29,450 cwts. Wheat is very difficult of sale unless at a further reduction in price. The arrivals of English Wheat and Barley this week are small, of English and foreign Oats and foreign Barley large, of foreign Wheat and Flour good. The attendance at this morning's market was nearly confined to the stand holders. New English Wheat was taken at Monday's prices, but scarcely any business was transacted in foreign, and late rates are nominal. We observe no alteration in the value of any description of Spring Corn.

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 30.—We have had a much better attendance at this morning's market both of local and distant buyers, but they did not appear to be much in want of foreign Wheat, and we have consequently to report only a very moderate extent of business at previous rates. Flour slow, without quotable change in value. Indian Corn meets a healthy consumptive sale, but the supply offering ex ship being much in excess of the demand, we quote Danubian 6d. per qr. lower than on Friday; American keeps its ground. Oats and Oatmeal are both in fair request at full prices. The stock of Egyptian Beans here now is so small that their value is quite nominal. Peas and Barley have a good sale. Market closes without animation.

News of the Week.

THE latest advices from the United States announce that General GRANT maintains his position on the Weldon Railroad, but has made no attempt to take advantage of a situation which has cost him such severe losses to secure. The object of his recent movements at Deep Bottom is still unknown, but it is stated that in his operations at that place and on the Weldon Railway he lost in a single week 12,000 men. General LEE appears to attach little importance to the movements of the Federal Commander-in-Chief, for after depatching large reinforcements to Atlanta, he has himself occupied the Shenandoah Valley with a large force. General EARLY, who had previously been manœuvring in that valley at the head of 30,000 men, attacked General SHERIDAN, near Charleston, on the 21st ult., and drove him back to Harper's Ferry with a loss of 1000 men. General EARLY has since occupied Martinsburg, and it is reported that on the arrival of General LEE the Confederate army will invade Maryland, with a view either of threatening Washington, or of carrying the war into the Northern States. The siege of Mobile is said to be at an end, Admiral FARRAGUT having discovered that the harbour has been closed by an ironclad sunk in mid-channel, and that the city is consequently inaccessible to the Federal squadron. The political news in connection with the approaching Presidential contest, is daily becoming more interesting. There is now no doubt that the Chicago Convention will nominate a Democratic candidate for the Presidency, and gold has fallen in anticipation that General M'CLELLAN will be selected as their candidate. Meanwhile the leading Abolitionists of Boston have called upon President LINCOLN and General FREMONT to withdraw their names as candidates, and to call a convention to nominate a fresh Republican candidate. General FREMONT has consented to withdraw if President LINCOLN will do so also.

The Danish Rigsraad was closed on the 1st inst., when a short message was read from the KING, in which he said that he would convoke the Chambers for an extraordinary session if necessary. The reports of the political and military committees had been adopted by the Folksthing on the previous day.

The Peace Conferences at Vienna were resumed on Tuesday, when the rectification of the frontiers is said to have been the subject of discussion. It is reported in diplomatic circles in Vienna that great difficulties are anticipated in the settlement of the financial question, and that the Danish Plenipotentiaries have threatened to break off the negotiations and terminate the armistice if Prussia persists in exacting further pecuniary sacrifices, the effect of which would inevitably produce the financial ruin of Denmark.

From Geneva we learn that M. JAMES FAZY, one of the chiefs of the Liberal party, having been cited to appear before the Juge d'Instruction, has left the city, stating that he has taken that step to avoid assassination. M. FAZY's proceedings have been condemned throughout Switzerland. No further arrests have been made, and tranquillity has been partially restored.

The Bombay mail of the 8th ult. informs us that the Viceroy will leave Simla early next month, for Lahore, and will proceed to Calcutta about the beginning of November. Sir CHARLES TREVELYAN's minute on the introduction of a gold currency has been published in the Gazette, and the introduction of the English sovereign into India as a legal tender for 10 rupees has been adopted by the Governor General in Council. The Bhootanese have commenced quarrelling among themselves, and there is every prospect of a serious civil war between the respective chiefs. The latest news from Afghanistan states that the AMEER and his rebellious brother have been reconciled, and that a good understanding has at length been established between them.

A telegram from Shanghai of the 22d July announces the capture of the city of Cangsing. A camp of instruction has been formed under Colonel GORDON for the purpose of training the Chinese troops.

The Maories in New Zealand were attacked and defeated by the British troops on the 25th June. The Maories lost 200 men, and the chief who commanded them at Gatepa was among the killed.

FRANZ MÜLLER, the supposed murderer of Mr. BRIGGS on the North London Railway, was arrested at New York on the arrival of the Victoria packet ship, on the 24th ult. The hat and watch of Mr. BRIGGS were found in his possession. The legal proceedings for his extradition were in progress when the mail left.

On Sunday the Princess Helena and the Duchess of Saxe-Coburg attended Divine service at the parish church of Craithie. The Rev. Dr. Fowler officiated. On Monday the Queen drove out, accompanied by the Duchess of Saxe-Coburg. The Duke of Saxe-Coburg went out deer-stalking. Mr. Morier arrived at the Castle, and dined with her Majesty and the Royal family. On Tuesday the Queen, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess of Saxe-Coburg and Princess Helena, drove to Loch Bulig, whence they went to Inchrory, returning home by Tornahush and Gairn Sheil.

VISIT OF THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES TO DENMARK.—On Saturday afternoon the Prince and Princess of Wales embarked at Dundee on their visit to Denmark. In consequence of some misunderstanding as to the Prince's intentions, great preparations had been made at Dundee for his reception, and the streets were crowded with people to do him honour, when a telegram was received announcing that the embarkation would take place at Broughty Ferry. The magistrates immediately despatched the Town Clerk and Sheriff by a special engine to that place, to apprise the Prince of the expectations of the people and of the danger to the public peace should he not come up to Dundee. The Earl of Camperdown, whose carriages had been ordered to be at Dundee station for the Royal party, also went down to intercept the Royal train and urge the Prince and Princess to come. It appeared that his Royal Highness, who had all along deprecated a public demonstration on the occasion, was quite unaware of the extensive preparations for his reception, and, learning on his journey that Broughty afforded a nearer and quieter port of embarkation, had given orders that the train should be stopped there. The apprehension also had been entertained that through the delay at Dundee the evening tide might be lost for the sailing of the Royal squadron. His Royal Highness, however, being assured that the depth of water would be sufficient for an hour or two, and by the Council deputation that the time occupied at Dundee would be short, agreed at once to fulfil the public expectation. On entering Dundee in the open carriage of the Earl of Camperdown, their Royal Highnesses were received with the utmost enthusiasm by the vast crowds of townspeople and the mechanics who had left their work to take part in the demonstration. After passing through the town amidst the cheers of the spectators, the Royal party arrived at the jetty, where they were detained for some time by the absence of the barge of the Osborne, which had gone down to Broughty. At length it arrived alongside the jetty, and the Prince and Princess immediately embarked, followed by another barge with the infant Prince, and were rowed out to the Osborne, which crossed the bar shortly before 6 o'clock, followed by the Salamis and the Medusa, and accompanied down the Firth by nearly all the steamers of the port, each with large numbers of passengers. Their Royal Highnesses arrived at Elsinore at 10 o'clock on Tuesday morning, and landed at 1 P.M., amidst the cheers of the inhabitants. The King and Queen met them on their arrival, and accompanied them to the castle of Fredensborg, where they will reside during their stay in Denmark. It is understood that the visit is strictly private, the Prince and Princess travelling under the names of the Baron and Baroness of Renfrew.

PRINCE ALFRED is expected to return from Norway in about three weeks, when his Royal Highness will go to Scotland, and remain at Balmoral until the return of the Court to Windsor.

PRINCESS HELENA.—The Austrian journals state that the recent visit of Prince Elimar of Oldenburg to Windsor Castle was with a view to a matrimonial alliance between his Highness and the Princess Helena. The Prince, who is brother of the Grand Duke of Oldenburg, is in his 21st year.

PRINCE HUMBERT of Italy was expected to embark yesterday at Cherbourg, in Prince Napoleon's yacht, for Southampton, accompanied by Prince Napoleon and Princess Clotilde, and will probably arrive in London in the beginning of next week. During his stay in England the Prince will reside with the Marquis d'Azeglio, the Italian Minister in London, who has arrived from Spa in order to receive his Royal Highness.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Emperor and his guests returned to St. Cloud on Saturday. During his stay in camp, the Emperor conferred on General von Roon, Prussian Minister of War, the Cross of Officer of the Legion of Honour. It is reported that his Majesty will shortly have an interview with the King of Prussia. Prince Humbert of Italy is at St. Germain-en-Laye, on a visit to Prince Napoleon and the Princess Clotilde. General von Roon has left Paris for Cherbourg. On Tuesday the Emperor received MM. Rouher, Boudet, and Drouyn de Lhuys. A Ministerial Council was held on Tuesday. The Empress left on Tuesday evening for Schwalbach, in Nassau, where her Majesty is expected to remain for a month. The Empress travelled strictly incognita. General Bazaine has been appointed Marshal of France, and General Martimprès has been nominated Senator. M. Baroche, following the example of M. de Persigny, has delivered a speech to his constituents, in which he hinted at liberal reforms in the Councils General, to be carried out, however, within wise limits. The Duke de Morny a few days since laid the first stone of a new church at Domville, in the presence of a great concourse of spectators. After the ceremony the Duke delivered the following speech:—

"I thank you for having invited me to preside at this touching ceremony. As soon as a commune is founded, the first want, the first thought, of its inhabitants is to build a church, that they may group themselves round its tutelary steeple, and assemble in the sanctuary on the day of rest with one common fraternal sentiment of piety and charity. It is the bounden duty of us all, according to our means, to promote the construction of those edifices which respond so well to the wants of the inhabitants. At present allow me to observe to all the laborious population around me that it is a singular phenomenon to see this commune, so poor only two years since, undertake to build from its own resources, and without help from strangers, not only a church, but a dwelling for the curé and a schoolhouse. It is right that all should know that this is owing to the development of the general welfare and prosperity which the Government of the Emperor has produced. The Emperor, my friends, has re-established authority, order, and liberty in France. Those are the true and great elements of labour; without them there can be neither confidence, nor courage, nor enterprise. I say this expressly for all of you whose labour is the sole resource for bringing up your families. If you have security in your toil and confidence in the future, you are indebted for it to the beloved chief of our great nation. Therefore, I call on you to join with me in expressing the deep gratitude so justly due in one unanimous cry, 'Vive l'Empereur!'"

The Constitutionnel of Friday contains an article signed by M. Paulin Limayrac, reviewing the language used by MM. Rouher, Rouland, and Behic at the opening of the Councils-General. It says:—

"In view of these manifestations of the ideas of the Government, who can deny to the Empire the spirit of progress and initiative? In the restricted sphere of a department, as in the wider sphere of State, we find the Imperial policy animated by the desire of most completely and surely developing principles in which we discover the same thought of giving to France all the benefits of progress and saving her from all excesses of revolution."

The Constitutionnel of Sunday contains an article by M. Paulin Limayrac, commendatory of the speech of the Duke de Persigny. It shows that the Governments of the Restoration of July and the Republic could not live with liberty, and concludes as follows:—

"For 12 years past facts have replied to theory. Tried by unsuccessful essays, wise by experience, and disabused of false promises, the nation will no longer lose the substance for the shadow. It knows that it enjoys true liberty since it possesses universal suffrage, which is the true reign of public opinion."

The Patrie of Wednesday denies the statement of certain journals that Prussia had taken steps to obtain from the French Government a modification of paragraph 13 of the Treaty of Commerce between the two countries, and adds:—

"France is determined to consent to no change whatever in that treaty, the ratifications of which will be exchanged between the two Governments on the 31st of October."

The once celebrated Père Enfantin, the founder, or rather restorer, of the sect called St. Simonians, in the first years of the reign of Louis Philippe, died of apoplexy on the 1st inst. in Paris, in his 69th year. His funeral took place on Sunday at Père la Chaise, and was attended by more than 200 persons, several of whom had in other times been partisans of the doctrines of the St. Simonians, and may still in theory, if not in practice, adhere to them. In accordance with his last will there was no religious ceremony whatever, either at the house in which he died, nor at the cemetery. The body was not taken to any church, but was carried direct to the graveyard from his residence. No clergyman of any religious persuasion was present, and no prayer was uttered over the grave. The Courrier de St. Etienne has suspended publication in despair. Its editors have been imprisoned one after the other, and its proprietors have been condemned in heavy fines, until they have become convinced that it is impossible to carry on the paper as an independent journal. M. Béhic, the Minister of the Interior, has issued a circular to railway authorities, calling upon them to insist on enforcing the regulations against smoking in railway carriages, a practice so dangerous to ladies in light dresses and crinoline, and often an annoyance to other passengers. The railway from Cagne to Nice is expected to be opened to the public before the end of October. Travellers will then be able to proceed the whole way from Marseilles to Nice by rail.

ALGERIA.—Marshal Macmahon, who has been appointed Governor-General of Algeria, will embark at Marseilles on the 20th inst. for Algeria, accompanied by a numerous suite. It is said that he proposes, on his arrival, to go through the whole of the southern part of the colony with a body of 10,000 men. "Such a force," he is reported to have said, "can pass anywhere."

SPAIN.—The Noticias of Friday, alluding to some assertions of the Opposition journals, says that the Government will not change the working of the new press law; but if the press were to adopt a conciliatory attitude, the Government would certainly interpret the spirit of the law in its favour. The Queen on Saturday received M. Fazio, the envoy of the Emperor Maximilian, who presented a letter from his Majesty. M. Fazio's speech and the Queen's reply expressed the sympathy and good understanding between Spain and Mexico. The Marquis Rivere, the Plenipotentiary of Spain in Portugal, will be appointed ambassador at the Court of the Emperor Maximilian, and it is believed that Señor Gonzales Bravo will be shortly appointed Ambassador to the Court of Rome. A singular trial took place at Madrid a few days since. A soldier was cited before the police-court for having stolen a gold cup of considerable value which had been placed as a votive offering on one of the numerous altars dedicated in that city to the Virgin. The soldier at once explained that he and his family being in great distress, he had appealed to the Holy Mother for assistance, and that while engaged in prayer and contemplation of the four millions' worth of jewels displayed on her brocaded petticoat, she stooped, and with a charming smile, handed him the golden cup. This explanation was received by the Court in profound silence, and the case handed over to the ecclesiastical commission, to whom it at once occurred that however inconvenient the admission of the miracle might be, it would be highly impolitic to dispute its possibility. They therefore gave the cup to the soldier, at the same time solemnly warning him for the future against similar favours from images of any kind, and impressing him with the conviction that the Virgin required profound silence from him as a proof of his gratitude.

PORTUGAL.—Advices from Lisbon state that the agitation still continues in the district of Villa Real.

SWITZERLAND.—Tranquillity has been partially restored at Geneva, and no further arrests have been made. On Friday, M. James Fazy was cited before the Juge d'Instruction, but instead of obeying the summons he immediately quitted Geneva, and published an explanation in the paper, stating that he had retired from the town to the frontier to prevent assassination, and that he will watch for a period of reaction. This letter has produced an unpleasant impression, and M. Fazy's proceedings have been condemned throughout Switzerland. A Socialist agitator, well known in Switzerland, M. Lassalle, has just been killed in a duel with a Moldo-Wallachian near Geneva. He was shot through the stomach, and only survived a few hours. The duel did not originate in political motives.

BELGIUM.—The second session of the Catholic Congress of Belgium was opened at Malines on the 29th ult., when about 4000 persons were present, including the notabilities of the Belgian Catholic party, with distinguished persons from various countries in Europe. The members of the Congress assembled in the Cathedral of St. Rambert, where a mass was celebrated by the Archbishop of Malines. They then proceeded to the Diocesan College, where Baron de Gerlach was appointed president, and delivered a long address on the subject of the general situation of Catholicism in Europe, and particularly in Belgium. The first day's sitting was brought to a conclusion by an address of devotedness to the Pope, which was immediately forwarded to Cardinal Antonelli, to be presented to his Holiness. On the 1st the great event of the sitting was the speech of the Bishop of Orleans, who in a speech of three hours, discussed the question of popular education in all its bearings, and adduced arguments to refute the attacks directed against the education imparted by religious bodies. On the 2d Father Herman, a converted Jew, formerly musical assistant to M. Liszt, and who officiated as confessor to the Catholic pirate who was hung with his three Protestant companions a short time since at Newgate, gave an account of the execution, in which he described the serenity and the ecstatic expression of the Catholic culprit, while the Protestants, on the contrary, "grimaced horribly, and their countenances betrayed the sufferings of their souls, henceforth delivered over to infernal torments." Father Felix, a celebrated Jesuit, then addressed the meeting, and endeavoured to reconcile the theory of an infallible Church with liberty of conscience. The peroration of his harangue produced an inconceivable effect. "I propose to you," he exclaimed, raising his hands to heaven, "to terminate this sitting by a cheer in honour of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour." The assembly replied to this proposal by cries a hundred times repeated of "Vive Jésus Christ!" 'Our Holy Father the Pope, and our Holy Mother the Holy Church' were shouted in the same fashion, and when the orator quitted the tribune the members of the Congress mounted on the chairs and benches, waving their hats and their handkerchiefs, and crying with heads bare, 'Vive le Père Felix, Vive les Jésuites!'" The sittings closed with a sermon by Father Felix, and a banquet at which the first toast was to the Pope, "the Great Father of Christianity." One of the speakers, M. de Kerchove, said, "We are the sons of Jesus Christ, and we will never retreat before the sons of Voltaire." Another speaker said, "Let us close our ranks, fire upon the enemy, and advance." It has been decided that a congress of the Catholic press shall assemble every year from the 15th August to the 1st October. The first meeting is to take place next year at Brussels.

DENMARK.—The Grand Duke Nicholas of Russia, the Czarewitch, arrived in Copenhagen on the 1st inst., and left on the 7th. His Imperial Highness was accompanied by the Crown Prince to Elsinore. Distinguished Danish orders were bestowed by the King on the members of the suite. It is believed that the betrothal of the Czarewitch to the Princess Dagmar, the second daughter of King Christian, will take place shortly; the Prince is 21 years of age and the Princess 17. The Prince and Princess of Wales landed at Elsinore on Tuesday, and proceeded to the Castle of Fredensburg, where the Czarewitch had previously arrived. The Rigsraad was closed on the 1st inst. Herr von Bluhme, the President of the Council, read a short message from the King, ordering the close of the session. His Majesty said that, if necessary, he would convoke the Chambers for an extraordinary session. The proposals contained in the reports of the political and military committees were adopted by the Folksthing on the previous day, after an animated debate. At the sitting of the Landsthing on the previous Tuesday, the President of the Council stated that the Government, while desirous of the negotiations being brought to a close as early as might be, would endeavour to save as much of Schleswig as possible, and at the same time to preserve the political and national independence of those parts of the country irretrievably lost. Herr von Bluhme added that success in this respect was uncertain, that he had little hope, and that all the means that could be made use of had already been employed. The political committee of the Folksthing recommended the adoption of the following resolution:—

"The Folksthing expresses its confidence that in concluding peace the Government will support the natural and sacred right of the populations to determine their own future by means of free voting by districts or by communes."

Deputations from the north of Schleswig have arrived at Copenhagen with addresses to King Christian demanding protection for their nationalities. The official Berlingske Tidende has published a reply to the recent comments of the semi-official Prussian organ, on the statement of the Danish Finance Minister as to the efforts made by the Government to preserve the Danish portion of Schleswig to the monarchy. It says that these efforts were by no means incompatible with a loyal interpretation of the peace preliminaries.

BAVARIA.—The latest news from Munich states that the King of Prussia paid King Louis a visit at Hohenschwangau, a royal chateau in Upper Bavaria, on his way to Baden-Baden. On the 27th and 28th Count von Bismark had long conferences with Baron Schrenk, the Bavarian Minister for Foreign Affairs, and in the night of Sunday, the 28th, he followed the Sovereign to Hohenschwangau.

FRANKFORT.—A marriage is about to take place between M. d'Erlanger, banker and consul-general of Greece at Frankfort, and Miss Slidell, youngest daughter of the representative of the Confederate States at Paris.

SAXONY.—The betrothal of the Princess Sophie, the only unmarried daughter of the King of Saxony, to Duke Charles Theodore, brother of the Empress Elizabeth of Austria, has just taken place at Possenhofen.

BOHEMIA.—The ex-Grand Duke of Tuscany has been re-elected Mayor of Schlackenwerth, in Bohemia, the ex-Sovereign being content to act as mayor of the village in which he resides.

PRUSSIA.—The semi-official Provinzial Correspondenz of Thursday states that the commercial negotiations with Austria will probably commence next week, and says:—

"The basis and point of departure for the negotiations on the part of Prussia are solely the position, with reference to her commercial policy, which Prussia has acquired by the Treaty of Commerce with France, and by the newly-established Zollverein upon the basis of that treaty. It is quite impossible that this position should be abandoned. The question entirely centres in finding means to bring about a closer and more beneficial connexion between Austria and the Zollverein."

AUSTRIA.—A sitting of the Conference was held at Vienna on Tuesday. It is supposed that the rectification of the frontier was the subject of discussion. It is said that the recent delay was caused by the Danes, who display the greatest tenacity upon the financial question, and threaten to break off negotiations and give notice of the termination of the armistice—being of opinion that they cannot lose more than is already lost. It appears also that the inhabitants of the Duchies lay claim to a part of the outstanding instalments of the sum accorded to Denmark as an indemnification for the Sound Dues, to a part of the Danish fleet, &c., and that their claims are supported by one, if not by both of the great German Powers. The report that Austria intends forming 10 new infantry regiments immediately after the conclusion of peace is contradicted by the official journals, which state that it has not the least foundation. On the contrary, it is announced that great reductions will be made in the Austrian army. Some of the Vienna journals profess great indignation against the Emperor Maximilian, on account of his entering into relations with the kingdom of Italy.

ITALY.—The anniversary of Garibaldi's entry into Naples and the expulsion of the Bourbons has been celebrated by a brilliant fête in that city. The brigand chief, Crocco, has embarked at Civita Vecchia on board a Spanish steamer, and with a Spanish passport. The brigand chief Varia has been handed over to the Italian authorities by the commander of the French troops in Rome. Cardinal Savelli, a native of Corsica, who was promoted to the purple by the reigning Pope in 1853, died a few days since at the age of 72, after having held most important offices, among which the most conspicuous were those of Governor of Rome and Delegate of the Province of Viterbo. The Pope dined on Tuesday with Prince Borghese. His Holiness is said to have presented to the Emperor Napoleon the lance found in the tomb of Charlemagne.

SICILY.—Advices from Palermo announce that five English ships of war from Malta, under the flag of Rear-Admiral, had arrived there on their way to Catania and Naples.

RUSSIA.—The Emperor of Russia arrived in Berlin on Sunday night by special train from St. Petersburg. His Majesty, who was accompanied by a numerous retinue, was received at the station by the Crown Prince, who accompanied him to Potsdam. It had been originally intended that the Emperor should sup at Potsdam with the Crown Prince and Princess, but his Majesty did not alight, and proceeded on to Brandenburg, where he took supper, and immediately resumed his journey to Darmstadt, where the Empress is residing. It is stated that Prince Gortschakoff is about to go abroad on leave of absence. The armour-plated frigate Sebastopol has just been launched at Cronstadt; she exceeds the size of the Gloire and Normandie, which are the largest frigates in the French navy, and nearly equals in measurement the Warrior and Black Prince. She is armed at the prow with an immense ram. The Russian steam frigate Sadunch, Admiral Cyraloff, has been totally lost off the coast of Uando. Three officers and 20 seamen were drowned; the rest of the crew were saved with difficulty.

THE PRINCIPALITIES.—A numerous deputation from the Assembly has presented an address to Prince Conza, in reply to his message at the opening of the Session. The address testifies to the satisfaction and gratitude of the entire nation, and promises unlimited confidence and support to the Prince. All political refugees have been expelled from Roumania within the last few days, and many hundreds have already arrived at Constantinople.

SYRIA.—Fresh disturbances have taken place in the district of Payaz. Dede Bey, an influential local chief who had lately been put under arrest by order of the Government, heads the revolt, and has with him 2000 mountaineers, well armed and mounted. The rebels have established a regular camp in a spot which commands the roads to Aleppo and other important towns. Fears are entertained for the safety of the port of Alexandretta, which has already been attacked, and the governor of Aleppo has thrown 50 men into the place by way of a garrison.

TUNIS. — Advices from Tunis to the 31st ult. state that business had then been resumed, and that the caravans had recommenced their journeys between the towns of the interior. The Bey had sent another body of 6000 men against the insurgents on the coast. The English, French, and Italian fleets have been recalled, a few vessels being left at the disposal of the Consuls.

INDIA.—The Viceroy will leave Simla for Lahore early in October, and return to Calcutta in November. Sir Charles Trevelyan's recommendation for the introduction of the English sovereign into India as a legal tender for 10 rupees has been adopted by the Governor-General in Council, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State. The Bhootanese are now quarrelling among themselves, and there is every prospect of a serious civil war. The latest intelligence from Affghanistan states that the Ameer and his rebellious brother, the Sirdar Mahomed Uzul Khan, have made friends, and it was expected that the latter would accompany the Ameer on his return to Cabool. The Maharajah of Cashmere has applied to Government to grant him some land in lieu of the money he lent them during the mutinies and in consideration of his services on that occasion.

CHINA.—A telegram from Shanghai of July 22 states that the city of Cangsing has been captured. A camp of instruction has been formed under Colonel Gordon for the purpose of training the Chinese troops.

COCHIN CHINA.—Advices from Saigon to the 26th July announce that a new Franco-Annamite treaty was signed on the 15th of that month. The principal clauses of the treaty are the following:—The establishment of a French protectorate in six provinces of Lower Cochin China; the opening of three important ports on the Annam coast, with the concession of nine kilometres of ground in the vicinity of each port, where French merchants shall be at liberty to travel and trade; entire liberty to French missionaries to propagate the Christian religion throughout the whole kingdom; the establishment of Consular agents at Hué and the ports opened to commerce; and payment of an indemnity of 100,000,000f. to the French Government. It is said that the new treaty is favourably received by the colony.

NEW ZEALAND.—The Maories were attacked and defeated by the British troops on the 25th ult. The enemy lost 200 men. The chief who commanded the Maories at Gate Pah was among the killed.

UNITED STATES.—General Grant has successfully resisted all attempts to dislodge him from the Weldon Railroad. He is now entrenched at Reams station, and holds seven miles of the line, while his cavalry are operating on the Danville Railroad. All his attempts however to advance his lines have proved ineffectual, the Confederates being found in force at every point. General Hancock, with the 2d Corps, has been withdrawn from Deep Bottom, and has gone to the support of Warren. The Confederates attacked General Birney at Deep Bottom on the 18th ult., but were repulsed. The Federal losses at Deep Bottom and on the Weldon Railroad during the week are asserted to have been 12,000. The Fifth Corps alone is admitted to have lost 5000. General Early defeated Sheridan near Charleston on the 21st ult., and drove him to Hallton and Harper's Ferry, with a loss of 1000 men. The accounts from the Upper Potomac are conflicting, some stating that General Early was repulsed on the 25th in an attempt to cross the Potomac at Williamsport, while others assert that he has run a considerable force into Maryland, by crossing the Potomac above Harper's Ferry. It is reported that General Lee in person has occupied the Shenandoah Valley with a large force of infantry and cavalry. On the 21st General Wheeler cut the Chattanooga and Knoxville Railway near London. He is moving towards Knoxville, followed by the Federal General Steadman. General Forrest has made a raid into Memphis, but retired with some plunder, pursued by the Federals. The Confederate Colonel Dickson routed a body of Federal cavalry at Gainsville, Florida, on the 18th, capturing 150 prisoners and one cannon. He also rescued 100 negroes kidnapped by the Federals. Nashville despatches of the 14th state that during a reconnaissance of the obstructions of Mobile Bay on the 14th Admiral Farragut discovered that an ironclad had been sunk directly in the channel, rendering approach to the city impossible. There is nothing further from Atlanta, except positive confirmation that Hood has been heavily reinforced. The Mayor of Mobile has ordered all non-combatants to leave the city, and urged its defence to the last extremity. Rumours of a movement by the Administration for an armistice continue. The New York Herald asserts that Judge Black has gone to Niagara Falls to re-open peace negociations on the part of the Administration with the Confederate Commissioners. General Butler has arrived at Washington, and Banks is also expected. It is believed that a change in the Cabinet will shortly take place. Prominent Republicans of Boston have proposed to Mr. Lincoln and General Fremont to withdraw from the Presidential contest, in order that a new Convention may be called, and a candidate selected who will receive the united support of the party. General Fremont replied that he was willing to comply, provided his conduct met with the approbation of the Cleveland Convention, and that Mr. Lincoln definitively withdrew. Chicago despatches report that the nomination of General M'Clellan by the convention is considered certain, and that of Mr. Pendleton, of Ohio, for Vice-President. Gold has fallen to 250½, the decline being caused by the probability of M'Clellan's nomination. Joseph Howard, jun., the author of the forged proclamation, was released on the 25th from Fort Lafayette, by order of Mr. Stanton. The Tallahassee destroyed 22 Federal fishing vessels off Prince Edward's Island on the 25th. The Victoria, with Müller, the suspected murderer of Mr. Briggs, on board, reached New York on the 24th ult. Muller was at once arrested, and the proceedings for his extradition were in progress when the mail left. Ex-Surgeon-General Hammond has been found guilty by a court-martial at Washington of the grossest frauds and peculation while in office in the matter of supplies for the sick and wounded soldiers, and declared for ever disqualified to again hold office under the Government.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

APPREHENSION OF MÜLLER.—By the arrival of the American mail we learn that Franz Muller was arrested on the arrival of the Victoria at New York on the 24th ult. In order to render it impossible for him to escape on his arrival at New York, a private circular was placed in the hands of all New York pilots, requesting them to deliver no newspapers on board and to inform the captain privately of what had occurred, and offering 5*l.* to the pilot who first boarded the ship. A brief whisper from the pilot apprised the captain of what was to follow. From that moment Muller was closely watched, though he did not know it. The English detectives accompanied the health officer, who boarded the ship in the evening off Staten Island. The steerage passengers were then called aft, for medical inspection, as they were told. Muller answered to his name when summoned, and on descending to the cabin found himself in presence of the police officers and the two chief witnesses against him. Among the eight passengers, including Müller, who were taken into the cabin, Mr. Death pointed out the accused. When charged with the crime, he turned "ghastly white," but soon recovered his self-possession, and denied all knowledge of it, and accounted for his possession of the murdered man's hat and watch, which were found in his baggage, by stating that he had bought them in London. Previous to the detectives boarding the Victoria, some excursionists cried out, "How are you, Muller? Throw the murderer overboard." The prisoner is a man 24 years old, and not prepossessing in appearance; height, 5 feet 6 inches; light hair, and small grey eyes. He was poorly dressed. He was conducted to the head-quarters of the police, where his portrait was taken. The people were disappointed in his appearance. They expected to see a fierce-looking individual, instead of a poor, cowering-looking man, as he is, who seemed to be more dead than alive. He said he would like to have the benefit of legal advice, but was unable to pay. Counsel was then assigned him by the Court, Mr. Shaffer being selected for that purpose. He was examined before the United States Commissioner, Newton. Müller sat quietly, and evinced no interest in the proceedings. In answer to the Court he said he expected his sister from 139, Nassau Street, but he could not say if she was in court. Mr. Marbury then opened the case for the Crown. He quoted the treaty, providing for the delivering up of persons fleeing from justice in one country, when found in another charged with certain crimes, and demanded that the prisoner, Franz Muller, who was charged with murdering Thomas Briggs, in the county of Middlesex, be rendered up for trial, if the evidence adduced warranted his commitment for trial on the charge of murder. Mr. Marbury then briefly narrated the story of the murder, and proposed to read the depositions of the witnesses examined in England. Mr. Shaffer, who defended the prisoner, objected to the admissibility of those papers, unless the witnesses were all present to be cross-examined. He also contended that the signature of Mr. Adams, certifying that the depositions were authentic, must be proved. The Commissioner, however, decided that the certificate of the United States' Minister, under the seal of the Legation, must be received. After a long discussion, Mr. Marbury read the depositions upon which the warrant of arrest was based, and called witnesses to prove the authenticity of the documents. Inspectors Tanner and Kerressey were then sworn, and recapitulated the evidence they adduced in London. Mr. Robert Death was next sworn, and after recapitulating the evidence adduced in London, went on to say that he had not the least doubt as to the identity of the prisoner. When he saw him on board the Victoria he was requested to wait till he was called in the cabin where the prisoner stood, with a number of other persons. He looked at all those present; there were eight or nine, all strangers. After looking at them all deliberately, he told Inspectors Tanner and Kerressey that the second man was the man. In cross-examination, Mr. Death said that he identified the prisoner by his light and general appearance. He had not been able to speak as to whether he had whiskers or not, but he had no moustache or beard. He should say prisoner was rather under middle size, and not a thick-set but rather a slight man. The prisoner's counsel called attention to the depositions, which stated that a tall and thin and not thick-set man sat beside Mr. Briggs. Witness went on to say that when he boarded the Victoria he knew he was going to identify the man. The description of the man was given by himself and brother. J. Matthews was sworn, and said that Müller's hat fitted his head in an ordinary way, but a little too easy. Detective Tremnann deposed that the prisoner had told him he had had the hat about a year, and that he had had the watch two years. This was the case for the Crown, when the Court adjourned till next day, the 27th ult., when the City of Baltimore, which brings this news, left New York. It is supposed that Inspector Tanner left New York with the prisoner on the 6th, and will arrive in England about the 15th. The greatest excitement prevailed in New York consequent upon Müller's arrest, and the papers contain long details of his conduct and proceedings during the voyage. They state that the cook of the vessel, who slept in the next berth, voluntarily stated to the captain that Müller, during the voyage, seemed to sleep very unsoundly, often awaking with a start, or talking in his sleep, exclaiming "Who's there?" "Take your hands off!" and similar expressions denoting a very perturbed mind. He had sold two of his shirts during the voyage to pay for his food, and his evident want of money and clothing had often been the subject of conversation among the passengers. Mr. Briggs's watch was found in the trunk of the prisoner, sewed up in a piece of chamois leather, and his black silk hat, marked "Digance, hatter," had been worn by the prisoner during the voyage, but when taken charge of by Inspector Tanner a cap was borrowed for him to go on shore. It is stated that the voyage of the Victoria was one of such unusual length, that one of the passengers said in Müller's hearing that there must be a murderer on board, but he took no notice of the remark. The adjourned inquest on Mr. Briggs was resumed on Thursday, and adjourned to the 19th inst., on which day the detective officers will no doubt have returned with their prisoner from America. On Tuesday night a man called Augustus King confessed to the landlord of a tavern at Bow that he was Müller's accomplice in the murder. He was taken before the magistrate at Worship Street Police Court on Thursday, when he said that he was tipsy at the time of the confession, and denied any further connection with the murder than helping to carry Mr. Briggs's body from the railway. There seems to be little doubt that the revelation was made in bravado while he was drunk, but the magistrate ordered the matter to be investigated, and remanded the prisoner for a week.

UTILIZATION OF SEWAGE.—A Select Committee of the House of Commons sat in May, June, and July of the present year to inquire into plans for dealing with the sewage of the metropolis and other large towns, with a view to its utilization to agricultural purposes. The Committee examined a great number of witnesses, and agreed to the following report, which has just been published:—

"The Committee commenced their inquiry by examining into all those plans for utilising, in a liquid state, the sewage of the metropolis which had been laid before the Metropolitan Board of Works, and were referred to the Committee by an order of the House. The Committee have ascertained from Cornish engineers of the greatest reputation the prices of the steam engines and pumps which would be required to raise various quantities of sewage to stated heights. Mr. Bateman, the well-known water engineer, was examined as to the prices of the mains and pipes which would be necessary for the conveyance and distribution of sewage over land, and the estimated cost of laying them down and jointing them. The Committee has come to the conclusion that it is not only possible to utilise the sewage of towns, by conveying it in a liquid state through mains and pipes to the country, but that such an undertaking may be made to result in pecuniary benefit to the ratepayers of the towns whose sewage is thus utilised. That benefit may, in a few years, be greatly increased; for the amount of artificial manures is even at present insufficient, and the sources whence some of the most important are obtained will in a few years be exhausted. Other means of fertilising land must therefore be resorted to. The Committee, having examined the chairman and engineer of the Metropolitan Board of Works, are of opinion that more might have been done by that Board towards the profitable use of the sewage of London; and that the completion of the outfall sewerage of the metropolis ought, at the earliest possible moment, to be followed by the adoption of a system which may convert that sewage from a nuisance into a permanent and increasing source of agricultural fertility. Even if a pecuniary benefit were not to be secured, yet such a consideration should not deter local authorities from taking such steps as are possible to free rivers from pollution. The Committee examined several witnesses regarding the pollution of the rivers and streams of the country. There can be no doubt as to the injury which results from the practice of conducting sewage and other refuse matters into the rivers, whence numerous towns, villages, and country populations derive their water supply. It is imperatively necessary that such a practice should be discontinued. No efficient artificial method has been discovered to purify, for drinking and culinary purposes, water which has been once infected by town sewage. By no known mechanical or chemical means can such water be more than partially cleansed; it is always liable to putrify again. Processes of filtering and deodorisation cannot, therefore, be relied upon to do more than mitigate the evil. Water which appears perfectly pure to the eye is sufficient, under certain conditions, to breed serious epidemics in the population which drinks it. Soils, however, and the roots of growing plants have a great and rapid power of abstracting impurities from sewage water, and rendering it again innocuous and free from contamination. Mr. Ffennell, the Chief Inspector of Fisheries, stated in his evidence that sewage water in a putrifying state is destructive to fish. A considerable increase in the amount of food for the people and of revenue to the owners of rivers would, therefore, result from purifying the rivers of the United Kingdom, which are now contaminated by sewage and other matters. If the sewage of towns is no longer to flow into rivers, the only alternative which remains is to dispose of it on the land. It has been decided that it is a nuisance at common law to discharge any sewage into a river. Yet the law is, nevertheless, inoperative, for want of powers to remove the nuisance. Until within the last 30 years it has been the custom to utilise all the nightsoil and other refuse on the land. Great obstructions used to be thrown in the way of making house drains which should empty themselves into the street sewer. The use of the latter was confined to the conveyance of the surface waters of the town. There was a service of scavengers whose duty it was to remove excrementitious matters in their carts; and it was the office of the mayors of towns to take care that rivers, streams, and ponds were kept free from all noxious or filthy substances. But when the modern water closets came into vogue, and the practice was introduced of flushing house drains into the sewers, then the diluted nightsoil first began to find its way into rivers. Yet the removal of house refuse to the land would now be much easier and cheaper than it was formerly; because carriage by suspension in a liquid is the cheapest mode of transport. In many towns of Lancashire there are to this day numerous cesspits. This is the case with Manchester, where the local authorities expend about 20,000*l.* a year for emptying them and then removing the contents to the land, and receive back 50 per cent. by the sale of the material. A system of sewerage, and the necessary works to remove all the refuse in a liquid state to the adjacent fields, would, in Mr. Rawlinson's opinion, cause a saving to the town. The Commissioners of Sewers and the Board of Health took no steps to prevent the introduction of the practice of flushing the refuse of houses into the street sewers, and thence into the rivers. For they were of opinion that no time should be lost in freeing habitations from the dangerous infection of putrifying substances: and assumed that when this more pressing object had been accomplished the law would be again respected, and measures would be taken to free the rivers and restore the refuse once more to the land. Dwelling-houses in the metropolis and many parts of England have already been freed, which has caused the increased pollution of rivers. This latter evil is becoming worse every year in proportion to the adoption of a better water supply, of a more perfect system of house drainage, and the increase of the population. Dr. Acland and other witnesses believe that rivers can be effectually freed from pollution only by extending the Local Government Act to entire watersheds; or, rather, by establishing boards somewhat similar to the present local boards of towns, which should extend over the whole area of each catchment basin, instead of being restricted to the precincts of each town. These watershed or catchment boards should, in the opinion of those witnesses, have all the powers for this purpose which are now enjoyed by the local boards of towns; and they should be placed under the direct authority and supervision of the Home Office. They furthermore hold that it should be the duty of the Home Secretary to see that the law, as to the pollution of streams, is strictly enforced by these watershed boards. The Secretary of the local government office, as well as Mr. Rawlinson, the inspecting engineer, while concurring in the necessity of appointing a board for each catchment basin, gave a decided opinion that the duty of the watershed board should be merely to supervise the action of the local boards within their district, and enforce an obedience to the law in causing them to desist from polluting the streams; but that the necessary works should be carried out by the local boards alone. The Committee recommend that the important object of completely freeing the entire basins of rivers from pollution should be rendered possible by general legislative enactment, enabling the inhabitants of such entire districts to adopt some controlling power for that purpose; but it should include a provision for compelling local boards to render the sewage of their districts innocuous by application to the land for agricultural purposes. The case of the valley of the Thames (where the purification of the river, which has been sought by the expenditure of enormous sums, is to a considerable extent counteracted by the increased discharge of sewage from towns higher up the stream) requires special and immediate attention. Before concluding the inquiry the Committee received some evidence with regard to the measures now being carried out by the Metropolitan Board of Works for diverting the sewage of the metropolis. This inquiry the Committee have been unable to complete."

NEW RIDE IN ST. JAMES'S PARK.—Alterations are making in St. James's Park, in order to provide a ride for horsemen similar to Rotten Row in Hyde Park. The portion of the Park which Mr. Cowper, the Chief Commissioner of Works, has set apart for this purpose, extends from Storey's Gate to Buckingham Palace, being the whole length of Birdcage Walk. In the course of a few days the railings on the north side of Birdcage Walk will be removed 30 or 40 feet back, and that strip of ground will be cut off from the enclosure.

THE CITY TRAFFIC REGULATIONS.—On Saturday the first case under the new act for the regulation of the City traffic came before the sitting magistrate at Guildhall. A carman in the employment of a building firm in Bishopsgate Street was charged with driving a cart laden with timber exceeding 25 feet in length through the City between the hours of 9 A.M. and 6 P.M. The offence was proved, and as it was the first case a nominal fine was inflicted.

METROPOLITAN IMPROVEMENTS.—Among the works sanctioned by Parliament in the last Session for the convenience or embellishment of the metropolis, the most important was the raising of Holborn valley, which will be commenced forthwith, and will present one of the most effective views of street architecture in London. Another great work for which powers were granted is the formation of a large wharf and graving docks, to stretch right across the Isle of Dogs, with an inner dock to run north at right angles towards the West India Docks, while on the south side of the river the Commercial Dock Company have obtained powers to extend their works; and new docks are to be made near the Southwark Waterworks, to be called the West London Docks. An Act was passed for the formation of a new park at Rotherhithe, on the site of some market gardens, to be called Southwark Park; it will be about the size of St. James's, and will afford recreation and enjoyment to the large industrial communities located in the populous parishes of Rotherhithe, Bermondsey, and Deptford. A new market is to be established in the heart of the Borough, with a frontage in the London Road. Two new bridges are to be constructed, one at Wandsworth, with approaches leading from St. John's Hill on the south to the King's Road on the north of the river; and another at Chelsea, to be called Albert Bridge, which will connect the west side of Battersea Park with Cheyne Walk and the populous districts of Chelsea and Brompton.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—Mr. Spurgeon's withdrawal from this body has been announced.

THEATRE PREACHING.—On Sunday evening the first of the series of theatres which it is proposed to occupy during the next few months for the purpose of religious services—the Surrey, in the Blackfriars Road—was opened, and received a very large congregation of a mixed character. The private boxes and the boxes generally were filled by persons to whom religious services were evidently no novelty. The pit was also filled, many of those present being a class of persons seldom seen in churches or chapels. The rest were respectably dressed persons, apparently working-men and tradespeople. The galleries were not opened. It was announced that the service will be repeated to-morrow evening in the same place, and that the Marylebone, Sadler's Wells, Standard, and Pavilion Theatres will be opened for similar religious services on the first Sunday evening in October.

ALTERATION IN THE NAMES OF STREETS.—The following alterations in the names of some of the principal metropolitan thoroughfares have just been effected by the Metropolitan Board of Works:—Bear Lane and York Street, St. Luke's, Finsbury, is now Central Street; and John's Row and Wilmington Street in the same locality, is merged into one thoroughfare, and named Lever Street. Southampton Street, Russell Square, is now called Cosmo Place; the distinction of Great and Little Russell Street, Covent Garden, is abolished, and the two are now Bedford Street. Holloway Road now extends from Upper Street, Islington, to the Great Northern Railway, and the host of terraces, places, buildings, &c., are merged into one common nomenclature, Holloway Road; while the road has been entirely renumbered, the numbers running from north to south, the odd numbers on the west, and the even on the east. Pitfield Street, Hoxton, now extends from Old Street Road to the New North Road, and Haberdasher's Walk and Place no longer exists. Foley Place, Marylebone, has been renamed Langham Place; Marylebone Street, Regent Street, is now called Glasshouse Street; and Queen Street, Golden Square, is now Denman Street. Numerous other alterations are in contemplation.

PRESERVATION OF THE THAMES FROM POLLUTION.—On Tuesday the Thames Conservancy Commissioners, under the provisions of the Act of last session, took vigorous measures to prevent any further pollution of the river by gas companies and other manufacturers allowing washing stuff, "blue peter," and other offensive matter to pass into the Thames; and to prevent the throwing of gravel, ballast, &c., therein, or its deposit in any position on the banks, or upon any stream thereof within eight miles, from which it may be carried by flood into the river.

WESTMINSTER BRIDGE IMPROVEMENTS.—On Tuesday, by order of the Chief Commissioner of Works, the removal of the whole of the houses required to complete the approaches to Westminster Bridge was commenced in Parliament Street, New Palace Yard, and Bridge Street.

DESTITUTION IN SHOREDITCH.—One of the most painful among the many cases of misery and death resulting from destitution in the metropolis, was investigated a few days since by a coroner's jury in the east end of London. Mr. Henry Jeffreys had formerly been in a large way of business near Maidstone, as a paper manufacturer, and was known to scientific men as a skilful preparer of fibres for the purpose of paper-making and for manufactures of certain kinds, interesting specimens of which were exhibited in the Indian department of the last Exhibition, but by a reverse of fortune he and his family became reduced to great poverty. Determined to battle bravely with their altered circumstances they went on from day to day, working and endeavouring by every honest means to increase their income and reduce their expenditure. In this desperate struggle the two daughters took a prominent part, working day and night for a slopseller who paid them 2*s.* a dozen for making flannel shirts, and for blue and white ones 2*s.* 6*d.* a dozen. This incessant work, with little food and the bare boards to sleep upon, at length produced their effects, and one by one the members of this unfortunate family were stricken down by illness and thereby deprived of the means of procuring even the scanty food which had hitherto enabled them to exist. One of the daughters died from effusion of serum on the brain, caused by want of proper nourishment, refusing to the last to allow any medical man to see her, because he must at the same time discover the misery of the family. The other daughter lay on the floor in a dying condition when the coroner's jury visited the place; and she also refused to be handed over to the workhouse authorities. The jury returned a verdict in accordance with the evidence, and the publication of the case immediately excited so much compassion that a subscription has been opened for the benefit of the family, and there is reason to hope that they will now be placed in more comfortable circumstances.

ALLEGED WIFE MURDER IN SHOREDITCH.—A few days since a woman called Mary Anne Birch was found lying dead on the floor of a room at No. 19, Margaret Street, Shoreditch, with marks of severe violence on her body. On Sunday night Thomas Birch, the husband of deceased, had some friends at his house. A quarrel then took place between him and his wife. When the friends left they both went to bed. Next morning at five o'clock the husband, who is a bricklayer, states that he left the house, leaving his wife asleep in bed. In the evening, at half-past eight o'clock, he returned home, and found her dead. There were marks of violence on the stomach and eyes, which appeared to have been inflicted by kicks. The police, after investigating the affair, arrested the husband on suspicion of causing the death of his wife, and a post mortem examination of the body proved that death was caused by the rupture of the meningeal artery, and the consequent slow effusion of blood on the brain. The rupture had been caused either by a fall or a blow—most probably by the latter. The body was covered with marks of blows, some of evidently recent date, the others two or three weeks old. At the inquest on Tuesday the prisoner, Thomas Birch, a powerful looking man, was brought up in custody under a warrant from the Secretary of State, and the witnesses proved that he was known in the neighbourhood as the man who ill used his wife, and that she was in the habit of drinking to excess. The coroner, in summing up, said that it was for the jury to say whether death was occasioned in cool blood, or in a quarrel arising from the intoxication of the deceased. In the one case the verdict should be one of wilful murder, but in the second it would be one of manslaughter only. After an hour's delibration, the jury returned a verdict of Manslaughter against Thomas Birch. The Coroner then issued his warrant for the committal of the prisoner to Newgate, to take his trial at the Central Criminal Court. At the Worship Street police court on Thursday, the magistrate took a more serious view of the case, and committed the prisoner for trial on the capital charge.

THE LATE MURDER IN HATTON GARDEN.—After the inquest on Friday, at which the jury returned a verdict of Manslaughter against the prisoner, he was again taken before the Police Magistrate at Clerkenwell, who committed him for trial on the charge of Wilful Murder.

SUICIDE OF A SOLICITOR IN BATTERSEA PARK.—On Wednesday an inquest was held at Wandsworth on the body of Mr. Edward Villiers Crotty, aged 50 years. It appeared from the evidence that he was born in France, but was of Irish extraction, and was by profession a solicitor. He had lost a large fortune by betting on horse races; and, in fact, had ruined himself, and reduced his family to such straitened circumstances that his wife was obliged to go out to work as a milliner in order to support them. On Monday evening he was found lying in Battersea Park in a dying state, from the effects of prussic acid, and he died before he could be removed. The jury returned a verdict of suicide while in a state of temporary insanity.

THE MYSTERIOUS AFFAIR AT MILE END. — The adjourned inquest on the bodies of Mrs. Backingham and Mrs. Gribbins, found dead in a house at Mile End on the 26th August, was resumed and concluded on Wednesday, when Dr. Letheby stated the results of the post mortem examination and of the analysis of the stomachs. It appeared that all the appearances of the analysis led to the conclusion that the deaths were caused by the administration of cyanide of potassium, a white powder extensively used by photographers. The jury, after a brief consultation, returned a verdict "that the deceased persons died from the effects of poison; but how it was administered there was no evidence to show."

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths registered in London in the week that ended Saturday, September 3, were 1441. The average number in the corresponding week of the previous 10 years, excluding the deaths from cholera in 1854, and corrected for increase of population, was 1227. The present return is therefore 214 above the average. During the week the births of 970 boys and 897 girls, in all 1867 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1872.

Provincial.

ABERDOVEY.—Mr. Stansfeld, M.P., who has recently been staying in this town for the benefit of his health, was invited to a public meeting a few days ago, and presented with an address, thanking him for his "manly, independent, and able" conduct, both as a statesman and as a Minister of the Crown, from the commencement of his official career to its memorable termination. In reply, Mr. Stansfeld reviewed his connection with the Admiralty, Garibaldi, and Mazzini. He said:—

Nelson used to say, "Get alongside of your enemy, and then board, cutlass in hand." That state of things has now entirely gone by. Science in this, as in other matters, has made enormous strides. Perhaps the days of broadsides are entirely gone by. Our modern vessels are no longer made of wood, but constructed of iron; and if we look into the future the force of our navy will not depend so much upon the defensive as upon the offensive power of the guns. If I were to state now what I believe to be the idea of the future navy of this country, it would be this—that you should construct your vessels, starting with your guns, and with these instruments of offence you should look upon your ships simply as water carriages; that you should give them as much speed as possible, and that they should be manned by as small a crew as possible, or, to use a common expression, to have as few eggs as possible in the same basket. In all times of progress and change in the defensive armaments of the country, there must be a great increase of expenditure. To use a mercantile phrase, your old stock is getting dead, and although it is lying in your harbour you must build or buy other vessels. We have a very large fleet on our waters; they have to be kept up, they have to be manned, and besides all that, you must be building a fresh and entirely new set of vessels for the future use of this country. He then referred to Italian affairs, and said:—There has been an immense change in the position of that country. You have practically an Italy. To whom and to what is that Italy now mainly owing? I say that it is owing to the effects of two causes. It is owing, in the first instance, and if I were to assign the palm of merit I should give it to them—it is due in the first instance to the exertions of a party which has been called the National party in Italy. That party rose when there was no faith and when there was no reason to have any faith in the kings that reigned over the Italian peninsula. Now you have a kingdom, and the king pledged to carry out the interests of the people. I say that this National Italian party are worthy of the sympathy of the friends of liberty, members of whom—Garibaldi on the one hand, and Mazzini on the other—have long been my personal friends. We know now what to think, and we know what the world thinks, of the chivalry and genius of Garibaldi. That has been shown, and it is not necessary to sing his praises. It was a source of great gratification to me to find that Garibaldi was received with open arms, and fêted by the aristocracy of this country. Some will say—"Now, you don't identify yourself with all the imprudent acts of these men." I say that they have not always been prudent. If they had been prudent they would not have done what they have achieved. It is not always the prudent that gain the victory, and when it is a forlorn hope it is not the prudent, it is the enthusiastic, that lead ultimately to a great victory. The great thing that we should have in view in dealing with men is that we should understand their character. I feel that I do know the character, objects, and lives of these men. Upon one of these men lately—upon his name and upon his character—a cloud seemed to hang, a storm seemed to be impending, that threatened his liberty, and perhaps his life. I was in a peculiar position. On the one hand I was his private friend, who had known him for years, and upon whom, if it was on any one, it was incumbent to speak of the knowledge I had of him. On the other hand, I was a member of a Government whose rights and position I had to consider as well as my own. I was frequently told that I might have been taught to combine prudence with private friendship, and if I had tact, and if I had known how to act, that I should have still been a member of the Government. I cannot agree with these members. There is a time, I say, for prudence, but there is a time also for something more than prudence. I felt that it was my duty to protest against the charges made against him, and I determined to do so regardless of what the consequences might be to me. And I say that if I had been false to these men who have been risking their lives for this noble cause, I should not have been worthy of the place I held. I spoke as his friend, and I protested against the calumnies that were brought against him. It was thought that this event, with the very strong denials which I had given from time to time, afforded room for an attack upon the Government of the day. Now then came another duty. I felt that that which was a private duty which I should answer, should not fall upon those who were unwilling that I should leave them. They divided upon the question, and they stuck to me. But so soon as Lord Palmerston, the Premier of this country, made it evident that he was not abandoning his colleague—though he refused to leave me—I insisted upon resigning, for I would not be a source of weakness instead of strength to a Government which I wished to support. And I have the satisfaction of thinking that the course which I pursued has met with the general approval of the largest majority of the Liberal party. I have had ample evidence of it in numerous letters, and in the press of this country, and, without detaining you any longer, though last yet not least, I have evidence of it to-day."

BILSTON.—A shocking case of child murder was discovered a few days since at Cosley. A little girl called Eliza Sillitoe, aged about six years, was found dead, and her body in a decomposed state, in a field of wheat. Her neckerchief, saturated with blood, was found some distance from the body, pressed together, as if it had been thrown there, her hat was placed by her side, her shoes and stockings off, the shoes being also placed by her side, and the stockings tucked in them. The ground under the body was saturated with blood which had flown from the corpse, and two surgeons gave it as their opinion that the blood had flown from a wound before death on or about the throat. Suspicion at once attached to the girl's father, a miner, named Richard Hale, who had been imprisoned on the charge of causing the death, by neglect, of the child's mother, whom he married after the birth of the child. He was known to have uttered threats against the child, and to have desired her death. After his arrest a woman, named Cecilia Baker, with whom he had recently cohabited, was taken into custody, and two witnesses deposed that they had seen her coming out of the cornfield in company with him from a point near to the spot where the body was found, and during the time that it must have been lying there. The jury, at the inquest, returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder" against the father, who was thereupon committed for trial at the next assizes.

BIRMINGHAM.—The triennial musical festival in aid of the General Hospital in this town commenced on Tuesday, under the presidency of the Earl of Lichfield, and continued daily up to last night. The performances included Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" and "Hymn of Praise," and "Elijah," Handel's "Messiah," Beethoven's "Mount of Olives," and Mr. Costa's new oratorio "Naaman." The evening concerts included two new cantatas, the "Bride of Dunkerron" by Mr. H. Smart, and "Kenilworth" by Mr. Arthur Sullivan, in addition to the usual selections of miscellaneous music. The principal performers were Mdlle. Titiens, Madame Rudersdorff, Madame Lemmens Sherrington, Mdlle. Adelina Patti, Madame Sainton-Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Santley, Mr. Weiss, Madame Arabella Goddard, Messrs. Sainton and Blagrove. Mr. Costa was the conductor, and the band included 140 instrumentalists and a choral body of 367 singers. The great event of the festival was the first performance of Mr. Costa's "Naaman," which was completely successful, and was received throughout with the greatest possible enthusiasm, no less than 12 pieces being encored.

DOVER.—The morning and evening mail trains of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company now land and embark the mails and passengers with their luggage at the Admiralty Pier at this port, thus entirely superseding the use of small boats and saving the transit to and from the packet and the railway. This is a great boon to travellers on dark and boisterous nights, and saves them the expense of cab or omnibus hire and the well-known exactions of the Dover town porters.

DUFFIELD.—Isaac Watson, servant of Mrs Harrison, Duffield Wold, was summoned before the magistrates a few days since, charged by Mrs. Harrison's manager with refusing to attend church on Sunday after being requested by his mistress to do so. The defendant was ordered to attend some place of worship and to pay expenses.

HEREFORD. — On Saturday the memorial statue recently erected in this city in honour of Sir George Cornewall Lewis, the late Minister for War, was publicly unveiled by Lord Palmerston, under whom he had successively filled three of the highest offices of the State. A vast assemblage of the citizens and inhabitants of the county assembled to witness the ceremony, and Lord Palmerston was welcomed with great enthusiasm. After receiving addresses from the corporation and the monument committee, Lord Palmerston drew aside the curtain which covered the statue, amid the deafening cheers of the multitude, the troops simultaneously presenting arms, salutes being also fired, and the militia band playing a slow march. The statue, which is by Baron Marochetti, is in bronze, and is considered an excellent and characteristic likeness, representing the late statesman in the plain morning dress of an English gentleman. The pedestal bears the following inscription:—Sir George Cornewall Lewis, a wise and honest statesman, a profound scholar, a kind and firm friend; M.P. for the county of Hereford from 1847 to 1852; chief steward of the city: Chancellor of the Exchequer from 1855 to 1858; Home Secretary from 1859 to 1860; Secretary for War from 1860 to 1863. Born, 1806; died, 1863." Lord Palmerston then stood forward, and after thanking the company for the reception they had given him, and referring to the effect of such memorials in stimulating men to great enterprises, spoke as follows on the claims of Sir George Lewis to the respect and gratitude of his countrymen:—

"You are now assembled to confer posthumous honour on a great and distinguished statesman, who, by the inscrutable decrees of Providence, was taken away from us prematurely, and at a moment when, in the full vigour of his age, we might have expected from him the continuance of long and useful public labours. All you can do now is that which you have met here to perform—viz., to commemorate by a lasting memorial the respect and esteem which his contemporaries felt for him, and to hold out to future ages an instructive and inspiring example to induce them to emulate that career which he so honourably and usefully followed. There has seldom been any man in a great public career who so entitled himself to the respect and admiration of his fellow countrymen as the late Sir George Lewis. I may say that the whole active part of his life was devoted, in one way or another, to the service of his country. During the latter part of his life he filled some of the most arduous and most important offices in the State. He was at one time Chancellor of the Exchequer, and managed during the Crimean War—a period of great anxiety and great difficulty—the financial concerns of the kingdom; and it is perfectly true that there never was a Finance Minister who acquired and retained to a greater degree than Sir G. Lewis did the confidence of all that commercial community who are so much interested in the accurate and efficient discharge of the functions of that minister. He then afterwards took charge of the internal affairs of the country as Secretary of State for the Home Department, and there, in that perpetual intercourse which he had with the gentry, the nobility, the corporations, and the different communities connected with our domestic administration, he conciliated their esteem, acquired their confidence, and so, with great advantage, fulfilled the duties of that important post. A vacancy unfortunately happened, through an event much to be deplored, in the office of Minister for the War Department; and Sir George Lewis—not according to his own inclination, because he would have preferred remaining at the post which he then occupied, but at the earnest request of myself and others connected with the Government—undertook the more arduous duties of the War Minister of this country. Those duties he admirably performed; and I cannot charge myself with the belief that, however heavy their pressure was upon him, they tended in any degree to shorten his valuable life. Therefore, in all those great and important public positions, he fulfilled his duties in a manner which won for him the respect, the esteem, and the approbation of all concerned in those several departments, exhibiting at the same time a versatility of talent which perhaps few men in an equal degree possessed. In his Parliamentary labours he was an able and efficient debater. He stood up manfully against all opponents in defence of his own opinions, but with a calmness, a forbearance, a power of cool logical argument, which, although he convinced many who had previously differed from him in opinion, and although he confuted his political antagonists, yet prevented him, even in the warmth of debate, from ever making a personal political enemy. And those who know, in any sphere of life, how much the passions are apt to be excited by finding opinions adverse to their own supported by able antagonists, and how much the human mind is impatient of contradiction, must know what a fund of good nature, what a fund of calm forbearance, what a fund of substantial reasoning there must have existed in a mind which could pass through debates in the House of Commons night after night and year after year, repelling attacks on some occasions, urging opinions on others, and yet, although distinguished as an able speaker, never by any lapse or yielding to any impulse converting a political antagonist into a personal enemy. But not only was Sir G. Lewis most distinguished as a public man.

As was well observed by Mr. Clive, he contrived, in a way which excited not only the admiration but the astonishment of those who knew him—he contrived, while engaged almost all the active part of his life in the performance of public duties of greater or less importance, and all requiring great devotion and time, to acquire more varied, more extensive and deeper knowledge of all kinds than has often fallen to the lot even of those who have nothing else to do but apply their minds to its acquisition. He was one of the most learned men in private life as well as one of the most active in public duties. Mr. Clive has well stated that there is one here who can bear testimony to the fact that, however great was his learning, there was in him withal an unpretending singleness and simplicity of mind—that he was not given to any unnecessary display of his knowledge—that a man might have passed hours in his society, and unless the conversation turned by itself upon subjects with which Sir G. Lewis was so much better acquainted than most of those with whom he came in contact, he might have gone away ignorant of what a vast store of information he had heaped up in his active and industrious mind. But that knowledge was not merely useful, as all intellectual acquisitions are, but the habit of mind formed in acquiring it enabled him better to perform the public duties with which he was from time to time charged. The great and, I may say, the leading quality of his mind was a thirsting after truth. His great object was to ascertain truth. He was not impatient of contradiction or of opposition; his aim was, by comparing his own ideas with those of others, whether living or dead, whether in conversation or in books, to get at the truth and test the correctness or incorrectness of particular opinions. That quality he possessed in a greater degree than almost any one whom I have had the good fortune to meet. It was that quality which endeared him as a public man to those with whom he had to enter into communion. But in his private relations of life there was a warmth of heart, a steadiness of affection, a total unselfishness of feeling which rendered him dear to all his friends, which made him invaluable to all his family connexions, and which inspired in those who came near him in the exchange of domestic intercourse sentiments deeper even than those which can be entertained by any now assembled to do honour to his memory. It is, therefore, I say, a becoming act on the part of the people of this town and county to have erected the statue which we have now uncovered, which, being the work of one of the most distinguished artists of the present day, does give us as accurate a resemblance as possible of the features of him in whose honour it has been raised. And I hope that those whom I am addressing, and those who may follow them, generation after generation, when they pass this statue, will say "This is the statue of a man dear to his country, who rendered important services to his country, who served his Sovereign and his fellow countrymen with honesty of purpose, and with successful results." His career was a career to be imitated by all, even by those who may not possess those qualities which enabled him to arrive at that summit to which he attained. Every man in his way may make such progress as his intellectual endowments and his natural disposition may permit; and be assured that the imitation of great excellence; although it may not result in equal distinction, is the certain course to fit every man, whatever may be his talents, to be a useful member of the community and to earn the goodwill and esteem of his companions and friends in life. I therefore trust, gentlemen, that this memorial will not only prove in the present day the respect and admiration which the people of Hereford felt for Sir G. Lewis, but will be a perpetual lesson to them and their posterity, teaching them the course they ought to follow in order to benefit those among whom their lot is cast, and secure for themselves the esteem and approbation of their fellow men. Gentlemen, I beg again to thank you for having been allowed to take part in this most interesting ceremony, and to congratulate you on having brought it to so successful an issue."

The people then dispersed, and Lord Palmerston immediately drove off amid vociferous cheering with the Bishop of Hereford, to take luncheon at the palace. At the station, while waiting the departure of the train, his lordship was an object of immense interest. Ladies pressed forward to shake hands with him; farmers crowded round him, and grasped his hand as with a vice; and one of the number, rushing up to the carriage, believing no doubt that a Prime Minister should know everything, asked him what horse would win the St. Leger? Lord Palmerston laughed in his good-humoured style, but whether he satisfied his interrogator or not is not stated. At all the stations on the line at which it was known that the Premier was in the train there was the usual cheering and the same desire to see him.—The 141st Festival of the Three Choirs took place last week with complete success. The performances included Haydn's "Creation," Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Spohr's "Fall of Babylon," Rossini's "Stabat Mater," selections from Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" and "Israel in Egypt;" and Handel's "Messiah." There were secular concerts on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings, a chamber concert on Friday evening, and the festival as usual terminated with a ball. The collections amounted to about 1000*l*.

IPSWICH.—A congress of clerical and lay members of the Church is to be held in this town next month. It is to be entirely under the control of the Evangelical party, and doctrinal subjects as well as those more directly appertaining to discipline are to be discussed. The managers have laid down the basis on which they wish the congress to be held, and the principles on which they invite attendance. They say in their circular that "addresses will be delivered by the Rev. James Bardsley, Manchester; the Rev. E. Garbett, London; the Rev. E. Hoare, Tunbridge Wells; the Rev. Dr. Miller, Birmingham, and others, on the following subjects:—1, The Inspiration of Scripture; 2, The Atonement; 3, The Reality and Eternity of Future Punishment of the Wicked; 4, The Breadth, Freeness, and yet Exclusiveness of the Gospel; 5, The Rights and Duties of the Lay Members of the Church of England; 6, The Articles, Liturgy, and Subscription; 7, The Faults of the Evangelical Body of the Church of England; 8, The Best Mode of Presenting the Privileges of the Church of England to the Working Classes." As Claydon, the parish in which Brother Ignatius until lately officiated, is close to Ipswich, this congress will no doubt have a special reference to the proceedings recently enacted there.

LEEDS.—The nuisance committee of the Leeds Town Council has let the removal of the night-soil from the whole of the drainage district to the Economic Sanitary Company for 1050*l*. per annum, for a period of three years. This business has hitherto cost the town between 2000*l*. and 3000*l*. per annum.

LUTTERWORTH.—For some days past there has been a rumour which has caused considerable excitement in Leicestershire, that Bishop Colenso has engaged to preach to-morrow in this town and also at Claybrook, an adjoining village. The Rev. Robert Henry Johnson, who is the incumbent of these livings, graduated at Oxford in 1802, and may therefore be supposed to be considerably more than 80 years of age. The newly appointed Bishop of Peterborough (Dr. Jeune) has written to Mr. Johnson, expressing a hope that he will not allow Bishop Colenso to officiate in his church, at the same time intimating that if he does so he may feel it his duty to bring the matter under the notice of the ecclesiastical courts.

MAIDSTONE.—Sir George Grey, as Secretary of State, at the urgent request of the corporation and inhabitants of this town, has appointed a commissioner to inspect and report as to the present condition of the Medway, the waters of which are stated to be in a disgraceful condition, in consequence of receiving the refuse of numerous factories, &c.

PORTMADOC.—Lord Palmerston paid a visit to North Wales on the 30th ult. He came viâ Llanrwst, and travelled through the picturesque vale of Dolwyddelw, and, after inspecting the Welsh Slate Company's quarry at Festiniog, of which he is the principal proprietor, he proceeded to Tan-y-bwlch by the Festiniog Railway. On the 31st his lordship went up by the railway to inspect his new slate quarry near the top of Moelwyn Mountain, and on the 1st inst. arrived in this town and visited the Welsh Slate Company's wharf. He then took his departure for Hereford.

SHEFFIELD.—At the Cutlers' Feast on the 1st inst., Mr. Roebuck, M.P., in returning thanks for the borough members, made the following remarks on the House of Commons and on the duties of representatives:

"I have been taught to believe, and I think I am right in believing, that the business of a legislator is a matter to be learned—that law making is a subject which requires an apprenticeship. The lawyer goes through certain forms, a member of the Church of England goes through certain forms, but it would seem a legislator is what I have heard of the gig driver—it comes by instinct. Every man believes that he is exactly in the position to make laws for the country to which he belongs. Well, Sir, I think very differently. When I put before myself the point at which I aimed—that of being a representative of the people of England in the House of Commons,—what I did was to consider everything which I thought would conduce to make an efficient member of the House of Commons. There were three things which I found requisite as a member of that House—first, appropriate knowledge; next, honesty; and, 3dly, courage—and any one of these three being absent I found would nullify the other two. I found that you could have perfect knowledge; that you could have a desire to do well, but that if you had not courage to face the difficulties the thing fell before you; and you don't know, sir, the difficulties a member of the House of Commons has to encounter. There is cajolery of every sort, there is temptation of every description; but the grand thing is that that man should say to himself, 'Now I am here representing the people of England,' for though I am returned for the borough of Sheffield, still I am also representing the people of England. There is no mistake. Though I read in the papers that I am mistaken, still that is the fact—I am representing the people of England. And in this great capacity you don't know, sir, the difficulties we have to go through. Why, I will only state one class of those difficulties. Do what I will, sir, I feel very much like the drummer-boy who said, 'Hit him where you will, you cannot please him.' I feel that say what I like there are people determined to oppose it. I feel that there are buzzing flies, not simply bred in dirt, but nurtured in dirt. Their only object is to be uncomfortable to cleanly people. Now, that is really the thing we have to go through. Do what we will, we cannot please everybody. Now, I believe we have before us difficulties as great as have ever fallen to the lot of the representatives of the people of England. Great indeed are now our difficulties. A Tory of the old-fashioned stamp you cannot find now—we are all Liberals, every man of us. I want to know now where is the man who is opposed to free trade? Where is the man who will say the difficulties have happened which he predicted before the Reformed Parliament? I would admire any man who could catch a real old-fashioned Tory. I should advise him to put him under a glass shade and send him to a geological society as an antiquated specimen. These are my views. I have been representing the people of England for some 32 years—I wish it were a shorter time, for then I should be a younger man; but the fact is so—but I will tell any man who wishes to represent the people of England that he had better prepare himself for that great work by learning the great business of life, that the world is before him, and that the people of England influence the world."

SHIELDS.—About two years ago the Duke of Northumberland, with the co-operation of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, established five new ecclesiastical districts in the large seaport town of North Shields, and appointed the requisite number of clergymen to them. In two instances the new districts were attached to churches already in existence, Holy Saviour in the village of Tynemouth, and Trinity Church, North Shields; but for the other three new churches had to be built, viz., in the fishing village of Whitley, in the pit district of Percy Main, and in the Low Street of North Shields, the latter for the use of the sailors of the port immediately adjacent to the Tyne Sailors' Home, which owes its existence to the munificence of the duke. The foundation stones of these religious edifices were laid two years ago, and the entire cost of their erection has been defrayed by the Duke of Northumberland. The Sailors' Church, St. Peter's, was consecrated by the Bishop of Durham on the 30th ult. St. John's Church at Percy Main was consecrated on Friday, and St. Paul's at Whitley on Saturday. In addition to these new churches five new parsonage houses have been built, and a large house, making the sixth, has been purchased by the Duke of Northumberland. Extensive schools will be provided for the children of the poor in connection with the new churches, to which the Duke will be a large contributor. It has not been definitely settled with the Ecclesiastical Commissioners what will be the exact proportion of the Duke of Northumberland's contribution to this magnificent scheme of church extension; but it is said that his Grace does not expect it to fall much short of 100,000*l*. Exclusive of this large outlay for churches and parsonage houses, and the immense expenditure upon Alnwick Castle, the following sums have been expended by the Duke upon his estate since he came into possession in 1847, to Dec. 31, 1863:—For roads, bridges, &c., 39,689*l*. 11*s*.; buildings, cottages, &c., 308,336*l*. 12*s*. 9*d*.; drainage, 176,582*l*. 4*s*.; total, 524,607*l*. 16*s*. 10*d*.

STRATFORD-ON-AVON.—The accounts of the Committee of the Stratford Festival are now made up, and the result is a deficiency of more than 3000*l*., which the committee will have to make good. It appears from their accounts that the total subscriptions were 2298*l*. 18*s*. 7*d*., of which 1567*l*. 12*s*. was for the festival, 259*l*. 15*s*. for the school, and 471*l*. 11*s*. 7*d*. for the monument. After payment of preliminary expenses and expenses of management (1839*l*. 18*s*. 7*d*.) there was left towards the festival 313*l*. 5*s*. 5*d*.; the school 51*l*. 15*s*.; and the monument, 93*l*. 19*s*. 7*d*. The receipts for the festival (including the 313*l*. 5*s*. 5*d*. tickets [of admission, &c.,) and proceeds of sale by auction of materials of pavilion, &c., amounted to 5356*l*. 2*s*. 3*d*. The sale by auction only realized 375*l*. 15*s*. 10*d*. The contract for the pavilion was 1300*l*., but there was 2052*l*. 19*s*. 11*d*. for extras. The dramatic and musical performances and scenery cost nearly 2000*l*.; fireworks, 56*l*. 19*s*.; balloon, 30*l*.; bands of music, 65*l*. 19*s*.; police, 152*l*.; refreshments for performers, 747*l*. 6*s*. 5*d*.; the total payments being 8664*l*. 10*s*. 7*d*., leaving a deficiency of 3308*l*. 8*s*. 3*d*. This deficiency is attributed to the inexperience of the committee in conducting public festivities and too sanguine reliance upon distant sales. The proceeds of the sale of tickets for the three performances and ball were 4345*l*. 11*s*. 7*d*.

SWALCLIFFE.—It has been found necessary to destroy Mr. Gulliver's mare Redemption, on account of the injuries she received during the late thunderstorm. Hopes were entertained that she would recover from the broken leg, but they proved futile, and the poor animal was shot. The loss is serious to Mr. Gulliver, as he was a few weeks since offered 1400*l*. for the mare. She was the dam of the yearling which was sold in June last for 710 guineas, and her former progeny had made great prices.

TAVISTOCK.—The "Forest of Dartmoor," as it was anciently called, has recently been cultivated and colonised in various parts. Around the convict prison at Princetown hundreds of acres of land have been reclaimed and brought into cultivation, chiefly by means of convict labour. Barley, oats, and roots are successfully cultivated, and as much as two tons of hay per acre, it is said, have been produced this year on the prison farm. Efforts are now making to obtain the advantages of railway accommodation on the moor by constructing a branch from the Devon line to Princetown, and a memorial to the Prince of Wales praying for his countenance and assistance, was adopted at a public meeting convened last week for the purpose.

WINSLOW.—At the Petty Sessions on the 31st ult. the sitting magistrates inflicted a fine of 4*s*. and costs amounting to 8*s*. 6*d*., on Daniel Neale, a shoemaker of this place, for having uttered a profane oath whilst in a state of drunkenness, and sentenced him, in default of payment, to go to gaol for ten days with hard labour. He was further fined 5*s*., and 8*s*. 9*d*. costs, for getting drunk.

THE LATE RIOTS IN BELFAST.—It is stated that the Government are about to issue a commission of inquiry into the late riots. The sum claimed as presentments for injuries sustained by wrecking during the 14 days of the riots amounts to between 9000*l*. and 10,000*l*. 176 people were wounded and nine killed, and the number of persons arrested and awaiting their trial was exactly 50. A deputation from the magistrates of Belfast had an interview with Mr. Thomas Larcom, Under Secretary for Ireland, and the Attorney General, on Monday, to make a representation to them on the state of affairs in that town. The deputation consisted of the Mayor (Mr. Lytle), Mr. Dunville, J.P., Dr. Murney, J.P., Mr. W. T. Ewart, J.P., and Mr. David Taylor, J.P. The deputation communicated a resolution adopted by the magistrates recommending a reconstruction of the local police, with a view to provide such a fresh organisation as may be adequate to preserve the peace of the town in future. The deputation also pressed for an augmentation of the force to the number of 400, the executive functions to be vested in the person of a distinct commissioner, and the expense to be borne jointly by the town and the Government as in Dublin. They further submitted the re-establishment of Belfast as the head-quarters of a military district. The interview lasted for nearly an hour and a half; and at its close, Sir Thomas Larcom stated that the recommendations which had been made would receive the best attention of the Irish Government. The local papers state that it had already been resolved by the Government, in consequence of the recent disturbances, again to make Belfast the head-quarters of a military district, of which Brigadier-General Haines will take command. The depôts now quartered there are to be removed, and the barracks will be immediately occupied by a full regiment, said to be the 74th. The General is to reside in the town. In connection with this topic we may mention that a singular controversy has arisen between the Marquis of Donegal, Lord Lieutenant of the county, and Mr. Lytle, the Mayor of Belfast, in regard to the conduct of the latter during the riots. Lord Donegal, at a masonic dinner in honour of his installation as Grand Master of the Freemasons of Downshire, took occasion to censure the Mayor for absenting himself at a time when his presence as chief magistrate was imperatively demanded. The Mayor in reply stated that he went to Harrogate for the benefit of his health on Thursday, the 11th, and there was no serious rioting until the Monday following. The Mayor then asks Lord Donegal why he himself, being the Lord-Lieutenant of the county, the chief of all its magistrates, having the command of the entire constabulary force, and requiring only to request in order to obtain the aid of the military powers if he felt it necessary, did not take measures to suppress the riots. Lord Donegal, in reply, says, with reference to his own non-interference, that what he complained of was the want of decisive action at the outset; that he was not aware of the Mayor's absence for several days, and that the magistrates had so much greater local knowledge than himself that he did not at any time feel justified in interfering in such a way as to relieve them from responsibility. The Mayor, in a rejoinder, gives an account of Lord Donegal's movements, in order to show that he was actually in the town while the riots were in progress, and rebukes his lordship for the irregularity of censuring him at a masonic banquet, held in connection with a ceremony of that craft. On this point the Mayor is supported by the public opinion of the Masonic body, and the observations made by Lord Donegal at the banquet have been the subject of discussion in the Grand Lodge, where, it is understood, they were held to be altogether at variance with the principles of the Order. His lordship is to be called upon for an explanation, on receipt of which the matter will be further discussed.

THREATENING NOTICES.—Lord Vaux of Harrowden, who is the proprietor of extensive estates in the county of Westmeath, has been held up to public execration in a most unwarrantable manner on account of his dealings with one of his tenants. It appears that he found it necessary to transfer a small farm on his property from the late occupier, a widow named Nowlan, to a new tenant, and the champions of tenant-right have taken advantage of this circumstance to issue the following document, which, under the form of an appeal for the relief of the dispossessed tenant, is in reality an incendiary proclamation, calculated to arouse the worst passions of the peasantry. It is all the more dangerous on account of being signed by a Roman Catholic priest. This document, printed in the form of a placard on green paper, and displayed in sensational capitals, was posted in every direction through Mullingar during the great fair of that town, held at the beginning of last week. It is as follows:—

"Stop and read! Landlordism in Westmeath! The Widow Nowlan, of Habsboro' near Mullingar, at all times paid her rent; was willing and able to continue doing so. She held about six acres on the property of Lord Vaux, of Harrowden, the chief support of herself and her orphans! Her holding was in as high a state of cultivation as that of any of her class in the country. Her husband, on the faith of landlord honour, alas! paid a considerable sum of money for the possession of it. When process hags were about being taken last spring to dispossess her, she was advised to crop the land, there being reason to hope at that time that Lord Vaux would not dispossess any tenant willing and able to pay a fair rent, much less a poor widow!!! She has been dispossessed! She has been deprived of her crops!! No compensation has been made to her!! Her neighbour, Michael Ball, of Ballinea, though not better able to pay than the former tenant, now has both land and crops! From a penny to a shilling will be thankfully received to compensate the poor widow, and may be left at any of the shops in town. "LUKE BARTON, C.C.

"Mullingar, 27th August, 1864."

It is said that Mr. C. D. Fox, J.P., agent to Lord Palmerston on his Sligo estates, received a threatening letter a few days since through the post, telling him that he would be shot like a dog, either at the cattle show or on the first favourable opportunity, if he did not leave Sligo at once, in consequence of what the writer calls his tyranny. It appears that Mr. Fox was under the necessity of serving notices to quit on two tenants on the property who are largely in arrears.

WIFE MURDER BY A LUNATIC.—Mr. William Hudson, of Tooloobeu, near Loughrea, in the west of Ireland, has lately been suffering from insanity, but was allowed to remain at large in his own house. He was sitting quietly with his wife and daughter a few days since, when he suddenly seized a razor and cut his wife's throat, and afterwards destroyed himself in the same manner. His daughter was unharmed. The occurrence has created a great sensation in the neighbourhood. Mrs. Hudson was the daughter of the late Dr. Coffee, rector of Killeran, in the diocese of Tuam, and was connected with the highest families in the county. Nine children are left orphans by this tragedy.

ACCIDENT AT THE BIRMINGHAM STATION.—An accident, nearly attended with very serious consequences, occurred at the London and North Western Company's Station at Birmingham on Monday night. The 6 o'clock express from London, due at 9 P.M., arrived punctually. The engine had passed through the tunnel to the station, with the tender, guard's van, and one passenger carriage, when the second and third carriages were thrown off the rails, and the fourth carriage was thrown on its side. The remaining portion of the train, consisting of three or four first and second class carriages, with the last guard's van, remained on the rails. The train having been brought to a stand, the carriage thrown on its side was dragged along a few yards, and ultimately the end of it came in contact with a portion of the platform, which it tore up. A part of one large flagstone, three feet in length, was forced into the carriage, which fortunately contained only two passengers, who escaped without serious injury, and were extricated through the windows. The other passengers were not injured, but many of them were in a state of great excitement. Major Dixon, of the 1st Royals, was standing on the platform when the accident occurred, and was knocked down and much shaken. Two causes have been assigned for the accident. One is, that the turn-table, over which the train had to pass, had been left improperly fastened; the other is, that there was something wrong in connection with the points.

ACCIDENT AT THE ALTRINCHAM STATION.—On Wednesday morning a special train of London and North-Western carriages was despatched from Manchester to Knutsford with passengers to the agricultural show. The train reached Altrincham in safety, and part of it was there backed upon a siding in order that three other carriages might be added. The train was an exceedingly long and heavy one, being filled with passengers. In the act of backing the train the engine accidentally got detached, and the empty carriages rolling down the incline came into collision with the train. The shock was so great as to throw many of the passengers from their seats. Dr. Bowman, of Manchester, received severe shocks, and Mrs. Bowman had her face cut. Mrs. Hodgkinson, of Old Trafford, was struck so violently on one of the jaws that it nearly cut through the cheek. Several other passengers sustained bruises on the face, and a farmer named Bridges, from Bury, had a severe cut near one eye. All the passengers except three went forward with the train.

Obituary.

THE DUKE OF CLEVELAND died on Tuesday at Raby Castle, near Durham, having only succeeded his brother the late duke in January last. William John Frederick Vane, third Duke of Cleveland, Marquis of Cleveland, Earl of Darlington and Viscount Barnard, Baron Raby of Raby Castle, Durham, was born in London in 1792, and was the second son of the third Earl of Darlington (who was created Marquis of Cleveland in 1827, and Duke of Cleveland in 1833), by the second daughter and co-heiress of the last Lord Bolton. He assumed the name of Powlett on inheriting his mother's property, and was for many years familiar to the sportsmen of England as Lord William Powlett. He resumed his paternal name of Vane by royal license, shortly after succeeding to the dukedom. He graduated M.A. at Oxford in 1812; was M.P. for St. Ives 1846-52, and for Ludlow 1852-7, but took no active part in the debates of the Lower House. He married, in 1815, Lady Catherine Lowther, daughter of the first Earl of Lonsdale, but had no issue by his marriage. Lord William Powlett began his racing career somewhat late in life, but his horses were well known as winners at Ascot, Goodwood, Doncaster, and Bath, of which city he owned a considerable portion. He was a steward of the Jockey Club, and was most liberal as an owner of horses, and as a landlord at Downham. His Grace is succeeded in his titles and vast estates by his only surviving brother, Lord Harry George Vane, M.P. for Hastings, who was born in 1803; was educated at Oriel College, Oxford; and married, in 1854, Viscountess Dalmeny, daughter of the fourth Earl Stanhope. Lord Harry Vane was attached to the Embassy at Paris in 1829; was Secretary of Legation at Stockholm in 1839; sat for South Durham, in the Liberal interest, from 1841 to 1857, when, on his brother Henry, Duke of Cleveland, supporting the Derby Ministry, he was not re-elected, and was returned for Hastings, in the neighbourhood of which he had purchased Battle Abbey from the Webster family. As the present duke has no family, the heir-presumptive is Mr. Henry Morgan Vane, born in 1808, who by his marriage in 1853 with the daughter of the Rev. R. Farrer, has three sons, who may perpetuate this famous title.

THE PRINCESS DE POLIGNAC, one of the celebrities of a bygone era, died in Paris on Saturday. She was the daughter of Lord Rancliffe, of Bunny Hall, near Nottingham, a title which became extinct on his lordship's death about six years ago. When young, the Hon. Miss Parkyns married, first (in 1817), the Marquis de Choiseul, the head of a distinguished French family. In 1825 she became wife of the French Ambassador, Prince Polignac, who afterwards became Minister of Foreign Affairs and President of the Council to Charles X., and whose administration was notorious for the conquest of Algiers and the ruin of the monarchy. When Charles X. fled in 1830, Prince Polignac was arrested at Granville, and sent to St. Lo, but was nearly massacred on his way by the infuriated populace. He was sent to Vincennes till his trial, when he was condemned to perpetual imprisonment, to forfeiture of titles and orders, and to civil death. He was released by the amnesty of November, 1836, and died in 1847.

VICE-ADMIRAL THE HON. THOMAS BEST died on the 4th inst. in Hyde Park Square, in his 66th year. He was the second son of the late Lord Wynford, formerly Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, and was born in 1799. He entered the navy in 1812, and after being present at the capture of the islands in Passamaquoddy Bay, and bombarding the town of Stonington, served on the Irish and South American stations, off Newfoundland, in the Channel, in the Mediterranean, and again in South America. After obtaining Commander's rank he served on the Jamaica station, and was Second-Captain of the William and Mary yacht, until he obtained Post rank in 1830. He became Rear-Admiral on the reserved list in 1855, and Vice-Admiral in 1862. He married in 1835, the daughter of the second Lord Kenyon.

LADY MARY HAMILTON died on the 3d inst. She was the fourth daughter of the late Lord Panmure by his first marriage. She was born in 1799, and married in 1824, Mr. James Hamilton, of Bangour, who died in 1851.

LADY SUSAN REEVE died on the 3rd inst. at Londenham House, Lincolnshire, in her 63d year. She was the youngest daughter of the fifth Earl of Harborough, by the youngest daughter of Colonel the Hon. John Monckton. She was born in 1802, and married in 1823, General John Reeve, by whom her ladyship leaves a family.

SIR WILLIAM FRANCIS ELIOTT, Bart., died on the 3d inst. in London, in his 76th year. He was the seventh baronet, and succeeded his father in 1812. He is succeeded in the baronetcy by his son, William Francis Augustus, who was born in 1827, and appointed a lieutenant of the 93d Foot in 1848. He has since retired from the army.

SIR HENRY LACY YEA, Bart., died on the 31st ult., in his 66th year. He succeeded his brother in 1862. He was unmarried, and having no brothers the baronetcy becomes extinct.

CAPTAIN WOOD, R.N., died at 13, Red Lion Square, on the 3d inst., in his 59th year. He entered the navy in 1820, and after obtaining the rank of lieutenant served in the Erebus in Captain James Clark Ross's voyage of discovery to the Antarctic Seas from 1839 to 1843. He was promoted to the rank of commander for his services, and for many years past has filled the office of Resident Manager of the Mendicity Society.

The value of the minerals produced was 29,151,976*l*., from which metals of the value of 36,364,327*l*. were extracted. Of gold quartz we produced 385 tons, worth 1500*l*.; of tin ore, 15,157 tons, worth 963,985*l*; of copper ore, 212,947 tons, worth 1,100,554*l*.; of lead ore, 91,283 tons, worth 1,193,530*l*.; of silver ore, 88 tons, worth 5703*l*.; and of zinc ore, 12,941 tons, worth 29,968*l*. During the year in question there were sold 95,376 tons of pyrites, for 62,035*l*.; and the rarer minerals wolfram, uranium, gossans, arsenic and earthy minerals raised were of the value of 1,980,866*l*. These items, with the value of 9,101,552 tons of iron ore, 3,240,890*l*, and 86,292,215 tons of coal, 20,572,945*l*., raises the total to 29,151,976*l*., which was manufactured into nearly 40,000,000*l*. worth of merchantable produce. METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Sept. 5.

The number of Beasts is smaller than on Monday last, and the average quality is not improved. Trade is therefore brisk for choice descriptions at rather higher rates. The supply of Sheep is also smaller. Trade for them is not very active, yet some of the choicest kinds are rather dearer. Lambs meet with a very dull sale, and are making very little more per lb. than Sheep Calf trade is dull. From Germany and Holland there are 2940 Beasts, 10,430 Sheep, 302 Calves, and 70 Pigs; from Spain, 165 Beasts; from Ireland, 380; and 2630 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, Sept. 8.

We have scarcely any good Beasts at market; a few choice ones have realised quite 8d. per lb. The supply of all kinds is shorter, and prices on the average are about the same as on Monday. Sheep are not very plentiful, but quite equal to the demand. Trade is slow, but good qualities fully maintain late rates. There is rather more inquiry for lambs, but the season is nearly over. Good Calves are rather dearer. From Germany and Holland there are 595 Beasts, 2130 Sheep, 495 Calves, and 60 Pigs; and 69 Beasts from Spain.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Sept. 5.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was small, and the greater portion of the latter in poor condition; it met a slow sale at the prices of this day se'nnight, and a portion remained unsold at the close. There was only a moderate attendance, and foreign Wheat was too much neglected to admit of our altering our quotations. Barley was rather cheaper. Beans and Peas brought the prices of this day week. The Oat trade was steady, with a fair consumptive demand. For Flour there was a fair inquiry at late rates. Mustard seed brought an advance of 6d. to 1s. per bushel.

FRIDAY, Sept. 9.

The weather since the 2d inst. has been warm and showery, and likely to prove of great benefit to the pastures and root crops. The Wheat trade has continued to be inactive, and in several markets a further slight concession in price has been acceded to; here however at the close of Wednesday a slightly increased disposition to purchase Wheat was perceptible; the English left over from Monday was disposed of on the terms of that day, and a few c. f. and i. sales from the Baltic were effected at the lowest rates at which offers have yet been obtainable. Barley has been slow of sale, and previous rates were obtained with difficulty. Oats, Beans, and Peas maintained their former value. In Flour a moderate business only has been transacted, and somewhat lower prices were accepted. Since Friday last 25 vessels have been reported off the coast. The floating trade has not been active; several cargoes of Wheat have been placed at a little lower rates. Maize is slow at 3d. to 6d. per qr. lower prices. Barley is declining. Paris, Sept. 8.—Flour is held for extreme rates, but only a very few transactions have taken place. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 31s. 9d. per 280 lbs. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 27,100 cwts. Wheat: buyers press for a decline, which holders resist, and the business done has been only trifling. The arrivals of English Wheat and Barley this week have been moderate, also of foreign Oats, of foreign Barley, and English Oats large, and foreign Wheat small. To-day's market was badly attended. The little English Wheat on offer was taken at Monday's prices; foreign was neglected; our quotations of that day may be repeated. Spring Corn sold slowly at about late rates.

LIVERPOOL, Sept. 6.—We have had only a very small attendance of millers and dealers at our Corn Exchange to-day, and the demand for Wheat has been of the most retail character, at barely the rates of Friday last. Flour very difficult to move, but we cannot buy fine fresh parcels any cheaper. Indian Corn has declined 3d. per qr, with a fair consumptive inquiry. Oats and Oatmeal quiet, without change in valve. Peas and Barley must be quoted the turn easier. A very poor market throughout, with a heavy fall of rain all the morning.

News of the Week.

ADVICES from the United States announce that on the 25th ult. the Confederates attacked General HANCOCK's position on the south of the Reames Station on the Weldon Railroad, and after a desperate fight retook four of the seven miles of the line which the Federals had occupied. The Federal loss is estimated at 2000 men and nine guns, while that of the Confederates is said to amount to 5000 men. The Confederate forces under General EARLY are retreating up the Shenandoah Valley, closely followed by the Federals under General SHERIDAN, whose advance is reported to have skirmished with EARLY's rear-guard near Charlestown and Middleway. The object of this retrograde movement on the part of General EARLY is not known, but it is believed that General LEE has recalled the troops from the Shenandoah Valley, in order to make a general attack upon GRANT's position. Secretary STANTON reports that one corps of General SHERMAN's army has entered Atlanta, and that General HOOD, finding his communications destroyed, has retired to Macon. During his retreat a battle was fought at East Point, in which the Federals were successful. Both armies, however, suffered heavy loss, and that of General HOOD is said to have been cut in two, the Confederate General HARDEE being among the killed. It is said that the Confederate Generals FORREST, WHEELER, and MORGAN have since united their forces, with the intention of entirely intercepting General SHERMAN's communications. From Mobile we learn that Fort Morgan, with all its garrison, guns, and stores, had surrendered to Admiral FARRAGUT, who has landed 4000 men on the mainland at Grant's Pass, and is busy removing the torpedoes and other obstructions to his passage up to Mobile. The local papers, however, express the utmost confidence that the city can be successfully defended. The political news in connection with the approaching Presidential contest is more important than the military intelligence. The Chicago Convention has nominated General M'CLELLAN for President, and Mr. PENDLETON, of Ohio, for Vice-President, on the principle of maintaining the Union and Constitution by conciliaiion and compromise, and of making immediate efforts to bring about a cessation of hostilities and a convention of the States. The Convention also resolved that any attempt at interference by the military with the freedom of the approaching elections should be resisted by force.

The Peace Conference at Vienna met on Tuesday and again on Wednesday, when the financial question is said to have been the subject of discussion. It is understood that so little progress has been made towards the conclusion of peace that the prolongation of the armistice, which will otherwise expire on the 31st inst., may be considered as tacitly accepted by both belligerents.

On Tuesday the whole of the Spanish Ministry tendered their resignation to the QUEEN. After some consideration HER MAJESTY accepted their resignation, and deputed M. MON to undertake the construction of a new Cabinet, with the understanding that Senor PACHECO should remain Minister for Foreign Affairs. M. MON was unable to reconstruct his Ministry, and the QUEEN on Thursday summoned Marshal O'DONNELL to her councils.

A despatch from Constantinople states that in consequence of the explanations of NUBAR PASHA, the Porte has accepted the bases of the arbitration of the Emperor NAPOLEON in the Suez Canal question.

FRANZ MÜLLER was surrendered by the United States Government under the Extradition Treaty on the 31st ult., and arrived yesterday at Liverpool in charge of Inspector TANNER, who is expected to bring him to London in the course of to-day.

Home News.

THE QUEEN IN SCOTLAND.—On Wednesday week, the Queen, accompanied by the Duchess of Saxe-Coburg and Princess Louisa, drove to the Linn of Quoich. Princess Helena drove to Birkhall. On Thursday the Queen, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess of Saxe-Coburg and Princess Helena, drove to Allanquoich, whence they ascended on ponies to the summit of Glenquoich, where they had luncheon. The Royal party returned to Balmoral by way of Braemar and the Linn of Dee. On Friday the Queen drove and walked, accompanied by the Duchess of Saxe-Coburg and the Royal family. On Saturday the Queen, accompanied by the Princess Helena, drove to Alt-na-Guithasach, and went to the Dhu Loch. Sir Charles Wood left the Castle. On Sunday afternoon the Queen, with the Duchess of Saxe-Coburg and Princess Helena, attended Divine service at the parish church of Crathie. The Rev. Mr. Stephen, of Renfrew, officiated. On Monday morning the Queen drove out, accompanied by Princess Louisa. In the afternoon her Majesty went out with Princess Helena and Princess Beatrice. The Duke of Saxe-Coburg went out deer stalking in the forest. On Tuesday the Queen, accompanied by the Duchess of Saxe Coburg and Princess Louisa, drove to Birkhall. Princess Helena visited the Countess of Fife at Mar Lodge. Earl Russell arrived at the Castle as Secretary of State in attendance on her Majesty.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES, accompanied by the King and Queen of Denmark, visited Elsinore and the Castle of Kronborg on Saturday. The Royal party afterwards went on board the Osborne, and had a short cruise in the Sound. On Wednesday their Royal Highnesses left Fredensborg for Bernstorff, the family residence of the King before he ascended the throne. A triumphal arch was erected at Bernstorff, national airs were played on their arrival, and an address was read by the clergyman of the parish. The King of Denmark returned thanks on behalf of his Royal son-in-law and daughter. There was a large concourse of people, by whom the Prince and Princess were heartily cheered. Their Royal Highnesses have not yet visited Copenhagen.

THE CROWN PRINCESS OF PRUSSIA gave birth to a Prince at noon on Thursday. Her Royal Highness and the infant Prince are doing well.

PRINCE ALFRED arrived in the Firth of Forth from Norway in the Racoon early on Tuesday morning. His Royal Highness went ashore at 7 o'clock to catch the first train for the north, on his way to Balmoral.

PRINCE ARTHUR, attended by Major Elphinstone and Colonel Seymour, arrived on Saturday last at Baden-Baden.

PRINCE HUMBERT, the Crown Prince of Italy, arrived at Southampton on Sunday from Cherbourg, in Prince Napoleon's yacht, accompanied by Prince Napoleon and Princess Clotilde. His Royal Highness remained on Sunday night at the Dolphin Hotel, and left Southampton on Monday morning for the residence of the Marquis d'Azeglio, the Italian Minister in London. On Monday evening the Prince dined with Lord Palmerston; and on Tuesday his Royal Highness, with the Italian Minister and all the members of his suite, left town for the Doncaster races. On Thursday the Prince left Doncaster for York, and returned yesterday to London.

PRINCE NAPOLEON AND THE PRINCESS CLOTILDE, after the departure of Prince Humbert for London, remained at Southampton until Monday morning, when they proceeded in their steam yacht Prince Jerome to Spithead, where the yacht anchored. The Prince and Princess immediately disembarked in the double screw barge La Mouche, the little tender attached to the yacht, and steamed into Portsmouth harbour, landing at the King's stairs of the dockyard. Their Imperial Highnesses were there received by Admiral Sir Michael Seymour and other naval authorities, who conducted them over the chief points of interest in the yard and arsenal. They then drove to Southsea, where they took luncheon with the French Vice-Consul, after which they paid a short visit to the Excellent, and witnessed some blank practice from her 12-ton guns. They then returned in La Mouche to the Prince Jerome, which left Spithead at 10 P.M. for Havre.

ORDERS OF KNIGHTHOOD.—One of the vacant Garters has been conferred upon the Marquis of Lansdowne. Lord Lovat will have the vacant Ribbon of the Thistle. Lord Lismore will be the new Knight of St. Patrick.

DIPLOMATIC APPOINTMENTS. — The Queen has appointed Sir Andrew Buchanan, now Ambassador at Berlin, to be Ambassador at St. Petersburg; and Lord Napier, now Ambassador at St. Petersburg, to be mbassador at Berlin.

THE CHURCH IN THE COLONIES.—The Archbishops of Canterbury, York, Armagh, and Dublin have issued an address in behalf of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, addressed to the clergy and laity of the United Church of England and Ireland, in aid of Church work in the colonies and dependencies of the British Crown. The following is their Graces' appeal:—

"We beseech you, brethren, to weigh as in the sight of God the few words we feel called upon to address to you, touching the duty of our Church and nation as to the maintenance of Christian missions. We deem the obligation binding us to discharge this duty to be at this time specially imperative. The scattering of our people throughout the world, the large emigration of our own poor, who, unless we plant among them the Church of God, must lapse into heathenism; the obligations which we contract to the heathen people amongst whom our emigrants settle, and to whom they inevitably carry the contagion of our diseases and of our sins; and the fact that our Crown holds in India a vast empire over Mussulmans and Pagans—all these things force upon us the inevitable alternative of either neglecting daily the plainest obligations, or of doing heartily the work of evangelising the world. The main present hindrance to the discharge of this work is the lack of funds. From every side the cry for aid reaches us daily."

This address then quotes extracts from the recent appeals of the Bishops of Calcutta, Labuan, Cape Town, Grahamstown, the Orange River, Honolulu, Ontario, and Columbia, and the Dean of Maritzburg in Natal. In these appeals two of the colonial bishops—those of Capetown and Grahamstown—express an intention of abandoning the work or reducing the number of mission agents, unless an additional grant be made; while the Bishop of Honolulu reports the utter surprise of people in the Sandwich Islands that so little is forthcoming from home "when great and effectual doors are being opened." The Bishop of Ontario, in Canada, applies for six travelling missionaries "who shall be wholly supported (if necessary) for at least three years from external sources," and the Bishop of Columbia states that there is a further want in his diocess "at once of 13 additional clergy and five catechists, at a cost of 4000*l.* a year." Their Graces then conclude as follows:—

"Shall such calls as these remain unanswered? And if they do, must not these rejected multitudes cry unto the Lord against us, and it be a sin which shall land to the charge of our Church and nation? We earnestly and affectionately entreat you to make a new and great effort for a large increase of our present missionary funds. Speaking in the name of the Vice-Presidents of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, we plead specially for that peculiar instrument of service. But we do not limit our sympathies to it. We are convinced that in no other way can the work be done than by every parish, as a part of its separate parochial existence, raising its own contributions for the work; and we therefore beseech our brethren of the clergy to preach one sermon annually and make a collection for Church of England missions; and we pray our brethren of the laity to help them, not only by their contributions to this annual collection, but by becoming regular subscribers, if they are not such at present, or, if they are, by increasing on a new scale of Christian liberality their aid to the funds of the societies they support, and by forming themselves into associations for the more complete effecting of this great work of God."

Foreign.

FRANCE.—A despatch from the Prussian Government has been received at the French Foreign Office, communicating an outline of the bases for the peace negotiations between Denmark and Austria and Prussia, and a similar despatch has been sent to Earl Russell. It is said that the proposed terms are considered unjust and ungenerous by the French Cabinet, which considers that the people of the Duchies ought to have been consulted about their ruler, in order to secure tranquillity and content for the future. The Paris papers say that Earl Russell has answered the despatch, and severely commented on the hard terms which Prussia imposes on Denmark, but that the French Foreign Office has hitherto observed a significant silence. The Paris papers comment with great indignation on the language of the Prussian journals, which, in justifying the conduct of Germany to Denmark, boldly assert that language ought to be the line of demarcation between nations, and consequently that France should yield up the whole of Alsace, including the cities of Strasburg and Metz. The Siècle publishes the following article on the subject, observing that, in conformity with the well-known wish expressed by Kant, the Germans would gladly convert humanity into one family, but on condition that it should be ruled with a Prussian or Austrian rod:—

"It needed William Tell and his successors to drive them from Switzerland. They oppressed Italy for centuries, and still hold Venice in a nameless oppression. They have recompensed Hungary for her devotedness to Germany by stripping her of her autonomy and of her Constitution. In the most odious of conspiracies they divided Poland with Russia, and the manner in which they treat Denmark, from which they would gladly take the last dollar, the last inhabitant, and the last ship, proves what is to be expected from them when they are conquerors. Add to this that they have almost always made war for unjust causes, and have been the aggressors on their neighbours, and that, when at peace with foreign countries, they have continually fought among themselves either with cannon or by intrigues. The history of Germany is a long civil war, and at the present time Germany is still at war with Germany on all points."

A letter from Schwalbach, in the Duchy of Nassau, states that the Empress of the French resides in a new villa belonging to M. Arnold Herber, which had been selected as the residence of the Empress of Russia during her Majesty's stay in July last, but which was not occupied, as it was discovered that the owner entertained Liberal opinions. The inhabitants remark that the simple manner in which the Empress Eugenie lives offers a remarkable contrast to that adopted by the Empress Marie Alexandrowna. The latter entered Schwalbach in the state carriage of the Duke of Nassau, accompanied by a countless retinue, who occupied a great number of carriages, while in advance of her Majesty's carriage rode the Nassau gendarmes, and behind it was the chief of the Wiesbaden police in his grandest uniform. The whole road from Wiesbaden was occupied by armed foresters and gendarmes, and in Schwalbach a great number of police had assembled, under the plea of protecting the imperial guests, whilst extraordinary measures were adopted against the Poles. At the arrival of the Empress Eugenie Her Majesty declined the attendance of the Duke's adjutants, who received her at the Wiesbaden station, as well as the use of the state carriage which was placed at her disposal, and also refused to allow the gendarmes to precede her carriage. Her Majesty took a simple hackney carriage from the station, and drove to Schwalbach without halting. The imperial retinue consists of some ladies, her immediate Court attendants, and her servants, consisting of not more than 30 persons altogether. At Wiesbaden, as well as at Schwalbach, the Empress was received by the unofficial public with cordial greetings, which were gracefully returned. Since her arrival her Majesty has received visits from the King of Prussia, the Queen of the Netherlands, the Duke of Nassau, and Princess William of Hesse. Prince and Princess Napoleon arrived in Paris on Wednesday from their trip to Southampton with Prince Humbert of Italy. It is said that negotiations have been opened with the Archbishop of Paris for the purpose of removing the obstacles opposed to the baptism of the children of Prince Napoleon. The situation in which Victor Emmanuel, the intended godfather, is placed in relation to the Church, has prevented the baptism of the first, and the Prince will not consent to the ceremony for the second taking place before the obstacles to the baptism of the first have been removed. To obtain this result is the object of the present negotiations, and there is no doubt that it will be attained. The Moniteur publishes a long report from M. Duruy, the Minister of Public Instruction, on the result of the competition which was thrown open as long ago as 1852, for a prize of 50,000f. (2000*l*.), to be awarded for the most useful and practical application of the voltaic pile. The competition was to be left open for five years; but as in 1858 no improvement had been brought forward of sufficient merit to deserve the reward, the time was extended for another four years, which have just elapsed. The commission has now made its award, by conferring the prize on M. Ruhmkorff, for the well-known electric machine which bears his name. The murderer Latour was guillotined at Foix on Monday. Notwithstanding the rain, an immense crowd assembled to witness the execution. He refused to allow any priest to accompany him to the scaffold, and uttered the most dreadful blasphemies. He maintained a stubborn demeanour, and on his way to the scaffold sang in a loud voice, to the air of the Marseillaise, some verses composed by himself in reference to his execution.

ALGERIA.—The Commerce Algérien states that a multitude of locusts alighted on the village of St. Arnaud, on the 29th ult. The colonists were for a moment astounded at this sudden invasion, but, mindful of the danger with which their crops were threatened, they attacked the locusts with great energy. After many efforts they succeeded in dispersing them, employing for that purpose every weapon they could lay their hands on—such as sticks, forks, and sithes. These locusts were of a gray colour, tolerably large, and extremely voracious. Their arrival was preceded by a whirlwind from the desert.

SPAIN.—The whole Ministry on Monday evening tendered their resignation to the Queen. On Wednesday her Majesty accepted their resignation, and deputed Señor Mon to reconstitute the Cabinet, with the condition that Señor Pacheco should remain Minister for Foreign Affairs. The Ministerial crisis continued on Thursday, and the Queen on that day summoned Marshal O'Donnell.

PORTUGAL.—The elections have passed off quietly, and have resulted in a very large majority for the Government. The extension of the Beja Railway has been inaugurated. The Bank of Portugal, authorised by the Government, has raised its rate of discount to 7 per cent., an unprecedented measure.

SWITZERLAND.—The French Government has forbidden M. James Fazy to remain in the frontier department. This measure has not been caused by any demand of the Federal Council. In consequence of the Austrian Government refusing to grant the extradition of Langiewicz, notwithstanding its former promise to that effect, the Federal Council will cease negotiating on the subject, without, however, renouncing the justice of its demand.

DENMARK.—An address bearing several thousand signatures was presented to the King a few days since by a deputation of the chief inhabitants of Copenhagen. The address expressed the profound conviction that it was necessary to follow a different line of policy to that pursued by the Eider-Danish Cabinet, which had brought such great calamities upon the country. It said—

"The choice of the new councillors of the Crown guarantees to us that the efforts made to restore the prosperity of peace will attain their end. The undersigned, animated by sincere patriotism, and penetrated with the gravity of the circumstances, declare themselves further ready for all sacrifices which the deliverance of the country may still require."

His Majesty replied as follows:—

"I thank you, gentlemen, for the sentiments of confidence and devotion which you express towards me. Your language goes to my heart, for it proves to me the opportuneness of the measures which I have thought well to take, in concert with my Ministers, to restore peace to our country."

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.—An address signed by almost the entire inhabitants of North Schleswig and Als has been presented to the German Civil Commissioners in the duchy, stating that it is the universal desire in North Schleswig to remain and live in constant connection with Denmark, and that they would rather agree to a division of Schleswig according to nationalities than follow Holstein to Germany, and thereby assist in constituting a State of Schleswig-Holstein. They therefore pray that Germany will not exercise her rights of war by annihilating the nationality of upwards of 200,000 Schleswig Danes, and depriving them of their connection with Denmark, a connection in which they say they have found themselves happy for centuries. A telegram containing the pith of this address was stopped by the Prussian authorities at Berlin on the 8th inst. It is said that until the conclusion of peace Jutland and the Duchies will remain occupied by a corps of 30,000 Prussians and an equal number of Austrians. The Germanic Diet has provisionally taken on itself, by way of advances, the different expenses of the Federal Commission in the Duchies of Holstein and Lauenburg.

PRUSSIA.—The King of Prussia, after paying a visit to the Empress Eugenie at Schwalbach, returned on Sunday evening to Frankfort, to be present at a grand diplomatic dinner at the Prussian Embassy. It is said that his Majesty was very coldly received by the Frankfort people. On Monday night his Majesty returned to Berlin, accompanied by Count von Bismarck. The Nord-deutsche Zeitung of Tuesday says that the Prussian Government has already sent a suitable reply to the last note of Earl Russell upon the preliminaries of peace. No official notification has yet been received from Darmstadt and Nassau relative to their entering the Zollverein on the basis of the Franco-Prussian treaty of commerce. The Archbishop of Cologne, Cardinal Johannes von Geissel, died on Thursday in his 69th year, after having been archbishop of the diocess for 23 years. He was a native of Neustadt, in the Bavarian palatinate. In 1857 he proceeded to Rome, and there received the cardinal's hat at the hands of the Pope.

AUSTRIA.—A sitting of the Conference took place on Tuesday. It is asserted that the subject of discussion was a proposition made by Austria and Prussia that the claims of the Duchies to the treasure and State property of Denmark should be settled by payment of a fixed amount. Another sitting took place on Wednesday, but very little progress was made towards the conclusion of peace. The armistice will be prolonged, as neither of the belligerents has given notice that it has to cease on the 31st of October. The report that the Emperor of Austria was about to visit Berlin is contradicted. The sittings of the Conference between Austria and Prussia in reference to the Customs' Union will be held in Prague, but the date of their opening has not yet been decided on. It is rumoured that Austria has determined to acknowledge the Kingdom of Italy, a step which is regarded as an effort to disarm the hostility to the Empire in Italy, and secure her position in her Italian States. It is also reported that the Austrian Government intends shortly to recognise King George of Greece, regard having been paid to all family considerations towards Bavaria.

ITALY.—The Pope has returned to Rome. An immense concourse of people assembled on the line of route to the Vatican, and cheered his Holiness. It is stated that one of the two cardinals' hats now vacant will be conferred upon Monsignore Manning, formerly archdeacon of Chichester, and brother-in-law of the Bishop of Oxford, and the other on a French bishop, who is a close personal friend of the Emperor. A telegram from Turin states that the brigand chief Crocco, who was said to have left Rome with a Spanish passport, is still at Rome, under the protection of the Papal Government. The Opinione of Turin publishes an official list of the crimes imputed to Crocco, amounting to 65 in all, and comprising murder, highway robbery, arson, and pillage under every possible form.

RUSSIA. — A subscription has been opened in the columns of the Invalide Russe for the sufferers by the conflagration at Simbirsk. The same paper announces that a large fire had also taken place at Karsum, and adds that incendiarism was on the increase in that neighbourhood.

POLAND.—The Posen Journal states that the sentences passed on the Polish ladies who have been so long in confinement in that city have just been published. The Countess Ostrowska has been condemned to five years' imprisonment with irons; the Countess Wodzioka and Mesdame Zebrowska to 10 months of the same punishment; Mesdames Wilkoszewska and Ilning to six months; and Mesdames Alexandrowicz and Dymidowicz to four. All the ladies have appealed.

GREECE.—Several foreign journals state that the betrothal of King George of Greece to the Grand Duchess Alexandrovna, daughter of the Emperor of Russia, has taken place at St. Petersburg. Some doubt is thrown upon the statement by the fact that the Grand Duchess is only 11 years of age. The debt of 1824-25 has been recognised by the Greek Government. The original capital of 7,000,000*l*. sterling has been consolidated at 2½ millions at 5 per cent. interest. The Powers have, it is stated, shown themselves favourable to this arrangement, and have made important concessions. The 100*l*. bonds have been capitalised at 45 and the Coupons at 15.

TURKEY.—A despatch from Constantinople, dated the 7th inst., states that in consequence of the explanations of Nubar Pasha the Porte has accepted the basis of the arbitration of the Emperor Napoleon in the Suez Canal question.

TUNIS.—The Turkish Government has consented to recall the Turkish fleet from Tunis, as well as the Commissioner accredited to the Bey. On the complaint of General Beauval the Bey has expelled the Zouaves who attacked the Spanish Consulate and commenced sacking it. The Spanish Consul has referred the question of reparation to Madrid, and awaits instructions. At the request of a Tunisian General an English ship-of-war has captured a Maltese boat carrying munitions and cannon for the insurgents. The Bey has sent another column into the interior, but the insurrection still maintains itself. The chiefs will soon arrived at Tunis to receive their investiture deem that peace is impossible unless the Kasnadar be dismissed, the taxes reduced, and the tribunals reformed. The towns of Monastir and Sfax have violently repulsed the agents of the Bey.

ABYSSINIA.—M. Lejean, French Consul at Massaouah on the Red Sea, has arrived at Marseilles. He has been thrown into prison by King Theodore, and only gained his liberty by accepting the decree of expulsion from that territory. He reports that he left in prison his brother captive, the British Consul, who was required by his Æthiopian Majesty to transmit to England a proposal of marriage with Queen Victoria. No satisfactory answer having reached him, the King sent the Consul to prison, where he is likely to remain until rescued by a special expedition.

PERSIA.—Mr. Benjamin Langfield and his manservant, while on their way from a port in the Caspian to Sherat, have been murdered and robbed by the drivers of the vehicles in which they were travelling. The English Consul at Teheran has set out to investigate the case and trace the criminals, and the Russian Consul, who was a friend of Mr. Langfield, was expected to co-operate with the same object.

CHINA. — Advices received overland through St. Petersburg, report the capitulation of Nankin.

NEW ZEALAND.—The following account of the recent defeat of the Maories is given by the Melbourne Argus of July 25:—

"After the reverse at the Gate Pa, the Maories were immeasurably elated, and the leader of the east coast tribes, Rawiri, sent a written challenge to the commander of the troops at Tauranga, of which the following is a literal translation:—'Now hear what we have to say. We have been waiting for you to come and attack us for a whole month, but you have not come, and now we are coming to you. We give you warning, therefore, that you may expect to see me within a month, and not to let any of your soldiers out, for our young men will certainly shoot them. We give you warning that you may not say it is murder, for it won't be murder.' The Maories had not to wait long. On the 21st June, Colonel Greer, in charge of the forces of Tauranga, received information that the enemy were intrenching themselves at a spot 12 miles inland from the scene of the late engagement. Colonel Greer marched out to the place with an Armstrong gun, 6-pounder, and 600 men of the 43d and 68th, and the Waikato Militia (Victorian Volunteers) Regiments, and found that the enemy had commenced the erection of a new pa on a narrow neck of land, surrounded on three sides by deep gullies, and completely commanding the Tauranga Road. All that had been done, however, was to construct a single line of rifle-pits. The Maories assumed the offensive themselves, their skirmishers firing briskly on the troops as they arrived across the plain. The skirmishers were, however, soon driven in, and Colonel Greer extended his men, placed his gun in position 500 yard from the pits, and maintained a sharp fire for two hours, while he sent for reinforcements. As soon as the reinforcements were sufficiently near to give support, the advance was sounded, and, with a cheer which made the hills ring again, the 43d, the 68th, and the Waikato Militia rushed forward to the position. The Maories received them with a heavy volley, and stood their ground well. The troops dashed into the pits and a hand-to-hand encounter took place. It was not of long duration. The soldiers, determined to remove the stain the Gate Pa repulse had cast upon them, used the bayonet with effect, and three or four minutes saw the Maories flying to the gullies, pursued by both cavalry and infantry. The former followed them for a distance of 10 miles, and with their breech-loading carbines did good service, though, owing to the swamps and gullies with which the district abounds, they could not prevent the escape of the main body of the enemy. 68 Maories were killed in the rifle-pits, and altogether 107 bodies were collected. 27 wounded men were also brought in, and 10 other prisoners. Among the killed were Rawiri, the leader of the Maories at the Gate Pa, and Henare Taratoa, the writer of Rawiri's challenge to the troops, a man much respected for his ability and education. Many more Maories must have been killed in the ravines, where it was not possible for the troops to find them. The English loss was comparatively trifling. Nine men were killed and 30 wounded. Among the wounded were Captain F. A. Smith and Captain H. Bernard of the 43d, and Captain Trent, Captain Casement, Lieutenant Stuart, and Ensign Palmer. The engagement will be severely felt by the east coast tribes, but it has far from crushed their spirit. The latest advices report that they are erecting another pa in a strong position farther back. It was said that Colonel Greer would attempt also to storm this work. Rawiri and William Thompson, the leading rebel chiefs, were in the neighbourhood of Tauranga during the fight, intending to attack the place should the soldiers be repulsed. The guns of the Corvette Esk were trained on the camp, and every preparation made to give the enemy a warm reception. As matters turned out, however, Thompson declined testing the issue. Mr Fox, the Colonial Secretary, has just received the allegiance of Wi Tako, a powerful chieftain of the Wellington district, who had raised the King flag, trained men, and threatened to destroy the peace of the southern part of the island. The New Zealand authorities are taking active steps to place military settlers on the conquered soil. The 1st Waikato Militia are to be located at Tauranga, and the 2d, 3d, and 4th Regiments in the heart of the Waikato country. This plan will effectually cut the rebels off from their accustomed sources of supplies."

UNITED STATES.—On the 25th ult. the Confederates made repeated assaults upon Hancock's corps near

Reams, on the Weldon Railroad, without important advantage until 5 P.M., when, by a furious onslaught, they broke his lines, scattered the troops in all directions, capturing many prisoners and cannon, and recovering possession of four miles of the railway, leaving three miles still in their possession. Shortly afterwards Ward's 5th Corps came to the rescue, when the battle ceased. The Federal loss is estimated at 2000 men and nine guns, while that of the Confederates is said to be 5000 men. On the 28th General Sheridan returned to Charleston and discovered that the Confederates under General Early had disappeared from his front. The latest accounts of the 2d state that General Early's head-quarters are at Bunker's Hill, midway between Martinsburg and Winchester. It is believed that General Lee has recalled the troops from the Shenandoah Valley, in order to make a general attack upon Grant's position. General Wade Hampton has been appointed chief of cavalry in Lee's army. Accounts from Mobile announce that Fort Morgan and the garrison of 600 men, including General Paige, surrendered to Admiral Farragut on the 23d ult., after 24 hours' bombardment. The Confederates spiked the cannon, 60 in number, and destroyed all other matériel in the fort previous to the surrender. Admiral Farragut has obtained the services of the men who were engaged by the Confederates in setting the torpedoes, and is now occupied in raising them. Secretary Stanton announces the evacuation of Atlanta by Hood, and the occupation of the city by a corps of Sherman's army. A battle has been fought between Hood and Sherman's main body at East Point, with a heavy loss to both sides. No details are given, but it is said that Sherman was successful, and that Hood has retired to Macon. It is also asserted that Hood's army was cut in two, with heavy loss, and that the Confederate General Hardee was killed. The latest advices state that the Confederate Generals Forrest, Wheeler, and Morgan have joined forces, and are operating upon Sherman's communications. Ten thousand Confederates, with 12 guns, are reported to be within 17 miles of Nashville, on the Murfreesboro' road. A battle is expected. The Confederates have resumed active operations in Arkansas. On the 23d ult. Colonel Shelby captured nearly a whole Federal regiment, between Duval Bluff and Little Rock. He is now reported marching upon Duval Bluff and St. Charles. Guerillas along the White River fire upon all passing boats. General Sully's command defeated the Indians in a battle on Knife River, Kansas, on the 25th ult., killing and wounding 150 of their number. General Sully's loss was five killed and 30 wounded. The National Democratic Convention for the nomination of President and Vice-President assembled at Chicago on the 29th ult. On the following day Governor Seymour was elected Chairman by acclamation, and made a long speech in favour of peace, reconciliation, and a return to the principles of the Constitution. The Convention subsequently adopted a platform which resolved upon the preservation of the Union and Constitution by conciliation and compromise, and demanded an immediate negotiation for the armistice and Convention of the States. It also resolved to resist by force any interference by the military at the approaching elections. On the 31st General M'Clellan was nominated for President and the Hon. G. Pendleton of Ohio for Vice-President by acclamation. Mr. Stanton reports that the troops credited to the States reduces Mr. Lincoln's last call to 300,000 men, and that 100,000 new troops promptly furnished are all that Grant asks for the capture of Richmond, and to give the finishing blow to the Confederate armies. It is reported from Washington that proposals have been received from Germany for a loan of 1,000,000,000 dols., for 75 years, at 3 per cent.; 20 per cent. of the loan is to be paid in coin, 10 per cent, in currency, and the balance in outstanding United States' obligations. The Tallahassee has run the blockade of Wilmington in spite of a vigorous fire from the Federal gunboat Monticello. Her destruction of 22 fishing vessels is denied. It is officially announced that the peace mission of Jaques and Gilmore to Richmond was not authorised by the Administration. The Minister Plenipotentiary from the Government of the Emperor Maximilian arrived in Washington on the 2d inst. Juarez is reported to have arrived at New Orleans. Müller has been surrendered to the British authorities.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.—An expedition has been organised by the colonial Government and colonists of Vancouver Island, for the purpose of exploring the northern and central parts of the island. These parts have never been surveyed, and are practically unknown. In addition to fixing the topography of the island, they are to look out for open ground for settlements, and for indications of gold, copper, and coal. The party is under the leadership of Dr. Robert Brown, of Edinburgh, who has made himself favourably known in the colony as a man of practical science. The expedition was to start from Victoria in a gunboat to the mouth of the Cowitchan river, from which place explorations will be commenced. Her Majesty's ship Tribune, bearing the Admiral's flag, had grounded in the Fraser River, but after discharging her guns and stores she was got off without any damage except a little straining, and arrived safely at Esquimalt on the 10th July. The Admiral's reason for taking the Tribune across the bar was to protect the people of New Westminster from Indians who had been committing atrocities in the neighbourhood.

MEXICO.—The Emperor Maximilian left the capital on the 10th of August on a tour through the provinces of Queretaro, Guanajato, and San Luis. The blockade of all the Mexican ports has been raised; the censorship has been abolished in Mexico, and a commission has been appointed to organise the administration of justice. New Orleans despatches to the 24th ult. announce the arrival at that city of the family of President Juarez, who is himself reported to be on his way to the same destination. Notwithstanding the military operations in course of execution to reduce the guerillas, General Bazaine has taken measures for sending home the French troops. The Juarists received three serious checks on the 1st, 10th, and 14th of August. General Cheverria was taken prisoner.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

ARRIVAL OF MULLER.—The case of Franz Müller was resumed in the United States Court at New York on the 27th ult. The British Government was represented by Mr. Marbury, as on the previous day; while Messrs. Chauncey, Schaffer, and E. Blankman appeared for the prisoner. The Court was thronged with spectators anxious to obtain a view of the prisoner, who sat with an unmoved countenance. Mr. Blankman, on behalf of Müller, applied for an adjournment to give time to prepare for the defence. Mr. Marbury, for the British Government, opposed the adjournment. Mr. Blankman briefly responded, urging a motion for a brief adjournment. Mr. Schaffer followed for the defence, and maintained that as yet there was nothing to justify the committal, the accused being a foreigner. He contended that the treaty under which the extradition was demanded had been suspended, and also adverted to the Florida being a pirate sent out by English subjects. Inspector Tanner having been re-examined as to the height of the prisoner, Mr. Schaffer contended that Müller could not be one of the two men seen in the compartment with Mr. Briggs on the night of the murder. Commissioner Newton then delivered his decision, stating that under the circumstances he was constrained to grant a certificate and commit the prisoner, being satisfied as to his guilt. President Lincoln having approved this judgment, the warrant of extradition was made out. The warrant arrived in New York on the 31st ult., but Inspector Tanner did not take formal custody of his prisoner until the morning of the Etna's sailing, when he was conveyed in a close carriage to the Etna. On arriving on board he was placed under close guard in the hospital of the ship, one of two men being constantly on watch over him. He was not put in irons, and during the voyage he appeared indifferent, and was engaged in reading Dickens's works. No conversation touching his guilt or innocence was permitted with him during the voyage. In New York strong excitement prevailed among the German population prior to the arrival of the Victoria, but the evidence adduced on the hearing of the case in New York was sufficient to quell that feeling, and at his departure there was little or no popular demonstration. The New York papers publish a correspondence in which Inspector Tanner acknowledged the aid received from Mr. Kennedy, superintendent of the New York police, and inclosed 10*l*. as a gratuity to one of his officers from whom he had received valuable assistance. The Etna arrived off Queenstown on Thursday and proceeded to Liverpool, where Müller was expected to be landed yesterday and brought on immediately to London.

FATAL ACCIDEN TO CAPTAIN SPEKE, THE EXPLORER OF THE NILE.—It was announced by Sir R. Murchison yesterday morning in the Geographical Section at Bath that Captain Speke was accidentally shot dead on Thursday evening whilst shooting at Corsham. He left Bath early in the morning, and when about four miles in the country, while getting through a hedge, his gun went off and shot him through the heart. He was expected to take a prominent part in the discussion of the Section yesterday. There is a counter statement that it is the captain's brother who is shot.

THE PEACE MOVEMENT IN AMERICA.—An address from the people of Great Britain and Ireland to the people of the United States in favour of peace is now in course of signature. It appeals to the ties of race and kindred, and asks if there has not been enough of strife and bloodshed, of misery, and suffering? "It is now," it says, "time for you to pause, and after calmly reviewing all that you have accomplished, the distance which you have travelled from your well-known landmarks, and the difficulties and dangers that are certainly before you, to take counsel together as to the best means of restoring peace. It is in your hands to give peace to the American Continent. We appeal to you to recognise the duty which attaches to your high privilege, and to make peace with the Southern States, and we make this appeal in the name of religion, humanity, civilisation, and common justice." In Ireland the address has met with hearty support from the people generally, Protestant and Catholic alike—the clergy taking a very active part in promoting the object. The people of Dublin, Cork, Belfast, Limerick, Drogheda, Queenstown, and the principal towns in Ireland are signing the address in immense numbers. In Manchester, Liverpool, Leeds, Huddersfield, York, Leicester, Preston, Stockport, Macclesfield, Chester, Congleton, Bury, Oldham, Bath, Stafford, Stoke-upon-Trent, and in many other towns in England and Scotland, the number of signatures is daily increasing. If the signatures which the address is receiving in London may be taken as a sign of popularity this movement is certainly popular. As the time is near at hand when the people of the United States will decide the question of peace or war for another four years, the friends of peace and humanity are anxious that the counsels of the people of Great Britain and Ireland should be uttered in favour of peace, believing that a people can best address a republican government and a republican multitude.

THE GEORGIA.—It is announced that the Government has declined to interfere in the case of the steamer Georgia, seized off Lisbon by the Federal frigate Niagara.

MR. SPURGEON AND THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—The retirement of Mr. Spurgeon from the Evangelical Alliance was briefly mentioned in our last. It appears that Mr. Spurgeon has been preaching sermons on the subject of baptismal regeneration, which have been construed into attacks on the Evangelical clergy of the Church of England, many of whom have replied to his strictures upon them. In this he is supposed to have violated the following rule of the Alliance:—"That when required by conscience to assert or defend any views or principle wherein they differ from Christian brethren who agree with them in vital truths, the members of this Alliance will aim earnestly, by the help of the Holy Spirit, to avoid all rash and groundless insinuations, personal imputations, or irritating allusions, and to maintain the meekness and gentleness of Christ by speaking the truth only in love." Mr. Spurgeon has addressed a long letter to the Committee of the Alliance, in which he maintains his ground that the Evangelical clergy of the Church are guilty of "grievous dissimulation," and that their subscriptions are "dishonest in the highest degree." He says he has imputed nothing, and that he has merely asserted truisms of the most obvious character. "I have said," he continues, "and say again, that it is neither honest nor moral for men to swear one way and to believe another, and I have not imputed such conduct to the brethren in question. I have proved it, alas, too surely. If any clergyman can say that the words under dispute exactly express his own views, and that he would not wish to see them altered, I have only so far dissented from him as your own rules allow, and have upon that point, but upon that only, even vindicated his position in the Anglican Establishment." He declines to retract anything he has preached or published, and adds, "I impeach before the bar of universal Christendom the men who, knowing that baptism does not regenerate, yet declare in public that it does; if Christendom will not consider the impeachment, let it stand on record before the merciful face of the Great Head of the Church, and let Him do as seemeth Him good." Mr. Spurgeon also addresses a letter "To the Christian public," for the purpose of showing that the charges he has brought against the Evangelical clergy are neither novel nor singular. To do this he quotes passages, in which the charges have been maintained, from the works of the Hon. and Rev. Baptist W. Noel, the Rev. W. Robinson, the Rev. W. Thorn, the Rev. S. Minton, of Worcester College, Oxford, the Rev. Thomas Davis, and the Society for the Revision of the Liturgy. He concludes by saying:—"Dear friends.—This is but a sample of the whole, and I confidently appeal to the great heart of the British people against the charge of inventing a rash or groundless accusation. To the Most High God I leave my work in this matter. He knoweth that zeal for His truth alone urges me to pursue my present path, involving me, as it does, in all the pains which contumely and hatred can inflict."

PROMISED VISIT OF BROTHER IGNATIUS TO LONDON.—An announcement that "Brother Ignatius," whose proceedings at Claydon and Norwich have recently excited much attention, was to preach in the church of St. Mary Magdalene, Munster Square, drew an overwhelming congregation on Sunday morning. The service commenced with the appearance of 20 surpliced choristers in the chancel, followed by two priests, wearing green stoles, but no university hoods. Then came the Rev. Edward Stuart, the incumbent, wearing a cope richly embroidered, the ornamentation at the back forming a rich yellow embroidered cross. The two candles (between which was a large gilt cross) on the altar had been previously lighted. In the first place, Mr. Stuart incensed the altar. A young boy, surpliced and kneeling, then presented what is called a "boat," made apparently of silver, containing the incense, then the thurible or censer in which the incense was burned, and in which it was fumed. This thurible, which was provided with long chains, Mr. Stuart took from the "Thurifer" the attendant, and swung it in the air, until the altar became enveloped in a white cloud. While these proceedings were going on the choristers chanted the Te Deum with much solemnity. When the Gospel of the day was announced, the church was again incensed. During the recital of the Nicene Creed, most of the congregation knelt down at the words, "and was incarnate by the Holy Ghost." At the close of the ante-Communion Service Mr. Stuart stood with his face to the congregation, and stripped himself of his cope, leaving on the "alb," a long white linen garment, reaching almost to the feet, but different from the ordinary clerical surplice, and a "girdle" round his waist, representing the girding of the priest's loins in memory of our Lord's admonition to readiness. He wore also an embroidered green stole, crossed over his breast. In this attire he went into the pulpit, to the amazement of those who had come to hear Brother Ignatius. He then said:—

"Brother Ignatius tells me that he has got a sore throat, and cannot preach here to-day. I am sorry for it, because some have come here probably for the purpose of hearing him. It is not my fault. Before I gave you notice last Sunday morning that he would preach here to-day, I received a distinct assurance from him that nothing should hinder him from coming here. Perhaps Brother Ignatius thinks a promise is nothing, and that is my opinion about his sore throat. When I asked him to preach here last summer, and engaged to give him what might be collected for his mission, about 150*l.* being raised, he had no sore throat; but as the offertory collection to-day was to be on behalf of the Church of St. Mary Magdalene, poor Brother Ignatius has got a sore throat. Now, as some have no doubt come to hear Brother Ignatius, I will wait a minute or two to allow those who like to leave the church to go. Those who like to remain I shall be of course glad to see to listen to a common-place sermon."

About three minutes elapsed, and as no one seemed disposed to move, Mr. Stuart proceeded, taking for his text the first chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians, verses 22 and 23, "And gave him to be the head over all things to the Church." He said there were things in the world quite as important as Brother Ignatius, which existed before Brother Ignatius, and would exist after him, whether he had a sore throat or not. He was going to speak that morning of one of those things, which was the Church of Christ. They were told in the apostolic writings that there was a Church on earth; secondly, what that Church was; and thirdly, who was the head of that Church. It was important that people should be taught these things, because in these days people have very different ideas about the Church of Christ. Many people did not know what the Church was, and every clergyman knew that the question was frequently put to him, "What really is the Church?" or "How many Churches are there?". Is the Church that of England, Rome, France, Russia, Constantinople, or any other country? Some said the Queen was the head of the Church, others that the Pope of Rome was its head. Some affirmed that extra ecclesia nulla salus—that there was no salvation beyond the pale of the Church—which was quite true. It was, however, asked what was the nature of the Church, and whether any distinct and definite answer could be given to that question. He thought St. Paul answered the question when he said that the Church was the body of Christ. There was really only one Church on earth, for there was only one body of Christ, and men were made members of that Church by baptism, the Holy Communion being the centre of unity. The Church was Catholic—not simply national, for a national was simply part of a Catholic Church. It was not a Roman Catholic Church, for the word "Roman" showed that the Church to which it was attached was only a portion of the Catholic Church. It certainly had been said that members of that communion did not call themselves Roman Catholics, and that the term "Roman" was only applied to them by persons who were opposed to them in faith. The word "Roman," however, occurred in the canons of the Church as settled by the Council of Trent, and to repudiate that word was a lie on their part. At the same time he saw no use in employing the language of invective against the Roman Catholics or in calling them idolators. It would be far better if every one would exert himself to prevent the spread of schism, strife, and variance, and to bring about the re-union of Christendom. Such a thing might not take place in our own day, but all should so strive through misrepresentations and difficulties, that if Catholic unity could not be restored, no blame should rest with them. At the close of the sermon, Mr. Stuart went back to the altar, where he resumed the Eucharistic vestment, and proceeded to the administration of the Holy Communion, the service being chorally rendered.

DESTRUCTION OF MILTON'S HOUSE IN BARBICAN.—This interesting relic of the poet Milton has just been pulled down to make way for the extension of the Metropolitan Railway from the Victoria Street Station to Finsbury Circus. Of late years such parts of the house as remained intact—namely, the study, schoolroom, and kitchen—have been used for mercantile purposes, and the part which faces Barbican had long been a dyer's shop. It was known as No. 17 in the street, and was situated a few paces from the north-east corner of Aldersgate Street on the right hand, leading towards Finsbury Square. It was here that Milton resided just before he became Latin secretary to Cromwell, and about the time of his reconciliation with his first wife, Mary Powell. He was then about 37 years of age. "About this time (1645)," wrote Dr. Johnson in his memoir of the poet, "he had taken a large house in Barbican for the reception of scholars; but the numerous relations of his wife, to whom he generously granted a refuge for a while, occupied his rooms. In time, however, they went away, and the house again, said his nephew Philips, now looked like a house of the Muses only, though the accession of scholars was not great." The schoolroom and study were a good way back from the present line of the street, and were probably selected by Milton on that account, as he had previously chosen a house in Aldersgate Street, as Johnson tells us at the upper end of a passage, that he might avoid the noise. It is likely to have been a house situate in a garden, of which there were many handsome ones at that time in the parish of Cripplegate, in which it stood. The schoolroom and study were lined with oak panelling, and the windows were latticed. In taking down the building a small coffin was found embedded in one of the walls, containing what is said to be the skeleton of a monkey in perfect preservation. By an agreeable coincidence, while the house of the poet of "Paradise Lost" has been destroyed in a utilitarian age, the venerable church of St. Giles, Cripplegate, hard by, in which his remains are interred, is undergoing a partial restoration. It is a very venerable and interesting fabric, being upwards of 750 years old, having been founded in 1090 by Alfrane, the first master of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, and dedicated to St. Giles, Abbot of Nimes, in France. Besides being the burial-place of Milton, it has a historic interest as the church in which the marriage of Oliver Cromwell was solemnised, and in which the remains of Fox, the martyrologist, Speed, and many other worthies are interred. There, too, the burial of Defoe is registered, although he was not interred in the church or the adjacent cemetery, but in the neighbourhood. The original structure was at first small, but was at different times greatly enlarged, until at length, in 1545, it was completely destroyed by fire. The present edifice was then erected, and escaped the great fire of London in 1666. It is therefore among the oldest of the churches in the city of London, and is celebrated not more for the noble of distinguished persons which repose within its walls than for itself, being a fine specimen of Gothic architecture, richly adorned with monuments and many memorials of antiquity, furnished with a peal of not less than ten of the finest bells, to which are attached a set of chimes, which play every third hour and vary every day. It has been recently decorated with some handsome stained-glass windows, the gifts of old parishioners. In the adjacent cemetery are some fine remains of the old wall of London and part of an ancient bastion.

THE DIETRICHSTEIN CASE.—Our readers will remember this case, in which it was alleged that Mr. Sigismund Dietrichstein had swindled two City houses out of a large sum of money which was due to them for shares sold to him. The accused left the country, and was traced by detective officers to Pesth in Hungary, but the Austrian authorities refused to give him up, trying him, however, themselves for the alleged crime committed here. He was acquitted, and has subsequently the means of restoring to the prosecutors a considerable amount of the property. A few days since he returned to England, and having been soon apprehended he was last week brought up at the Mansion House, when the prosecutors formally withdrew from the case, and the prisoner's solicitor said he was rather the victim than the wrong-doer. As the prosecution was therefore at an end, the prisoner was discharged.

REPORTED APPEARANCE OF A NEW ALABAMA.—The following despatch, dated Bremerhaven, Sept. 1, has been received at Lloyd's from an agent of the Shipping Association:—"A large steamer is reported to have run into Nieudiep on Saturday, with French colours flying for a pilot. A boat went out and put one on board. The steamer then came out under Prussian colours, and on reaching Bremerhaven again changed colours, and hoisted the Confederate flag. The pilot who took her to Bremerhaven believes she still remains there. She steamed 10 knots at half speed, and is reported to be under the command of Captain Semmes (late of the Alabama), with 300 men on board, and the frigate is pierced for 40 guns. She is said to have been built at Bordeaux, where there are three similar in course of building." This statement is contradicted by the Weser Zeitung, which affirms that the vessel which has arrived from Bordeaux, has been purchased by the Prussian Government, with a view of adding her to the Prussian navy. Her name was the Osacca, but she has been renamed the Victoria.

PARISH RATES IN THE METROPOLIS.—The amount in the pound actually levied during last year for the relief of the poor, the county rate, and the metropolitan local management rate in the metropolitan parishes was as follows:—Clapham poor-rate, 2*s.* 10*d.*; county, 4*d.*; metropolitan, 2*s.* 6*d.* Mile End New Town, poor, 4*s.* 6*d.*; metropolitan, 2*s.* 6*d.* Paddington, poor and county together, 3*s.* 8*d.*; metropolitan, 2*s.* 1*s.* St. Anne, Westminster, poor, 2*s.* 3*d.*; metropolitan, 3*s.* St. Clement Danes, poor and county together, 2*s.* 3*d.*; metropolitan, 2*s.* St. George's, Hanover Square, poor 1*s.* 8*d.*; county, 3¾*d.*; general management, 1*s.*; local sewers, ½*d.* St. Mary, Kennington, poor, 8*d.*; police 6*d.*; county, 3*d.*; metropolitan, 1*s.* 5½*d.* St. Mary Islington, poor, 1*s.* 8*d.*; county, 3*d.*; metropolitan, 6*d.* St. Marylebone, poor, 2*s.* 2*d.*; county, 3¾*d.*; metropolitan, 1*s.* 8¾*d.* St. Pancras, poor, 2*s.* 2*d*; county and metropolitan, 1*s.* 9½*d.* St. Saviour, Southwark, poor 4*s.* 2*d.*; metropolitan, 2*s.* 4*d.* St. Nicholas, Deptford, poor and county, 5*s.* 7*d.*; metropolitan, 2*s.* 8*d.*

MYSTERIOUS DEATH ON THE METROPOLITAN RAILWAY.—On Saturday night a fatal occurrence, which for some days was the subject of much mystery, took place at the Portland Road station of the Metropolitan Railway. A woman was killed by falling on the line while endeavouring to enter one of the carriages when the train was in motion. It was at first supposed to be an accident, but a report was afterwards circulated that she deliberately threw herself on the rails with a view to self-destruction, and it was subsequently asserted that she was pushed beneath the train by a man who immediately made off up the staircase of the station. It appeared that deceased, who was a fine-looking woman of about 30 years of age, was accompanied by a man to the Portland Road station, and that they took two third-class tickets for the Edgware Road station. One of these tickets was returned with others from the Edgware station on Sunday morning as having been given up there on the previous night. It appears from this that the man could not have run away from the Portland station as alleged, but got into the train and went on to the Edgware Road, but his conduct in leaving the station without communicating with the authorities there respecting the accident to the woman, or making any inquiries about her subsequently, tended to keep up the mystery of the case. The woman had a wedding-ring on her finger, and her dress, which was half mourning, was very old and much mended. She was not identified till Wednesday, when Mr. C. Pritchard, upholsterer and undertaker, of Crescent Street, Euston Square, identified her as his daughter. He stated that her name was Emma Jane Gollop, and that she was the wife of a chairmaker in Harrow Street, Lisson Grove. They had three children, one 11, another 6, and one three years of age. Her husband was an invalid and in very bad circumstances. She had unfortunately formed a connexion with a married man named Henry Powell, an organpipemaker, working at some organ builders in the Euston Road. On Saturday night between 11 and 12, his son in law and daughter were having something to drink with him at a publichouse near the Hampstead Road, when she went off in a huff, and threatened to go to an aunt from whom she had some expectations. Her husband left to go home by the train, and on Monday morning came to witness's house and said that his wife had not been home; but added that while he was in the train and just as it was moving off towards Baker Street he saw her and Powell together on the platform, and had he seen her before the train started he would have got out of the carriage and made her get in. The police on Thursday discovered the residence of Powell, but as there was no charge against him he was not taken into custody. He has not offered any explanation of the circumstances, nor has he given any reason why he did not come forward to give information on the matter when the death of the woman was made public, and a full description of her given in the newspapers. He is a man of about 50 years of age, and is said to have been in the company of deceased for some time previous to their appearance at the railway station near midnight. The coroner's inquiry into the case is adjourned until Monday, October 3, but in consequence of the new light which has been thrown on the matter, he will probably appoint an earlier day for the resumption of the inquest.

STARVATION AT CHELSEA.—About three weeks ago, a man between 30 and 40 years of age, who gave the name of Selby, took an unfurnished room on the first floor at 4, Durham Street, Chelsea, at the rate of 3*s.* 6*d.* per week, as he alleged for the occupancy of two of his maiden sisters, but in reality, as it turned out afterwards, for himself and his three sisters. From that time nothing was seen of two of the sisters by any person, and the other sister and her brother appeared to live in a most secluded manner, as they were seldom heard except at night. The stench which latterly emanated from the room was very great; and the landlord attributing it to the dirty habits of his new lodgers, determined to see the man. He did not succeed in doing so till Friday morning last, when Selby told him that he was in great trouble; that one of his sisters had died on the previous Monday, that his other sister had died on the Tuesday, and that he did not know what to do, as he could not get an order for their burial without a doctor's certificate. He asked the landlord not to tell anybody about the affair, but of course he felt it his duty to communicate the facts to the Coroner's officer, who proceeded to the room, which was locked inside. He threatened to force the door if it was not unfastened, and was then admitted. A frightful spectacle presented itself. Stretched before him lay the dead bodies of two women in a state of decomposition and hardly recognisable. They resembled skeletons covered with green tissue-paper more than human bodies. Both were without any clothing except a chemise; one was stretched on an iron bedstead with web sacking, and the other lay crouched up in one corner of the room. The only other articles of furniture were two chairs. An inquest was held on Saturday, when the man said that his right name was Moss, and that he had been a solicitor's clerk. The deceased were his two sisters, aged 38 and 40. The surviving sister, who lived with them, said that she could not get them to take any food. A surgeon who had performed a post mortem examination, said that he found no traces of food in either of the stomachs, and it was his opinion that they died from exhaustion from fever or the want of proper sustenance. The jury returned a verdict in accordance with the medical evidence.

PANIC IN THE ADELPHI THEATRE. — On Friday night during the performance at this theatre some one in the gallery shouted out at the top of his voice "Fire," and repeated the cry several times. A rush was made to the doors, and a gentleman named Horatio Prater, of 6, Commercial Road, Bayswater, was forced down upon the floor of the pit, was trampled upon by a number of persons, and had his arm broken. The alarm was groundless, and order having been restored, the performance was resumed.

CHILD MURDER AT PADDINGTON. — On Tuesday morning, at 8 o'clock, a charwoman employed in cleaning out the first-class ladies' waiting-room on the departure platform of the Great Western station at Paddington, found under a sofa the dead body of a fine female child, in long clothes, and tied up in an apron, the string of which was drawn tightly round the child's neck. Mr. Durdle, chief inspector of the railway company's police, ordered the body to be taken to the police station, where it was examined by a surgeon, who said the child was about ten days old, had been remarkably healthy, and had been dead about three hours. At the time the body was found there was a lady in an adjoining first-class ladies' waiting-room, who, on being interrogated by Mr. Durdle, stated that she had come to the station to see a lady off by the 6 A.M. train, and had been resting herself since that time. The lady gave her name and address, which Mr. Durdle found to be correct, and he allowed her to go at large. On Wednesday Dr. Lankester held an inquest on the body, when the surgeon who had examined it, stated that it had been strangled by the ligature round its neck. There was also a severe fracture of the skull over the right parietal bone, but the immediate cause of death was strangulation. The coroner said there could be no doubt that this was as atrocious and cruel a murder as that of Mr. Briggs, and endeavours ought to be made to bring the guilty parties to justice. In Paddington, taking its size and population, there were more infanticides than in any other district of the metropolis, and being a wealthy parish the authorities ought to offer a large reward for the apprehension of the delinquents, for in this case the probability was that there was a second party concerned. He would adjourn the inquest for three weeks to enable the police to exercise their vigilance.

CASE OF CRUELTY AT GREENWICH.—A few days since a girl was found in the market-place at Greenwich in an almost exhausted state, and with a long iron chain fastened around her neck by means of a padlock. The girl, who is supposed to be about 11 years of age, was discovered by the market-constable, having evidently made her escape from some place of confinement. In addition to her sufferings from long confinement, her emaciated state indicated that she had also endured the horrors of starvation. The only thing that could be ascertained from her was that her name was Sarah White. Her mind appeared to be in such a state that she was unable to name the place she had escaped from. The unfortunate creature was removed to the Greenwich Union, where she remains, under the treatment of the house-surgeon; and the police are making strict inquiries about the matter.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths in London in the week that ended Saturday, September 10, were 1352. The average number in the corresponding week of the 10 years, 1854-63, excluding the deaths from epidemic cholera in 1854, and corrected for increase of population, was 1212. The present return is therefore 140 above the average. During the week the births of 954 boys and 985 girls, in all 1939 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1852.

Provincial.

ABINGDON.—The Memorial to the Prince Consort in this town is now almost completed, and it is hoped that her Majesty will inaugurate it on her return to Windsor. The base of the Memorial is quadrangular, and there will be a medallion of the Queen in each panel, with bands of roses on the shafts at each angle. It will support four columns of red Mansfield stone, upon the angles of which the British lion, holding the quartered and emblazoned arms of the Prince Consort and her Majesty, will be carved. The main octagonal shaft will rise in the centre of these columns; its panels will contain suitable carved emblems, and it will be surmounted by a richly sculptured and clustered capital, from which will ascend five shafts, carved, and displaying the armorial bearings of the borough, county, and diocese. The pedestal will be crowned by a colossal statue of the Prince, in his robes as Chancellor of the Order of the Garter.

BASINGSTOKE.—The disbandment of the Basingstoke Rifle Volunteer Corps for not obeying the command of the officer at Guildford on Easter Monday, has been confirmed by Earl De Grey and Ripon, after a full consideration of the evidence adduced at the late court of inquiry held at Winchester.

BATH.—The 34th annual meeting of the British Association commenced in this city on Wednesday, under the presidency of Sir Charles Lyell, Bart. The President's inaugural address, instead of taking a general review of the progress of science in all its departments, like those of former Presidents, confined itself to the history and origin of the hot springs of Bath, and to the geological phenomena connected with them, discussing at great length all the theories to which these phenomena have given rise among the past and present schools of geologists. The address, which was of great length, was loudly cheered during its delivery and at its close. On Thursday the different sections assembled in the rooms appointed for them, for the reading and discussion of reports, the presidents being as follows:—Mathematical and Physical Science, Professor Cayley; Chemical Science, Dr. Odling; Geology, Professor Phillips; Zoology and Botany, Dr. J. E. Gray, of the British Museum; Physiology, Dr. Edward Smith; Geography and Ethnology, Sir Roderick I. Murchison; Economic Science and Statistics, Dr. William Farr; Mechanical Science, Mr. Hawkshaw. On Thursday evening there was a conversazione in the Assembly Rooms. Yesterday the sections met at usual. To-day, after the meeting of the sections, excursions will be made to Frome, Holwell, and the Vallis; Stanton Drew and Radstock. In the evening a banquet will be given in the Guildhall by the mayor of the city. On Monday, the sections will meet as usual. The general committee will meet in the afternoon to decide upon the place of meeting in 1865. In the evening Dr. Livingstone will deliver an address in the Theatre concerning his explorations in Africa during the last six years. On Tuesday, the sections will meet as usual. In the evening there will be a Microscopical Soirée in the Assembly Rooms. The instruments collected will be insured during their railway transit for not less than 6000*l.* On Wednesday the concluding general meeting will take place, and in the evening there will be a banquet in the Guildhall, given by Mr. Tite, M.P. On Thursday, excursions will be made to Bristol and Clifton, to Salisbury, Old Sarum, and Stonehenge.

BILLINGHAY. — On Friday a destructive fire took place in this village, which is three and a half miles from Tattershall, five from Kirkstead, and twelve from Boston. It broke out in the chimney of a thatched hovel, in a yard belonging to a wood dealer. The wind at the time was blowing a gale, and the flames spread so quickly to the other thatched cottages in the neighbourhood, that they were not extinguished until nine cottages, the Primitive Methodist Chapel, and numerous outbuildings were burnt down. Nearly 100 men, women, and children are now accommodated with temporary lodgings in the village school-room, and their sufferings must be very great for some time, as they have lost all their clothes and furniture in the fire. On the following day another fire broke out in the stack yard of Mr. John Sharpe, of Billinghay fen. The stacks were wholly consumed, but the fire was prevented from spreading beyond the yard.

BIRKENHEAD.—Mr. Jacob Jacobson, a person who has hitherto held a respectable position, and been employed as assistant overseer of Oxton, has been sent to Chester Castle, under a commitment order from the Commissioners of Assessed Taxes, for a deficiency of more than 47*l.* in his accounts. It is stated that he is also deficient to a considerable amount in his income-tax collections.

BIRMINGHAM.—On Monday the purchase of Aston Hall and Park was completed at the Town Clerk's office. The keys were handed to the mayor, as possession of the hall and 43 acres of land, with a chair by way of possession of the chattels and effects. The Park will be formally opened by the mayor on an early day.—The receipts of the recent Festival far exceed the expenses, and the funds of the General Hospital will be benefited to the extent of at least 3000*l.* by the speculation. The returns amount in all to 13,166*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.*

CLAYBROOK.—The announcement that Bishop Colenso had agreed to preach a sermon for the village schools in the church of this parish on Sunday afternoon, and that the Bishop of Peterborough would exercise his episcopal authority to prevent the sermon being preached, created considerable excitement in Leicestershire last week. In spite of the Bishop of Peterborough's disapproval of the proposed service, the public announcement that Bishop Colenso would preach was repeated on Saturday, and in the evening of that day the Bishop, accompanied by a lay friend, arrived from London at Claybrook vicarage, the residence of the Rev. R. H. Johnson, who holds the vicarage of Claybrook in conjunction with the rectory of Lutterworth, about four miles distant. Shortly after the Bishop's arrival, Mr. Gates, of Lutterworth, who acted as agent of the Bishop of Peterborough, presented himself at the vicarage and inquired for Bishop Colenso. The vicar had an interview with Mr. Gates, and during the conversation Mr. Johnson was served with an inhibition from the Bishop, forbidding him to allow a sermon to be preached by Bishop Colenso. A similar document was served upon the Rev. Lewis Wood, Mr. Johnson's curate and son-in-law. Mr. Gates then renewed his request that he might see Bishop Colenso. The Bishop said that he knew nothing of Mr. Gates, and as he did not desire to have any communication with him he declined to see him. Mr. Gates then left the vicarage. On Sunday morning, as Bishop Colenso, accompanied by his friend and Mr. Johnson, were passing through the churchyard, a person holding a document in his hand attempted to approach the Bishop, but was prevented by the Bishop's friend, and, during a slight altercation that took place, Bishop Colenso and Mr. Johnson passed into the church, and along the centre aisle to the chancel. They were followed by the agent of the Bishop of Peterborough, who, accompanied by the churchwardens, proceeded to the chancel, where Bishop Colenso was kneeling at the communion table. While the Bishop was kneeling, the Bishop of Peterborough's agent, holding out a written document, addressed some remarks to the Bishop, who, however, did not notice him. The agent then threw the notice at the Bishop, and it fell at his feet, and there remained until the Bishop had passed out of the church at the conclusion of the service, when it was picked up by some official connected with the church. Mr. Johnson announced at the morning service that his diocesan had served him with a notice commanding him not to allow Bishop Colenso to preach in his church, but intimated that the Bishop would publish the sermon he had intended to preach, and that, to prevent disappointment, he would address a meeting at the school-room in the evening. There was a large attendance at the afternoon service, and Bishop Colenso, attired in his episcopal robes, took his place at the communion table. The service was conducted throughout by the Rev. Lewis Wood, the curate, who, before the sermon, delivered an address to the congregation with reference to what had occurred in the morning and on Saturday evening. He said that Bishop Colenso, on hearing that the Bishop of the diocese had forbidden the vicar to allow him to preach in the church, had at once declared that he would not be the cause of an unseemly strife in the parish, and would abstain from occupying the pulpit. He then referred to Bishop Colenso's work, and said that Mr. Johnson, the vicar, and himself heartily and entirely approved that work, and recommended the parishioners to read and study it for themselves. They believed the Bishop to be a true and faithful servant of God, who was doing his utmost to advance the cause of true religion, and to promote the solid lasting welfare of our national Church. He compared the manner in which he had been treated by the Bishops and others, to the treatment of Wickliffe, the great reformer of Lutterworth, who was defamed and calumniated, and would have been burnt alive if the Bishops of his time could have done it. He said that it was their firm belief that, as Wickliffe put first an open English Bible into the hands of his countrymen, so the Bishop of Natal had been one of the first to do his part—and he had done it manfully and well—to advance still further the work of the Reformation, and to enable English laymen to read that Bible for themselves, when opened, thoughtfully and intelligently, as God, who gave His book, would have them read it, and not with the blind, unreasoning credulity of a priest-ridden people. They thanked God that they had lived to see this day—a day of increased light, a day of increased love of the truth, and of simple, straightforward utterance of it; a day of hope for the future of the Church of England. At 6 o'clock the village schoolroom was crowded, and a large number of persons were unable to gain admission. Bishop Colenso addressed those assembled on "Our Father in Heaven." The crowd outside became so impatient to hear him that an adjournment to the green was resolved upon, and Bishop Colenso continued his address standing upon a table in the open air. He impressed upon his audience the importance of conveying the message of the love of God to the millions who are ignorant of it. He then gave some interesting particulars of the mission work in his own diocess—a district, he said, "which the Queen has placed under my charge as Bishop, with regard to the affairs of the Church of England." He read several extracts from letters he had received from native converts, while he had been in England, as evidence of the solid work that had been done in the diocess in preparing those natives for future usefulness among their fellows. At the conclusion of the address the people assembled sang the "Doxology," at the Bishop's request, and he then bade them affectionately "Good-bye."

CHATTERIS.—One of the most frightful fires that ever occurred in the Isle of Ely, took place on Wednesday, on the farm of Mr. Smith Billups. There was a high wind blowing at the time, and the progress of the flames was so rapid that more than 70 houses and cottages were destroyed in about two hours, rendering between 80 and 100 poor families houseless and destitute. The fire is supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

HERNE BAY.—On Friday afternoon, Mr. Surtees, M.P., who has been staying some time at Broomfield House, Herne, started for a drive in a pony phaeton, to this place, accompanied by Mrs. Surtees and their child, with a footman in attendance. After passing the turnpike-gate the pony shied and ran into an adjoining field, upsetting the vehicle. Mrs. Surtees and the child were taken up in a state of insensibilty, the former having pitched heavily on her head. The child, though not dead when taken up, did not long survive. Mrs. Surtees, it is feared, sustained fracture of the skull and total destruction of the sight of one eye. Mr. Surtees and the footman escaped with a few bruises. The Jury at the inquest on the child returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

LEEDS.—The execution of the two condemned murderers, Myers and Sargisson, tock place on Saturday in front of Armley Gaol, and is said to have been the first execution which ever took place in Leeds. The culprits admitted the justice of their sentence, although Sargisson maintained to the last that his accomplice in the murder of John Cooper had taken a more active part in the deed than himself. In Myers' case the only witness of the murder was his own little girl, who saw him cut her mother's throat, and who was obliged to come forward and give fatal evidence against her father. Both men showed a disposition to comply with the exhortations of their religious advisers, and were visited while in prison by the Bishop of Ripon, who spent an hour with each culprit. It is said that 80,000 persons attended the execution, which passed off without any disorderly conduct. Great excitement, however, was subsequently caused in the town by the statements of some Sheffield newspapers that Myers lived for 20 minutes or half an hour after the drop fell, respiration having continued through the wound in his neck, caused by his attempt to commit suicide. It is now said that these statements were founded on misapprehension. The governor of the gaol and all the other officials who were on the scaffold state that Myers died instantly; that he fell "plump," and never moved a muscle afterwards. The surgeon states that after the first shock of strangulation there was a slight attempt at respiration, which might have continued for a few seconds, but it was quite plain that death was instantaneous. The wound in the throat certainly bled on the rope, compressing the upper rings of the trachea, but it was only as much blood as stained the lower part of the white cap by which the executioner had covered the face. Myers never struggled after he fell, while Sargisson exhibited signs of life for two or three minutes afterwards. A screen which had been erected in front of the scaffold completely concealed the bodies from the enormous crowd, so that the populace could not see anything that took place after the drop fell.

LIVERPOOL. — The local papers state that the prisoners, James P. Brice and James Scott, who were convicted at the last Assizes of the attack on Dr. Rowe, and sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment with hard labour, are now employed as bricklayers' labourers in the erection of a new wing at Kirkdale Gaol.—At Vauxhall Foundry, on Friday, a man named Farrell was assisting in lifting a cylinder, weighing 5 tons, from the pit in which it had been cast, when a ring in the tackling, by which the heavy piece of metal was suspended, gave way, and the cylinder, falling to the ground, rolled into the pit from which it had just been raised. On account of the breaking of the tackling the huge metal cylinder was allowed to remain in the hole, none of those engaged in the work having the slightest suspicion that one of their fellow-workmen was buried beneath it on the fiery sand. On Saturday morning Mrs. Farrell went to the foundry to inquire about her husband, but was told that he was not there, and it was not until 17 hours after the fall of the cylinder that it occurred to two of the men that it was possible the man might be in the pit, and they went in and raked about with sticks. In a short time they discovered the foot of a man projecting from under the edge of the cylinder, and on raising the cylinder the body of Farrell was discovered on the bed of the pit, the heat of which was even then oppressive. His head was completely flattened, and the body was roasted so much that portions of the charred flesh fell off. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of Accidental Death, with a statement of their opinion that the accident resulted from the insufficient strength of the ring employed at the end of the tackle; and that there was gross carelessness on the part of deceased's fellow-workmen in not inquiring properly concerning him at the time.

MANCHESTER.—At the monthly meeting of the Executive Relief Committee on Monday, the Hon. Secretary reported that the balance in the bank was now 124,400*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.* The reduction in the numbers relieved during last month had been 2934, since the end of January in this year 102,755, and since the height of the distress in January, 1863, 375,249. In 17 districts the local committees had been able to suspend relief; and the pressure was now confined to Ashton, Glossop, Preston, and Wigan. Mr. Commissioner Farnall reported that on the 3d inst. there was an increase in the number of persons receiving parochial relief, as compared with the 6th ult. of 61, and that not more than 2000 out of 3860 able-bodied men now in receipt of relief were fit to be employed on public works. Mr. Rawlinson reported that 80 towns, townships, parishes, and districts had adopted the provisions of the Public Works Act, and in most of them works were in progress. The total amount sanctioned by Parliament was 1,850,000*l.* Out of this sum the Poor Law Board had ordered, and the Exchequer Loan Commissioners had paid over, 577,609*l.*, leaving a residue of 1,272,391*l.*, a large portion of which had been applied for. The weekly wages on these public works varied from 12*s.* to 20*s.* per man. The report added that the experiment of excavating works by distressed cotton operatives had now been tried on a large scale; and though some of the works, town sewering and house draining, might have been considered beyond the scope of such labour, the determination and intelligence of the men had overcome all difficulties.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—On the 8th inst. an inquest was held on the body of Mr. William Keith Murray, brother of Sir Patrick Keith Murray, of Ochtertyre, Perthshire. He had formerly been an officer in the 60th Rifles, but had left the regiment and had come to Newcastle for a course of instruction in Messrs. Palmer's works, at Jarrow. On the 7th inst. about midnight, he entered the billiard-rooms of the Central Exchange, which he was in the habit of frequenting. After being there some short time he was supplied with a glass of gin, and shortly after he was seen putting some liquid into it. As soon as he swallowed it he suddenly collapsed, and sank with his head on one side. A medical man who was present attended to him, and while the deceased was sitting in a chair in this condition a small bottle which smelt of prussic acid was taken out of his pocket. He was subsequently taken to the infirmary, where he shortly afterwards died from the effects of the poison. He had been in the habit of taking laudanum in considerable quantities. The jury returned a verdict that death was caused by prussic acid, administered by himself, and that there was no evidence to show the state of mind he was in when he took it.

NORWICH.—At the Blofield Petty Sessions, a few days since, an information was laid against Mr. Burroughes, late M.P. for East Norfolk, by the local inspector of nuisances, for not having proper privy accommodation and drainage on his cottage property. It was stated in support of the information that Mr. Burroughes owned three cottages in Hemblington; that they consisted of two rooms each, and that each cottage was occupied by a family. In the first there were a man, his wife, and seven children; in the second a man, his wife, and six children; in the third, a man, his wife, and two children. These three families, consisting of 21 men, women, and children, had not a single privy; the only places they had to make use of were holes, one immediately opposite the cottage door, and another within a few feet of the cottage door. For the defence a surveyor was called, who stated that there was no offensive smell on the premises, that the drainage was good, that there was a good supply of water, and that the holes referred to were at some distance from the cottages. The Chairman said that the majority of the bench considered that a nuisance existed under the 12th section of the Act of Parliament; there was not sufficient accommodation, and the bench would make an order for abatement by October 10. The costs were allowed. A second information was then preferred against Mr. Burroughes for causing, by his default, a nuisance to exist on the premises, in the occupation of Jonathan T. Throne, at South Walsham, by not providing proper accommodation. It appeared that in this case there was no drainage or accommodation, and that there was a hole in the garden where the refuse was put, which was not covered up in any way. The family consisted of a man, his wife, a grown-up daughter, her illegitimate child, and two grown-up sons. The premises were in a wretched state generally, the thatch broken away, the water pouring into the pent-up room below, &c. For the defence, evidence was adduced to show that a bricklayer had inspected the premises, and that there was nothing offensive or unwholesome about them. The Chairman said that in this case the magistrates were also unanimous that there was not sufficient privy accommodation—in fact, there was none at all. An order was made for the abatement of the nuisance by October 10, and costs were allowed. Notice was given of appeal to the Quarter Sessions.

PLYMOUTH.—The English ship Jane D. Cooper, with mahogany, from Manzanilla and New York, put into Plymouth Sound on Monday, with her steward, a man of colour, in irons on a charge of having poisoned the captain, and subsequently threatened violence to one of the seamen, who mentioned his suspicions. The prisoner, who denied the charge, had been 17 days in irons when the ship entered the Sound. By the advice of the magistrates the ship has since sailed with the prisoner for Bremerhaven, to which port she was bound.

PRESTON.—About six months ago the magistrates of Lancashire agreed to appoint Roman Catholic gaol chaplains under the Prison Ministers' Act, for Kirkdale and Preston Houses of Correction. Since that time they have granted different sums of money for the alteration and fitting up of certain portions of the gaols so as to facilitate the worship of the Roman Catholic prisoners, and have also appointed chaplains to conduct the services. At the annual meeting on the 8th inst., Lord Stanley in the chair, Mr. T. B. Addison, Recorder of Preston, moved that, in accordance with the recommendation of the visiting justices of the House of Correction at Preston, a sum not exceeding 40*l.* be granted for the purchase of the vestments, chalice, linen, crucifix, candlesticks, and other articles necessary to enable the Roman Catholic minister to celebrate the services of his Church. The motion was seconded by Mr. R. Townley Parker. Mr. S. Parker moved as an amendment, "That no crucifix or graven image be introduced within the walls of the Preston gaol at the expense of the county." The amendment fell to the ground for want of a seconder, and on the court dividing on the original motion, 18 hands were held up for it, and 19 against it. The names were then taken with the following result:—For the motion, 22; against it, 21. The motion was declared to be carried.—On Tuesday morning a dreadful tragedy was perpetrated by a man named William Berry, miller, of 29, Ormskirk Road, this town. Since Whitsuntide he has been in a despondent state, partly through business affairs, arising from an unfounded jealousy of his wife. Early on Tuesday morning the woman was heard screaming, and it was subsequently discovered that she had been stabbed in several places about her breast, and that her throat had been cut. She bled very profusely, and died about half an hour after she was found. The man then made an attempt upon his life, and was found sitting on a chair with his throat cut, and the latest reports state that he is not likely to survive. The murdered woman was the mother of two children, and expected to be shortly confined of a third.

SANDRINGHAM.—Great preparations are making for the reception of the Prince and Princess of Wales for the shooting season, after their return from Denmark in October. The prospects of the shooting season on the Royal estate are very good, there being a large quantity of partridges and an abundance of pheasants and other game. The alterations and improvements which have been made, under the direction of Mr. Carmichael, the resident steward, have already completely changed the aspect of the estates. The plantations, which had become completely overgrown and choked with underwood, have been thinned, portions of the park have been raised and planted, and excellent roads made; a new and commodious house has been provided within the park for the head keeper, and on the table land before it have been constructed 18 large pheasantries, each being about 50 feet square, all connected with each other, and forming one large and compact block. The kitchen garden, which has been laid out, and which is to supply with fruit and vegetables the Royal table throughout the year, both at Sandringham and in London, comprises 15 acres, 7 of which are completely enclosed with brick walls, that on the north side being of great height, and parallel with it are six large grape conservatories, each 50 feet long. The choice fruits and vegetables are to be grown within the inner enclosure, while beyond that fruit trees have been planted, and the ordinary fruits and vegetables grown. The new labourers' dwellings, each of which is provided with three sleeping apartments, are nearly completed, and others are to be commenced. All the old cottages have been repaired, painted, and drained. The road on the north-east side of the park, leading to West Newton and Appleton, has been widened; and the wild underwood that grew out into the road has been replaced by a neat cossly-worked fence. The stables have been extended so as to insure uniformity of appearance, and afford sufficient accommodation for his Royal Highness's stud. The court yard is to be paved with the best Aberdeen granite. The Controller's house, situate in the park to the south-west of the Hall, is completed, the carriage drive and lawn are laid out, and offices, &c., fitted up. No alteration has as yet been made to the Hall. A model has been constructed according to the plans of Mr. Humbert, and if they are carried out a splendid palace will supersede the present modest mansion of Sandringham House. The beautiful Norwich gates and their accompaniments are on the point of completion, the decorators being now engaged in putting the finishing touch to them. They are to be faced with green bronze, and on the summit of each of the four pedestals is a griffin rampant bearing a shield. In the centre and surmounting the whole within a wreath, the Royal arms inside representing the crown and feathers, and outside a shield bearing the arms of England and Denmark united. The lower panels of the two principal pedestals have on the inner side the modern arms of Norfolk in relief, consisting of a castle and two angels with drawn swords, and on the outside the central position is occupied by the old Norfolk arms, above which are the arms of Norwich and Great Yarmouth, and below the arms of Lynn and Thetford. The gates with the additional trellis on each side form a crescent, and placed as they are at the end of the beautiful avenue of limes, at the principal entrance to the park, present a magnificent appearance. The Home Farm falls into the hands of the Prince of Wales at Michaelmas.

SHIELDS.—On Wednesday night, about 11 o'clock, a fatal explosion took place in Seghill Colliery, about eight miles from this town, while 19 men and boys, forming the night shift, were at work in the pit. It was at first supposed that all hands had been killed, but by the immediate efforts made at bank, 11 of them were got out of the pit alive. The remaining eight were killed. The bodies were all recovered on Thursday night. At the inquest on Monday it was shown that the explosion was caused by gas from an old working, ignited by a lamp which had got broken by a fall of stone. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

TIPTON.—A great strike of colliers against a notice from the masters for a reduction of 6*d.* a day in the men's wages has been organised throughout the whole of the South Staffordshire mining districts. On the 8th inst. between 8000 and 10,000 men assembled at Tipton to discuss their grievances; while another meeting, attended by 3000 persons, was held on the same day at Deepfields; and on Monday last a meeting of from 5000 to 7000 was held at Cannock Chase. At the Duffield meeting an immediate strike was determined upon, and at all the meetings resolutions were passed and arrangements made for bringing out on strike the whole mining population of South Staffordshire. It has been suggested that two well known County Court Judges of the district should act as arbitrators; but the proposal does not seem to have suited the views of all concerned.

FATAL BOILER EXPLOSION.—On Friday afternoon a boiler at the print works of Messrs. J. & A. Conbrough, Strathblane, about 12 miles from Glasgow, exploded while the works were in full operation. The furnace door was projected with great force against a dye-house immediately opposite, the wall of which was blown down. It then traversed the whole length of the interior, knocking down the wall at the opposite end, with a considerable portion of the roof. When the walls gave way the interior of the dye house was exposed to a deluge of scalding water mixed with steam, occasioning injuries which in several cases proved fatal, in addition to those who were hurt by the falling materials. Fourteen persons were injured, seven of whom—a woman, three boys, and three men—subsequently died; and of the remaining number, three remain in a very dangerous state.

EXTENSIVE FORGERIES IN KIRKWALL.—Mr. William Spence, a well-known merchant in Kirkwall, has been imprisoned for extensive forgeries. He was an elder in the United Presbyterian Church, and from the interest which he took in religious matters, had previously enjoyed a high reputation. The defalcations as at present ascertained amount to 2580*l.* Mr. Spence made no attempt to hide or deny his criminality. He was privately examined in the presence of the Sheriff and Procurator-Fiscal, and it is understood that his trial will take place in the High Court of Justiciary in Edinburgh, in November.

COURT OF CHANCERY (Before Vice Chancellor Kindersley, the Vacation Judge, at Southampton).—The Lords of Croquet.—Reid v. the Earl of Essex and Another.—This was a suit instituted by Captain Mayne Reid, the well-known author of many popular Indian novels, against the Earl of Essex and Miss Emily Faithfull, the Earl's publisher, to restrain the plaintiff's copyright in his recent work on "Croquet." The bill gives some account of the introduction into England of this national game, and of the extraordinary development which has since been accomplished in its science and rules. It appears from the statements of the bill that the plaintiff's work (of which he is the sole author and copyright proprietor) was published for him in the latter part of last year by Mr. Sweet, of King William Street, Charing Cross; that until then there had been short printed instructions had been sold in accompaniment and explanation of the game; and that owing to the poverty and vagueness of those instructions, and their failure to provide for numerous questions which arose, each original ground had from time to time, according to its own caprice and for its own local purposes, enlarged the existing rules and added new rules and new technical expressions, thereby occasioning a wide-spread and inconvenient variety in the rules and vocabulary of the game. Under these circumstances the plaintiff, considering that a comprehensive set of rules would, if well drawn up in respect of [illegible] and language, and introduced to the public, be admirably adapted throughout the country, determined to compile and publish such a work to add to it all requisite or explanatory notes and practical instructions, and, in fact, to compose a work which (so far as his intention and endeavours would avail) should prove an authoritative handbook on the game. He, accordingly, bestowed more than four months' labour and considerable expense in studying the science of the game, and all practical details connected with it, and particularly in collecting, investigating, and developing the existing rules and in inventing new rules and reducing the knowledge, views, and materials so acquired into an original and well-digested written shape. His work "Croquet" was the result. It contained, amongst other matters, no less than 126 "rules," with explanatory foot notes subjoined, all which were his own original composition. And the bill alleges that by far the greater part of the rules were, even in substance and tenor, first published in and by means of the work in question. It appears that the defendant, Miss Emily Faithfull, lately printed and published for the Earl of Essex, her co-defendant, a book called "The Rules of Croquet, revised and corrected by an Old Hand," which has already reached a second edition. The bill alleges that this book was a piracy of the plaintiff's copyright, being a copy, partly verbatim and partly with merely colourable alterations, of the greater part of his rules and footnotes, and that its sale (the price being only 6*d.*) would seriously interfere with that of the plaintiff's work, which, being of considerably larger bulk, costs 2*s.* 6*d.* It appears that the Earl of Essex had procured the "Old Hand's Book" to be compiled for him by a friend for the purpose of its being regularly issued and sent out with the sets of implements known to the toy trade and to the public as the "Cassiobury Croquet," and that he being individually innocent of the piracy, and not being then aware that the work in question was a legal infringement of the plaintiff's copyright, had declined to discontinue its publication. The plaintiff, therefore, filed his bill, praying for the usual injunction and other relief, and now moved upon notice for an injunction with the hearing. After hearing the case of the plaintiff, both the defendants (who had only recently become aware of the real nature and extent of the piracy) consenting thereto, the Vice-Chancellor made the following order:—That a perpetual injunction should issue, restraining the further publication, &c., of the "Old Hand's" book; that all copies remaining unsold should be delivered up to the plaintiff to be destroyed; and that the earl should forthwith pay the plaintiff 125*l.* by way of compensation for injury already occasioned by the infringement, together also with all costs of suit (which are said to be 185*l.*)

Betting—2 to 1 agst Blair Athol, 3 to 1 agst General Peel, 11 to 2 agst Miner, 8 to 1 agst Baragah, 100 to 6 agst Cambuscan, 25 to 1 each agst Ely and Knight of Snowdon, 30 to 1 agst Claremont, and 50 to 1 agst Black Rock and Brindisi. After one failure they were despatched from the post in a drenching shower of rain, which speedily destroyed the difference in the colours of the riders. General Peel got away with a slight lead, having with him Ely, Blair Athol, Baragah, Knight of Snowdon, and Claremont, the next division being headed by Miner and Black Rock, Brindisi and Cambuscan bringing up the rear. After running a quarter of a mile General Peel was pulled back, which left Ely in possession of the lead, Miner second, Baragah third, followed closely by Claremont, Ely, General Peel, and the favourite; as they neared the Hill, Miner assumed the lead, followed by Baragah, Claremont, and Ely, but on rounding the bend they were joined by the two favourites and Cambuscan, this lot running in company to the rifle butts, where Baragah was observed in advance, having Claremont in his rear; the pair, however, were headed at the Red House by Ely, followed by General Peel, Miner, and Cambuscan, so closely together that it was difficult to discern which was leading. When fairly in the straight Ely gave way, and was immediately headed by General Peel, who was shortly after joined by Cambuscan and Blair Athol, who ran in company to the distance, when Blair Athol attempted to divide General Peel and Cambuscan, but had to pull round them, which lost him some ground, but waiting with patience to the enclosure, he came up, and in the next few strides won, amid the most vociferous cheering, in a canter by a couple of lengths, General Peel obtaining the second money by a head from Cambuscan, who finished four lengths in advance of Miner; Ely fifth, Baragah sixth, Brindisi seventh, and Knight of Snowdon next. Black Rock and Claremont trotted in the last two. Stand Plate Handicap.—Mr. Drewitt's Diomed beat Nell Digby, Argonaut, and 12 others. Handicap Sweeps.—Mr. Elphinstone's Tesane beat Anonyma, Mongrel, and 18 others. Corporation Plate.—Mr. John Day's Master Richard beat Grace Darling, Lost Lynn, and 11 others. The Member's Plate.—Baron Rothschild's Lycoris beat Ambrosia, Lizzie Bob, Cadet Gu, and Merry Wife.

THE FORTHCOMING PRIZE FIGHT.—On Thursday there was a great meeting of patrons of the prize ring at the Three Tuns, Moor Street, Soho, to witness the arrangements for depositing a portion of the 500*l.* stakes on the forthcoming fight for the championship between Jem Mace and Joe Coburn. The final deposit will be made on Tuesday next. It has been settled that the fight shall take place on Tuesday, the 4th of October, and that if by the 23d inst. the place of fighting has not been decided upon, the men or their deputies are to toss for choice of some place in Ireland, within 100 miles and over 20 miles of Dublin. At present the betting is not very brisk, but odds are given in favour of Mace.

Markets.

COVENT GARDEN, Sept. 7.

Supplies of most things are still on the increase, especially those of Grapes and Melons. Apples, Plums, and Peaches are also abundant, and there is likewise a fair supply of William's Bon Chrétien Pear, a fine kind at this season. Kent Filberts and Cobs fetch from 45s. to 60s. per 100 lbs. New Walnuts promise to be plentiful. For Potatos there is a heavy sale, and prices for them have a downward tendency. Flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Heaths, Asters, Fuchsias, Pinks, Mignonette, and Roses.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Sept. 12.

The number of Beasts is rather smaller, but still it is large. Choicest kinds are scarce, and are readily disposed of. Inferior qualities are dull of sale, but all kinds are dearer. The supply of Sheep is very much shorter, and prices for all kinds are higher. There is rather more inquiry for Lambs, but the season is about over. Good Calves are dearer. From Germany and Holland there are 2960 Beasts, 9280 Sheep, 277 Calves, and 155 Pigs; from Scotland, 35 Beasts; from Ireland, 480; and 2570 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, Sept. 15.

We have rather a larger supply of Beasts than on Thursday last; trade is, however, active, and Monday's quotations are fully supported. The number of Sheep is about the same as last week, the demand is greater, and on the average prices are better. Lambs and Calves maintain Monday's quotations. From Germany and Holland there are 630 Beasts, 2690 Sheep, 469 Calves, and 150 Pigs; and 395 Beasts from Spain.

HOPS.—BOROUGH MARKET, FRIDAY, Sept. 16.

Messrs. Pattenden & Smith report an active demand for all descriptions of the new growth, at advancing prices. Yearlings and old Hops not much inquired for.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Sept. 12.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was moderate, nevertheless sales could only be effected at a decline of fully 1s. per qr. upon the prices of this day se'nnight, and a portion remained unsold at a late hour. The attendance was limited, and for foreign Wheat we do not alter our quotations, but where it was necessary to clear vessels or to force sales rather lower rates were submitted to. Barley of all descriptions was 1s. to 2s. per qr. cheaper. Of Beans and Peas there was scarcely any offering, and late prices were maintained. To effect sales of Oats it was necessary to submit to a reduction of 6d. per qr. Flour maintained late rates.

FRIDAY, Sept. 16.

The weather continued to be very fine from the 9th to the 12th inst. inclusive, but has since been showery and boisterous, with S.W. and S. winds. Inactivity continues to characterise the Wheat markets throughout the kingdom, and prices are variously quoted from 1s. to 2s. per qr. lower on the week. Malting Barley meets with little attention at present, and the value of grinding is affected by the recent arrivals of Maize, consequently prices have receded 6d. to 1s. per qr., and in some instances even more. The value of Beans and Peas is unchanged. Oats here and in several markets have been sold at a decline of 6d. per qr. The Flour trade has been heavy, and rather lower prices have been submitted to. Since Friday last 15 vessels with Wheat and 3 with Maize have been reported off the coast. The floating trade has been depressed during the week, neither Wheat nor Maize is in demand for future shipment, and also arrived cargoes have been very difficult of sale; the prices have receded 6d. to 1s. per qr. for Wheat, and 6d. per qr. for Maize and Barley. Paris, Sept. 15.—Flour: The transactions have been limited at fully late rates, which have even been exceeded in a few instances. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 27,000 cwts. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 32s. 6d. per 280 lbs. Wheat: An advance of about 6d. per 480 lbs. is asked by the holders, but very rarely obtained. The arrivals of English Wheat this week are good, of Barley small, of Oats large, of foreign Wheat and Oats good, and of Barley and Flour considerable. The market was again thinly attended, and Wheat, both English and foreign, met a very slow retail sale at barely Monday's prices. Spring Corn of all descriptions was unaltered in value.

LIVERPOOL, Sept. 13.—Our market has been well attended by both local and distant buyers to-day, but all still act with extreme caution, and sellers of Wheat have been forced to make a further reduction of 1d. per cental on the rates of last market day. Flour neglected, but not offering cheaper. The supply of Indian Corn being much in excess of the demand, prices still gave way, and we must note all descriptions fully 3d. per qr. lower than on Friday. Oats and Oatmeal very dull. Peas 1s. per qr. lower. Market closes without the least symptom of improvement.

FRIDAY, Sept. 16.—There was a moderate attendance at market. Wheat in rather better demand at Tuesday's rates. Flour slow sale and unchanged. Indian Corn dull; mixed, 28s. to 28s. 6d. Beans, Oats, and Oatmeal steady.

News of the Week.

IT is officially announced that a convention was signed on the 15th inst. between the EMPEROR OF THE FRENCH and the KING OF ITALY, by which the Roman question has at length been solved. This convention, which is the most important political event that has occurred in Italy since the Peace of Villafranca, provides that King VICTOR EMMANUEL shall undertake to respect the present territory of the Church and to prevent by force any attack that may be made upon it; that the Pontifical army shall be raised to a sufficient strength to maintain the authority of the POPE both in the interior and on the frontiers of his States; that the French force shall be gradually withdrawn, so that the occupation may entirely cease within two years; that the KING OF ITALY shall undertake the liquidation of a share of the Roman debt proportioned to the extent of those States of the Church now annexed to his dominions; and finally, that the capital of Italy shall be removed from Turin to Florence. A Royal decree was issued at Turin on Wednesday convoking the Italian Parliament for the 5th of October, when the convention and its ultimate results will no doubt be the subjects of discussion. Meanwhile the people of Turin, irritated by the intended abandonment of their city as the capital in favour of Florence, have manifested their dissatisfaction by riotous demonstrations, and have attacked the military who interfered to prevent them from forcing their way into the ministerial residence. The military fired upon the mob, and several persons on both sides were killed and wounded. A large body of troops has since arrived at Turin; the National Guard has been called out, and it is hoped that the tranquillity of the city will not be further disturbed.

The QUEEN OF SPAIN last week, by the advice of Marshal O'DONNELL, entrusted Marshal NARVAEZ with the formation of a new Ministry. The Marshal has succeeded in forming an Administration, in which he fills the office of President of the Council without a portfolio. The new Cabinet has announced a conciliatory policy, and in proof of its sincerity has suspended the prosecutions against the press.

General M'CLELLAN has accepted his nomination to the Presidency by the Chicago Convention. He approves the pacific nature of the platform, but declares the re-establishment of the Union to be indispensable, and to be pursued at all hazards. The announcement of the capture of Atlanta is confirmed. General SHERMAN, finding that the city was not easily assailable from the north, made a sweep round it to Jonesborough, a station on the Macon Railway, where the Confederates held some works, from which they were dislodged after a sharp engagement, attended by considerable loss on both sides. The result of this battle enabled General SHERMAN to place his forces between Macon and Atlanta, and to cut off General HOOD from a part of his army, and from his only road of supply. General HOOD therefore blew up his magazines and evacuated the town, which the Federals occupied on the 2d inst. General SHERMAN, on the day after the battle of Jonesborough, advanced to Lovejoy's Station, where he found General HOOD in force and so strongly intrenched that he deemed it imprudent to attack him, and retired to Atlanta. Accounts from Mobile state that Admiral FARRAGUT has succeeded in blowing up the ram which the Confederates had sunk across the channel; and the papers publish a report received from deserters that Mobile has since surrendered. Gen. LEE, having been reinforced by part of General EARLY'S force from the Shenandoah Valley, was preparing to attack General GRANT'S left, and the next mail will probably bring accounts of a severe engagement between the two armies. President LINCOLN has ordered a day of thanksgiving and salutes from all the navy yards and arsenals, for the victories at Atlanta and Mobile, and has tendered his thanks to Admiral FARRAGUT and General SHERMAN. The draft in New York and Brooklyn will not take place. It is reported that General FREMONT has withdrawn his name as a candidate for the Presidency.

The New York papers publish accounts from Matamoras, announcing that the Mexican General CORTINAS has defeated the French at Victoria City with heavy loss, and subsequently marched to defend Matamoras, where another battle was expected.

The Prince afterwards returned through Eton to Slough, and proceeded thence to London by the Great Western Railway. On Wednesday morning his Royal Highness, accompanied by the Italian minister and suite, went to Woolwich, and witnessed a grand review and field-day, after which he visited the several departments of the Royal Arsenal. THE IRONCLAD FLEET.—The Admiralty have determined to do away with much of the rigging which crowds most of the ships of the ironclad squadron, and to give each a lighter rig; the fact of the Enterprise and the Defence beating all the other ships of the Channel fleet on a wind, when under full sail, having induced the Board to alter the other vessels of the squadron to the same description of rig.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—It is officially announced that a convention has been signed between the French and Italian Governments, by which Italy is about to transfer her capital to Florence; and that France has notified to the Pope that the French will evacuate Rome within two years, the King of Italy undertaking to respect the independence of the Papal territory as it now exists. The Constitutionnel of Thursday reprints the letter of the Emperor to M. Thouvenel, dated May 20, 1862; and in an article on the subject, signed by M. Limayrac, observes that the occupation of Rome has always been regarded as both exceptional and temporary. It then continues as follows :—

"The French Government, impressed by the happy change that has taken place in the Italian Peninsula within the last two years, the anarchical passions having there been either appeased or suppressed, was ready to seize the first opportunity of putting an end to a situation embarrassing and onerous to all. Moreover, so soon as the Italian Government, hitherto occupied in discussing the necessary organisation of a new State, and in determining upon the choice of a capital on strategic, administrative, and political grounds, had given notice of its resolution to transfer the capital, the Government of the Emperor thought that the moment had come to deliberate upon the conditions which would enable it to leave Rome with perfect safety. The following are the stipulations of the arrangement. Italy engages herself to respect the actual territory of the Pope, and to prevent by force any attack that may be made on it from abroad. France is to withdraw her troops in proportion to the organisation of the Pontifical army; the evacuation of Rome to be accomplished in two years. The Pontifical army to be of sufficient strength to maintain the Papal authority and tranquillity, both in the interior and on the frontiers of the Papal States; the Italian Government to raise no objection to either the elements or number of men composing that army, provided always that it does not degenerate into a means of attack against Italy. Finally, Italy undertakes the liquidation of a share of the Roman debt proportioned to the extent of those States of the Church now annexed to the Kingdom of Italy."

The France states that the Emperor is preparing to make some important changes in the constitution, and that the principal object he has in view at present is to obtain, through the medium of the Ministry, the sanction of the Chambers for every political measure that may be brought forward. The Moniteur of Saturday morning says that negociations are in progress, with the object of prolonging the armistice between Denmark and Germany until the 15th December. It is said that a Bill is to be brought forward next session for the abolition of octroi duties—a tax levied at the gates on every article of consumption which enters Paris. The Empress Eugenie received on Wednesday a visit from the Emperor of Russia at Schwalbach. His Majesty remained a few hours with the Empress, and was accompanied by Count Adlerberg, the Adjutant-General. It is stated that on leaving Schwalbach the Empress will visit the Queen of Prussia at Baden, to which place the Emperor and Empress of Russia will also go from Frederichshafen. The King of Prussia, it is asserted, will also visit Baden after the manœuvres of the Prussian army have taken place. It is added that the Emperor Napoleon will join the Empress at Baden, but the rumour that this would probably give rise to an interview between the French, Russian, and Prussian Sovereigns is considered to be unfounded. Prince Napoleon has left Paris for his estate of Prangins, in Switzerland. He will be absent about a fortnight or three weeks, and will return for the fêtes which are to be given next month at Compiègne in honour of Prince Humbert on his arrival from England. The Duke of Cambridge has passed through Paris to London, on his way back from Germany. His Royal Highness breakfasted on Friday morning with the Emperor. Marshal M'Mahon, Duke de Magenta, embarked on Saturday at Toulon, to take possession of his post as Governor-General of Algeria. Preparations are making at Toulon for the immediate embarkation of an entire division of from 10,000 to12,000 men who are to follow Marshal M'Mahon as reinforcements. An Imperial decree was issued on Sunday, creating a Professorship of Political Economy and Public Law in the Faculty of Law at Paris. Another decree abolishes the obligation for ships going long voyages to carry a surgeon when they shall have 30 men on board. They will only be obliged to carry a surgeon when the number of persons on board amounts to 100. The Chantilly races took place on Sunday. For the Imperial Haras Prize, Guillaume le Taciturne was first, Criterium second, and Clermont third. For the Chantilly Prize, Vermouth came in first.

SPAIN.—Marshal Narvaez has succeeded in forming a new Ministry, composed as follows:—President of the Council, without Portfolio, Marshal Narvaez; Minister for Foreign Affairs, Senor Lorente; Minister for War, Senor Cordova; Minister for Justice, Senor Lorenzo Arrazola; Minister for Marine, Senor Armera; Minister for the Interior, Senor Gonzalez Bravo; Minister for Finance, Senor M. Barzanollana; Minister for Public Works, Senor Galiano; Minister for Public Worship, Senor Seijas Lozano. The new Cabinet announces a conciliatory policy. The prosecutions against the journals are suspended; and the Minister of the Interior has addressed a circular to the Civil Governors, recommending them to treat impartially all political parties, and at the same time to exercise severity in the maintenance of law and order. It is believed that the Cortes will shortly be dissolved. It is said that the Dowager Queen Christina is to be allowed to return to Spain. Her Majesty purposes going first to Oviedo, where the younger branches of her family are residing.

SWITZERLAND.—The Federal Chambers were opened at Berne on Wednesday, and the National Council commenced the discussion of the Franco-Swiss Treaty of Commerce. The majority of the Committee propose the immediate ratification of the treaty, while the minority demand its postponement. The debate was continued on Thursday. A public petition has been addressed to the National Council, demanding a revision of the Federal Constitution, the provisions of which are opposed to the conclusion of a treaty of commerce with France, in order that such treaty may be concluded in a constitutional manner; the revision to be obtained by an appeal to the people of Switzerland. The Government of Berne has given its sanction, with certain reservations, to the statutes of the Credit Mobilier Européen. M. Duplan Veillon, the Federal magistrate in Geneva, has issued a warrant of arrest against M. James Fazy.

HOLLAND.—The Legislative Session was opened by the King on Monday. His Majesty, in his speech from the throne, said:—

"The country and the colonies are in a prosperous state. A number of public works are contemplated. Bills for the abolition of local excise duties will be laid before you, together with other important financial propositions. The redemption of the debt will be continued. A project for the reorganisation of the Customs' tariff in the Dutch colonies of East India will also be laid before the Chamber."

BADEN.—In consequence of a recent disturbance in the assembly-room at Baden-Baden, the Grand Ducal Commissary has addressed the following letter to the class of female visitors constituting the demi-monde, who have for the last two or three years collected at that place from all quarters of Europe:—

"Madam,—In consequence of a measure adopted by the Grand Ducal Minister of the Interior, and the execution of which I am charged to superintend, I find myself under the necessity of interdicting to you the conversation rooms and the public promenade. If I inform you of it by this letter, you will perceive in such a proceeding my desire to avoid a scene which would certainly be as unpleasant for you as for myself.—Accept, madam, &c., MULLER, Grand Ducal Commissary."

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.—The commander-in-chief of the allied army has issued a proclamation prohibiting the circulation of petitions and the collecting of signatures under penalty of the rigorous infliction of martial law. The proclamation, in conclusion, reminds the people that the state of war continues. The ten Schleswigers, whose sentence of death for desertion from the Danish army was subsequently commuted to imprisonment for life, arrived at Kiel on Saturday. The civil commissioners have announced in the Gazette that only those claims made on the Danish Treasury on account of the late war, or preparations for the war, will be taken into consideration at the peace negotiations.

PRUSSIA.—The new correspondence between Count von Bismark and Lord Russell which has been lately discussed in the French and German press, has just been published. The first despatch is addressed by Count von Bismark to the Prussian Minister in London. In this document the Count says that during his visit to Vienna Lord Bloomfield expressed to him the wish of the English Government that Prussia and Austria should not impose upon the Danish Crown conditions too hard and unbearable. The Count says that he answered that nothing was further from their intentions than an unjust severity, and that they could only make those demands which were the necessary result of the situation. To that purpose, he says, the Prussian Government has remained true. In complete understanding with the Imperial Austrian Government they have been obliged to insist upon the entire cession of the three Duchies as an indispensable demand, without which neither the national feeling would be satisfied, nor the sacrifices justified to which the obstinacy of the Danish Government had forced them; but they had demanded no portions of the kingdom of Denmark, although they held completely in their hand a large and important province, and without any possibility for the Danes to deprive them of it. He desired the Minister to express to Earl Russell the hope that the British Government would not refuse to recognise the moderation and placability which had been displayed by the two German Powers. To this document Earl Russell returned the following reply, addressed to Mr. W. Lowther:—

"Foreign Office, Aug. 20, 1864.

"Sir,—I have received from M. Katte a despatch of M. de Bismark to Count Bernstorff, together with an official copy of the preliminaries of peace signed on the 1st of August at Vienna. Her Majesty's Government would have preferred a total silence instead of the task of commenting on the conditions of the peace. Challenged, however, by M. de Bismark's invitation to admit the moderation and forbearance of the great German Governments, her Majesty's Government feel bound not to disguise their own sentiments upon these matters. Her Majesty's Government have indeed from time to time, as events took place, repeatedly declared their opinion that the aggression of Austria and Prussia upon Denmark was unjust, and that the war as waged by Germany against Denmark had not for its groundwork either that justice or that necessity which are the only bases on which war ought to be undertaken. Considering the war, therefore to have been wholly unnecessary on the part of Germany, they deeply lament that the advantages acquired by successful hostilities should have been used by Austria and Prussia to dismember the Danish Monarchy, which it was the object of the Treaty of 1852 to preserve entire. Her Majesty's Government are also bound to remark, when the satisfaction of national feelings is referred to, that it appears certain that a considerable number, perhaps 200,000 or 300,000 of the loyal Danish population, are transferred to a German State, and it is to be feared that the complaints hitherto made respecting the attempts to force the language of Denmark upon the German subjects of a Danish Sovereign will be succeeded by complaints of the attempts to force the language of Germany upon the Danish subjects of a German Sovereign. Her Majesty's Government had hoped that at least the districts to the north of Flensburg would, in pursuance of a suggestion made by the Prussian Plenipotentiary in the Conference of London, have been left under the Danish Crown. If it is said that force has decided this question, and that the superiority of the arms of Austria and Prussia over those of Denmark was incontestable, the assertion must be admitted. But in that case it is out of place to claim credit for equity and moderation. Her Majesty's Government see with satisfaction, however, that the wording of the 1st Article fully admits by implication the right of Christian IX. to rule over the Duchies of Holstein, Schleswig, and Lauenburg, for, if they were not his to hold, they could not be his to give away. In considering this question her Majesty's Government have always had in view the elements of a solid and durable peace. Even in cases where it is justifiable to depart from the settlement of established and recognised treaties, it is essential that the new settlement should not partake of the weakness of the old—that when new elements of dominion are combined and new bonds of allegiance are required, nations should be satisfied, and should willingly embrace as permanent the new conditions of peace. It is in this point of view that her Majesty's Government are anxious to see the destiny of the Duchies, which are now to be separated from Denmark, speedily and satisfactorily settled. They desire to see the wishes of the people of these Duchies consulted on the choice of their future Sovereign, and to see the Duchies receive free constitutional institutions. In this manner alone the welfare and peace of Europe as well as the future tranquillity of the Duchies, will be secured, for her Majesty's Government cannot feel at all secure of the prospects of a lasting peace until the wishes of the people of Holstein, Schleswig, and Lauenburg have been fairly and fully consulted. An arrangement which should set aside those wishes and suppress free institutions would only be a new source of disquiet and disturbance in Europe. You will read this despatch to M. de Bismark, and give him a copy of it.

"I am, &c., RUSSELL."

The semi-official Nord-Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung of Berlin, of Wednesday says:—

"The intention of extending the term of the armistice for a longer period has been abandoned, the protraction of the peace negotiations on the part of Denmark not having been without influence on that point. In fact, the political situation in Copenhagen has assumed a peculiar character. Not only do the Swedish papers evince in the most pointed manner Scandinavian tendencies, but even the Copenhagen journals openly avow sentiments favourable to the formation of a Scandinavian dynasty. Instead of recognising, they attack the stipulations of the peace preliminaries. It is therefore quite intelligible that the great German Powers should adhere strictly to paragraph 1 of the protocol of the armistice, whereby hostilities can be resumed at any time after a six weeks' notice."

AUSTRIA.—The Emperor of Austria left Vienna on Monday for Hungary and returned on Wednesday. There is a report that a conspiracy against his life has been detected. The Conference at Prague has been opened. La Nouvelle Presse Libre foretells that it will end in disappointment. The Presse of Monday asserts that the Danish Cabinet is willing to consent to the proposal that the claims of the Duchies on the public property of the kingdom should be satisfied with the payment by Denmark of a round sum, this arrangement to be preceded by one definitively settling the respective allotment of the assets and liabilities of the country. It also says:—

"Financial difficulties only delay the conclusion of peace. The negotiations on the prolongation of the armistice which has expired are near their end. The demand of Denmark that the troops of the allied armies in Jutland are not to be provisioned by Denmark, has been absolutely rejected by the German Powers."

The General Correspondence says that all the alarming rumours respecting a return to a personal union between Denmark and the Duchies, a speedy evacuation of Jutland, or a deviation from the frontier line formerly established between Schleswig and Jutland are devoid of all foundation.

RUSSIA.—The Times states that information has reached it in a very authentic shape that Russia fully expected the breaking out of war as the result of the correspondence with the English and French Governments last year on the subject of Poland, and was resolved that this time at least she would do something better with her fleet than suffer it to be cooped up behind the defences of Cronstadt, or sunk in the harbour of Sebastopol. She had come to the conclusion that she could strike a blow which, though it might not succeed in crippling the commercial superiority of England, would nevertheless inflict great discredit on her arms and serious damage on her commerce. For this purpose instructions had been issued to the Russian Admirals on the American and Californian coasts, directing them to leave their respective ports by different routes for a common place of rendezvous, to be ascertained in mid ocean by latitude and longitude. The fleet thus assembled was to hold itself in readiness, in the event of a war with England, to bear down on the Australian colonies. Melbourne was to be the first place attacked, then Hobart Town in Tasmania, then Adelaide, then Sydney, then New Zealand. The force to be assembled for the purpose was fully adequate to the service required of it. The ships that were to be detached from the New York station would have mustered 456 guns, and those from Japan and California would have carried altogether 43 guns; the number of seamen was 2971, and there were 127 officers. The vessels were principally armed with 9-pounders, but the Admirals had orders to obtain from New York whatever rifled guns they might require.

POLAND.—An imperial rescript was issued on Tuesday, accompanied by five decrees, containing a series of liberal measures relative to public instruction in Poland, the creation of an university at Warsaw, and the establishment of numerous superior, middle, and primary schools, and a free school for women. The Poles are to preserve the use of their national language. For the other nationalities of the kingdom special schools are established, in which their respective idioms will be used. A sixth decree modifies the penal code, by mitigating the penalties hitherto inflicted, and abolishes corporal punishment. The Lloyd of Vienna states that the greater number of Poles confined by the Austrian authorities at Olmutz have resolved to enter the service of the Emperor of Mexico, and that many of them have already enrolled themselves. About 100 were taken to Vienna, whence they were removed to the southward. They are all fine young men, with a good military appearance. The trial of the Poles of the Duchy of Posen is taking a turn more favourable to the accused. At their counsel's demand, which was not opposed by the Public Prosecutor, who finds the charge unsupported, 10 or 12 of them have been set at liberty on the sole condition of holding themselves in readiness to appear if their presence should be deemed necessary. Prince Radzivil and Prince Roman Czartoryski have also been released, the former unconditionally, the latter on giving bail to the amount of 10,000 thalers.

ITALY.—A Royal decree was issued on Wednesday convoking the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies for the 5th of next month. In explanation of this measure the Opinione says that on the 15th inst. a convention was agreed to by the French and Italian Governments concerning the cessation of the French occupation of Rome within two years. This convention was signed for France by M. Drouyn de Lhuys, and for Italy by the Chevalier Nigra, first plenipotentiary, and the Marquis Pepoli, plenipotentiary on an extraordinary mission. It also says that the ratifications were exchanged on Tuesday last, and that the King has convoked the Chambers for the purpose of informing the National Parliament of the stipulations of the convention without delay. It is provided by the convention that Florence shall become the capital of Italy. The Turin journals discuss this removal of the capital, and state that if such a measure be necessary to advance the solution of the Roman question, the Italian Government could not assume the responsibility of a refusal. On Tuesday evening a number of young men, of whom several were workmen, paraded the streets, shouting, "Down with the Ministry." The bystanders witnessed this demonstration with indifference, and the assemblage subsequently dispersed of its own accord. On Wednesday evening another popular demonstration took place before the Royal Palace. Shouts were raised of "Turin for the Capital!" A group of rioters endeavoured to break the line formed by the military and to force their way into the Ministerial residence. The military were then obliged to fire, killing and wounding several persons. 20 Carbineers were also wounded, five of them seriously. On Thursday the city was tranquil and had resumed its ordinary aspect. The official Gazette publishes an account of these events, stating that the collision before the Palace was the result of accident. The Carbineers were attacked by the crowd, and without orders made use of their arms in self defence. An investigation has been ordered into the conduct of some of the agents of the police. A large body of troops has arrived at Turin, and has been placed under the command of General Della Rocca. The National Guard has also been called out. A proclamation has been issued by the Syndic, recommending the people to return to a state of tranquillity.—An encyclical letter of the Pope, addressed to the Polish bishops, was distributed among the cardinals at Rome on Sunday. This letter draws a vivid picture of the persecution directed by the Russian Government against the Catholic Church. The Pope stigmatises the Russian Government as cruel, rebukes its excesses, and condemns it before heaven and earth. He censures also the confiscations and deportations carried out in Poland, and the treatment of the Archbishop of Warsaw, unjustly despoiled. His Holiness condemns, however, the Polish revolution, and reminds the Catholics of their duty to obey all civil authorities. The bishops, clergy, and all faithful Catholics in Russia are enjoined to persevere in the faith with courage and resignation, and are warned that they do not owe obedience to measures contrary to their conscience and to Divine laws. The Pope, in conclusion, threatens the persecutors with Divine justice, "which," he says, "will soon appear, for the time of mercy is short, and the powerful are powerfully chastised." The Perseveranza of Friday publishes a despatch from Rome, stating that the Cohen family has emigrated from that city in order to escape the persecution of the Government. Notwithstanding the steps taken by the French Ambassador, young Cohen had not been restored to his parents. Garibaldi's health is perfectly re-established.

Malta.—On the 6th inst. a soldier of the 22d Regiment, named John Burns, was tried before the Criminal Court for the murder of Sergeant Ludgate, of the same regiment, by shooting him through the neck. The prisoner's counsel endeavoured to prove that the death was the result of accident, but the jury after, after 10 minutes' deliberation, unanimously found him guilty, but recommended him to mercy on account of his youth, as he was but 22 years of age. The judge however, passed sentence of death, and the prisoner was executed on the 16th.

Greece.—In the sitting of the National Assembly on Monday the abolition of the Senate was decided upon by a large majority. In future, therefore, one Chamber only will exist. Public opinion is in favour of this step.

Turkey.—The Prince de Joinville has arrived in Constantinople. The Porte has signed the treaty with England relative to the Turco-Indian line of telegraph.

Egypt.—Letters from Alexandria to the 10th inst. state that the Egyptian Government has concluded a loan of 125,000,000 francs with the firm of Oppenheim, redeemable in 15 years.

India.—The Bombay mail of the 23d August states that tranquillity prevails throughout the whole of British India. The Viceroy and Governor-General will leave Simla towards the end of September, as his Excellency is to be in Lahore on the 1st October, when Sir R. Montgomery will resign the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjaub, and Sir Herbert Edwardes be installed as his successor. From Affghanistan it is reported that in spite of the recent reconciliation the Ameer has made prisoners of Ufzul Khan and his brothers, and sent them to Cabool. The Shah of Persia is said to have sent an ambassador to the Ameer, demanding the release of the son of the late Sooltan Jan and the restoration of Herat, and all the Persian guns taken at that place. If the Ameer agrees to these terms he is to receive 18,000 gold mohurs a year from Persia; and if he rejects them the Persian army will advance to Herat. It is said that arrangements have been made with the Ameer of Cabool, by which he engaged to coerce and keep in order for the future the hill tribes on our extreme north-western frontier. The rebel Jhoorie Singh was hanged at Mirzapore on the 3d August. The Persian Gulf telegraph is still interrupted.

China.—A telegram from Shanghai of August 6 states that the Imperialists have captured Nankin.

United States.—General M'Clellan has accepted the nomination of the Chicago Convention. He declares for the Union at all hazards, and says a spirit of conciliation and compromise must be exercised, but union is the one condition of peace. Any State willing to return to the Union should be received at once with all constitutional rights. A large enthusiastic meeting for the ratification of M'Clellan's nomination to the Presidency has been held in New York. General Grant has written a letter asserting that the Confederates have in their ranks their last man, and that if the North continues undivided the end of the war is not far distant. Despatches from General Sherman, 26 miles south of Atlanta, report that on the 30th ult. he left the vicinity of Atlanta with the main portion of his army, made a detour to the south-west, crossed the West Point Railway, and after repulsing an attack upon his right by the Confederates, who were in force at Jonesborough, occupied the Macon Railway, and interposed his army between that place and Atlanta. On the 1st inst. he attacked Jonesborough and carried the Confederate works, capturing 3000 prisoners and 27 cannon. He admits his loss in the action at 1500, and estimates that of the Confederates at 2000. He says that he burned 400 of the Confederate dead, and left on the field 400 Confederate wounded, whom he could not remove. The Jonesborough garrison retired to Lovejoy Station, 30 miles south of Atlanta. In consequence of these operations, General Hood blew up his works at Atlanta, removed or destroyed all matériel excepting 14 cannon, and during the night retired from the city, but in what direction does not appear. On the following morning General Slocum, who, with the 20th Corps, had been left to hold Sherman's communications, occupied Atlanta. On the 7th inst. General Sherman pursued General Hood's army to his headquarters at the rear of Lovejoy's Station, but finding the Confederates in force and strongly entrenched he withdrew, having accomplished the great object of the campaign, the capture of Atlanta; around which his army is now encamped. The Southern press attach little importance to the loss of Atlanta. General Lee has been reinforced from Early's corps. According to both Federal and Confederate accounts, Grant and Lee are concentrating their forces about Petersburg, and it is believed that a great battle for the possession of the Weldon Railway is imminent. Skirmishing continues in the Shenandoah Valley, but the positions of the main forces of the hostile armies appear to be unchanged. General Early at the latest dates had taken a strong position west of the Opequan, covering Winchester. Admiral Farragut has blown up the ram Nashville, which was sunk across the channel of the river bar at Mobile; and, according to news received from deserters, his fleet passed Dog River bar, and after a brief shelling Mobile surrendered, the Confederates withdrawing to the interior. General Rosseau announces that Generals Wheeler and Roddy have retired from Nashville and Chattanooga Railway. Richmond journals of the 1st report that General Wheeler has burnt the railway bridge over the Tennessee river at London, and captured 900 prisoners at Marysville and Newmarket. Both the Federal and Confederate accounts report that General John Morgan was surprised at Greenville, Tennessee, on the 4th, himself killed, and 75 of his command captured by Federals under General Silvers. Mr. Stanton states that on the 5th General Grant celebrated the occupation of Atlanta by shelling Petersburg. Mr. Lincoln, on the 3d, issued a proclamation tendering the thanks of the nation to Admiral Farragut, Generals Canby, Granger, and Sherman, and the forces under their command, for their achievements at Mobile and Atlanta, and ordering salutes to be fired from every arsenal and navy yard in Federal possession in celebration of their victories. He also recommended that a general thanksgiving be offered in all the churches on the following Sunday. The draught which was ordered for the 5th has been postponed, and further time given for the filling of quotas by volunteering. The credits allowed for naval and other recruits not previously accredited have reduced the quota of New York city to 1114 men, who it is believed can be speedily supplied without recourse to a draught. Secretary Seward made a speech at Auburn, New York, on the 3d, in which he declared that the salvation of the Union depends upon the election of Mr. Lincoln; that slavery is no longer an issue of the war, and will not be interfered with after peace is restored; and that the Democratic party is aiding and abetting the rebellion. He also stated that no draught will be necessary, as the armies are recruiting as rapidly as required by volunteering. It is announced that the Administration will shortly permit free trade in cotton, provided it is paid for in greenbacks, and shipped to or through New York.

Mexico.—Advices from Rio Grande state that the Mexican General Cortinas met the French forces 10 leagues north of Victoria, and after an obstinate battle of five hours, routed them with heavy loss. It is added that the affair was most brilliant, and caused great rejoicing among the Mexican people. It is said that General Alvarez has also defeated the French and Algerine troops in four pitched battles at Brea, in the State of Guerrero. The terms of the battle were no quarter, and the prisoners taken by the Mexicans were put to death. Fresh conflicts are expected in the State of Tamaulipos. Matamoras advices state that a French force of marines have taken possession of Bogond at the mouth of the Rio Grande, and it is reported that a force of 1500 had landed further up the river, where it is stated that Cortinas would attack them. Colonel Riva Palacio has made an official report claiming to have won, on the 5th of July, at Zitacuaro, a victory over 2000 Imperialists, putting them to flight. Don R. G. Paez, private secretary of Juarez, has given in his adhesion to French rule.

Canada.—It is reported that the Canadian Conference has decided that the union of the British North American provinces would be satisfactory provided that the terms of alliance could be arranged.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

Arrival and Examination of Muller.—On the arrival of the Etna in the Mersey on Friday night she was met by the steam-tug Fury, from Birkenhead, having on board one of the Liverpool detectives. At half-past 10 o'clock Müller was landed at the south end of the Princess Pier, and was at once conveyed in a cab to the Detective Office.

Police officers were seated in the vehicle with him, and others followed in other cabs. The excitement in the town from the time the Etna came in sight was very great, and it increased as he was landed and conveyed to the police-office. He was kept at Liverpool till the departure of Saturday morning train, when he was brought to London. There were great crowds for many hours awaiting the arrival of the train at the Camden ticket platform as well as at Euston Square and Bow Street, the mob at the latter place being so numerous and violent that they nearly upset the prison van in which the prisoner was removed from Euston Square to Bow Street. Great disappointment was expressed by the roughs when they caught sight of the prisoner as he left the van, his mean and worn appearance not at all coming up to their expectations of the person who could have planned and executed the murder of a tall, powerfully made man like Mr. Briggs. The hour was too far advanced to allow the magistrate to open the case on Saturday afternoon, and the case was accordingly adjourned till Monday, when Müller was placed at the bar charged with the wilful murder of Mr. Thomas Briggs on the night of the 9th July. Every requisite precaution had been taken to prevent confusion in front of the court. People had commenced gathering about the doors of the station as early as 4 o'clock in the morning, and by 7 there could not have been fewer than 500 persons waiting to see the prisoner removed from the cells to the court. At half-past 7 Superintendent Durkin cleared the space between the police-station and the court opposite, and Müller was taken across to the cells attached to the latter. There was some shouting as he passed, but the prisoner took no notice of it, and when he was out of sight the mob dispersed, satisfied of the impossibility of getting admission to hear the examination. Consequently at 10 o'clock, when the doors of the court were open, the street was comparatively clear, a strong body of police being stationed at each end of the street to prevent a crowd in front of the building. Mr. Flowers was the presiding magistrate for the day, his brother magistrate, Mr. Vaughan, having arranged to take the ordinary charges in the Board-room of the Strand Union, which adjoins the court. The limited space devoted to the public was occupied almost exclusively by the representatives of the English and foreign press, the artists of the illustrated papers, and a few literary men. Prince Humbert, with his aide-de-camp and the Italian Minister, were among the gentlemen accommodated with seats upon the bench. Shortly after 11 Mr. Giffard, the counsel for the Crown, who was accompanied by Mr. Pollard, the Solicitor to the Treasury, intimated his readiness to proceed with the case. The chief clerk then directed the gaoler to place his prisoner at the bar. Müller walked in, preserving the same gait and unmoved expression of the face which he is said to have generally maintained since his apprehension. He scarcely looked up once during the whole proceedings, but when he was offered a seat in the dock his face became slightly flushed for a moment only. Indeed, any act or word of kindness appears to affect him keenly, while he heard the most damaging statements as to his having trafficked with the property of the murdered man apparently with perfect indifference. The charge on the sheet having been read over to the prisoner, Mr. Beard, the solicitor instructed by the German Society to defend the prisoner, requested that all the witnesses for the prosecution should be kept out of court, excepting the one under examination. He did not wish to include Inspector Tanner in the general order. The magistrate at once agreed to this request. Inspector Tanner stated that the witnesses were already out of court; he had given a direction to that effect. Mr. Giffard then said that he was instructed on behalf of the Crown to prefer the charge just read against the prisoner at the bar. It would be mere affectation to pretend that the circumstances were not sufficiently well known to the Court already. It was enough to state that on the 9th of July last the late Mr. Thomas Briggs was deprived of his life by an act of violence in a railway carriage. He was at the time in possession of certain property, and the prisoner was found dealing with a portion of that property within 40 hours after the outrage was committed. A man's hat was left in the carriage which Mr. Briggs had occupied, and this hat is said to have belonged to the prisoner; while the hat worn by Mr. Briggs, it is believed, on the night of the murder, was found in the possession of the prisoner when he was taken into custody. It would be for the prisoner to explain these circumstances, and doubtless his worship would feel it his duty, at a later period of the investigation, to submit the question of his guilt or innocence to another tribunal. He proposed, for the present, to examine some of the witnesses in attendance, and then to ask for a remand to a future day. Mr. David Buchan, 23, Nelson Square, Peckham, woollen warehouseman, the husband of a niece of Mr. Briggs, who dined with them on the day of the murder; William Timbs, the guard of the North London Railway, who found the body; Mr. T. J. Briggs, the son of the deceased; Mr. Death, the jeweller; Jonathan Matthews, the cabdriver; the prisoner's landlady, two of his countrymen and acquaintances, and Sergeant Clarke, of the detective force, who was sent to New York to apprehend him, were then examined. Their evidence identified the property of Mr. Briggs as having been in the possession of the prisoner, but added little to the facts already familiar to our readers. Sergeant Clarke, who deposed to finding Mr. Briggs's watch and hat in the prisoner's possession when he was arrested, stated that when asked if he had possessed the articles long, he replied that he had had the watch about two years, and the hat about 12 months. Mr. Giffard then asked for a remand, to complete the evidence, when the magistrate ordered the case to be remanded till that day week. There was some delay in getting the prisoner out of the dock, owing to the passage having become blocked up; but he stood quite calm and collected. After his removal to the cell the chief clerk asked him if he wanted anything, when he said that if he had to speak he should prefer doing so in the English language, as he could express himself more clearly than he could in his own native tongue. He asked the officer in attendance upon him why he had not been taken to Stepney, instead of Bow Street. The constable told him that all Government prosecutions were conducted at Bow Street. He replied, "Well, it is of no consequence. I shall get justice wherever it is." About an hour after the close of the examination Müller was once more conducted to the prisoner's van. The street had been kept clear for a short time, the ordinary traffic being sent round by the Market. On stepping into the van he was again hooted by the crowd at the bottom of the street, but he had evidently become too much accustomed to the noise to be disconcerted by it. He was then driven to the House of Detention. The adjourned inquest was resumed on Monday at Hackney, and again adjourned to Tuesday, when several of the witnesses who had given evidence at the police court on the previous day were examined at great length, but nothing was elicited which was not already known to the public. At the close of their examination the inquiry was further adjourned till Monday next, when it is expected that Müller will be brought before the Jury.

THE SELF-ACCUSED ACCOMPLICE OF MÜLLER.—George Augustus King, the man who accused himself of being an accomplice of Müller, was brought up on Saturday at the Worship Street Court, when Mr. Lee, who saw two men in the carriage with Mr. Briggs swore positively that the prisoner was not one of them. Some other evidence having been given, the magistrate discharged the prisoner, telling him that he had only himself to blame for what he had suffered.

THE FATAL ACCIDENT TO CAPTAIN SPEKE.—The report which we mentioned briefly last week that Captain Speke, the explorer of the Nile, had been accidentally shot dead whilst shooting at Corsham, has unfortunately proved to be true. It appears that on Thursday, the 17th inst., he left Bath early in the morning, and when about four miles in the country, while getting over a low wall, his gun by some mischance exploded while the muzzle of it was pointed at his chest. The charge entering his body passed completely through, severing the main arteries of the chest, lacerating the lungs, and passing close to the heart. Mr. Fuller, his cousin, who was shooting with him, hearing the gun fired, turned round in time to see him fall from the wall into the field, and the keeper, who was marking birds at a short distance, seeing his master run towards the deceased, also went up and found him mortally wounded. He was only sensible for a few minutes. On Mr. Fuller coming up he moved his hand to his chest and said feebly, "Don't move me," Shortly afterwards he breathed his last. A surgeon was on the spot very soon after the accident, but he was dead before his arrival. Captain Speke was 38 years of age and unmarried. At the inquest the jury unanimously returned a verdict that "Deceased died from the accidental discharge of his own gun, after living a quarter of an hour." They also appended an expression of sympathy for the family of deceased in their bereavement, which was a loss both to his family and to the whole country. At the meeting of the British Association of Section E, on Friday, where it was understood that a discussion would take place between Captain Burton and Captain Speke on the sources of the Nile, there was a great rush to the Geographical Section at an early hour. The shocking death of Captain Speke, however, cast a gloom over the whole assembly, and the President, Sir Roderick Murchison, on taking the chair, moved the following resolution:—

"That the geographers and ethnologists of the British Association having heard with profound regret of the fatal accident which has befallen Captain Speke, and by which they have suddenly lost so eminent an associate, resolve that their most heartfelt condolence be offered to his relatives on his being cut off in so awful a manner in the fulness of his strength and vigour."

The resolution was unanimously passed, every person in the room holding up his hand.

GREAT FIRE IN THE CITY.—On Monday morning, between three and four o'clock, a fire broke out in Gresham Street, which in point of extent and destruction of property, has not been equalled since the burning of Cotton's Wharf. It was first discovered by a police-constable, who noticed a strong glare of light and volumes of smoke issuing from the premises of Messrs. Tapling, carpe manufacturers, in Gresham Street West. The building, which is about 170 feet long and 100 feet high, is situated nearly opposite the Goldsmiths' Hall, the upper floors being occupied as warehouses by Messrs. Hellaby. It is in a large block of houses formed by Gresham Street, Wood Street, and Staining Lane, and contains some of the most costly-stocked premises in the city. On ascertaining that a serious conflagration was raging inside the building, the constable raised an alarm, and in a few minutes a number of engines were hastening to the spot, which had then become the scene of the wildest confusion and dismay. The fire soon gained great head, and the flames roared through 40 windows, threatening all the adjoining property. In consequence of the great danger to Haberdashers' Hall, measures were promptly adopted by the firemen and others for removing the paintings and other valuable articles kept therein. This work was not commenced a moment too soon, for the flames rapidly extended to the Hall, which has just been repaired at a cost of 10,000*l*. They also seized on the premises of Messrs. Edmonds, button-makers, and Mr. Jones, warehouseman, at the corner of Wood Street, and had full possession of a district to considerable extent, from which they rose high in the air. Haberdashers' Hall was built by Sir Christopher Wren on a portion of the site of the original building which was destroyed by the Great Fire of London. It was a heavy building of brick, having no particular pretensions to exterior ornament, but richly fashioned and decorated in the interior. A short time since, when the premises of Messrs. Tapling & Co. were erected, a handsome gateway and passage leading to the court-room and back buildings was erected in Gresham Street, to harmonise with the new structure, and a handsome pair of iron gates were fixed in the new doorway, the old walls being repaired, but not rebuilt. Of these the greater part are destroyed. In the banquetting-hall there were several valuable paintings by early masters, most of which have been saved, but part of the carved work of Grinling Gibbons, with the roof and painted ceiling of the hall, have been entirely destroyed. The Hall and offices are understood to be insured for 10,000*l*., but that sum will, it is said, by no means cover the damage. All the business premises were fully insured, and the books of the different firms were saved. The fire continued burning all Monday, and was not entirely got under until the evening. The origin of the fire is not known.

DESTRUCTION OF THE SURREY RICE MILLS.—On Thursday night at 10 o'clock, a fire of considerable magnitude took place at the rice mills in the Grand Surrey Canal and Docks, Rotherhithe, which resulted in the complete destruction of the property, involving a loss of upwards, it is reported, of 30,000*l*. The mills which were the property of Messrs. Chapman, Hazell, and Gray, were the largest of the kind in the metropolis. The mills were largely insured. The fire is supposed to have been caused by friction of the machinery or spontaneous combustion. This is the second time the mills have been burned down—the former event occurring about 50 years ago.

NEW AUSTINFRIARS.—On Tuesday the foundation-stone of a new Roman Catholic church, in connection with the Mission of St. Augustine, was laid in Hoxton Square, Shoreditch, in the presence of Monsignor Manning, the Roman Catholic Provost of Westminster. After the ceremony Dr. Manning addressed the assembly. He said the act of that day would leave its mark upon the Catholic history of London, for where the Church of God laid its hand it had a tenacity of hold, and never let go the inheritance which God had given it. The Catholic Church, he continued, had inscribed its name on the corners of the streets of London, and the ancient sanctuaries of Blackfriars, and Greyfriars, and Whitefriars, and Austinfriars were known to this day. But the deluge came, and by the inscrutable permission of God swept away those sanctuaries of His saints. The Church of God was refounding those sanctuaries once more, and that day Austinfriars was created afresh in another part of London, and once again had St. Augustine entered among English Catholics to perform his mission. The mission had peculiar fitness, for between St. Augustine and England there was a singular analogy. It was hardly fitting that he should speak before the fathers of the great order of the father whose name they bore; but it seemed as though St. Augustine sent a great message to the English people when he said that intellect without faith led to the depths of a great abyss, for intellect without the faith of God led men to the depths of immorality. King Solomon was an instance of this, for through God he had knowledge of all sciences, and spake of all things, great and small. He was acquainted with all those sciences of the natural world of which men in these days showed themselves so proud; and yet his end was a great and terrible fall. St. Augustine was born of Christian parents, but was not baptised and sanctified to the faith of God in his early years. He grew up with a cultivated intellect, and became a teacher of rhetoric and philosophy, and was head and shoulders in intellect above the men of his age; but for the lack of holy baptism he plunged into immorality, and stained his holy soul, and until the age of 30 lived a life of shame. Here was an example for England. No country in the world was more intellectual than England, and no country in the world was so proud of its reason, so confident and so unbelieving. In England reason was the test of all things, and yet in no country was there so much spiritual blindness. Men thought that by the power of reason they could attain to a knowledge of God. Intellectual education was esteemed by parents as something they should give their children to insure their future prosperity, and many Catholic parents intrusted their children to schools not under Catholic teachers, because intellectual cultivation was thought of greater moment than the spiritual welfare of the children. Now, St. Augustine brought these parents and this people the message that intellect by itself would lead men into moral aberrations. St. Augustine said that if men would understand the knowledge of God they must seek it by believing. There were men in his day who set up to be teachers of the people, and they taught that the things to be believed must first be understood; but St. Augustine taught that understanding would come by belief only. Another lesson for England was to be found in what St. Augustine told a sect in Africa who persecuted in a fearful manner the followers of the true Church, whom they greatly outnumbered. St. Augustine used one great weapon against those who lifted themselves so high against the Church of God. He said:—"You are the Church of this part of Africa; but you have no communion with the Church which is united with the Gauls, with the Spaniards, and which is the Church of those who worship God in the far East and in the far West. You speak this one tongue, but the Church of God speaks all the tongues under the sun, and has preached the Gospel from the day of Pentecost to this hour." The application to be made of this was that in this country there was a Church which was not in communion with any other Church in the world. It sprung up three centuries since, and its followers greatly outnumbered the Catholics in this country. But the Church was isolated. What part had it with the Holy Catholic Church, which all people recognised as the only Church which our Divine Master founded upon earth? Were its clergy recognised as priests by the faithful in any part of the world, and what part or lot had it? Let its ministers pass over the water half an hour's distance to another shore, and what followed? Were they received in Communion in France or Spain? No; and this had been taught by St. Augustine when he said that there was but one channel from God, and that was the Holy Catholic Church, in which was held in one community all nations under the sun. Dr. Manning then went on to say that much had lately been said about the conversion of England, and of that time when the hands now lifted up in religious warfare would be joined before the altar. That was a blessed vision, he said, but he feared it was far off, and he described it as the mission of the Catholic Church to labour and to wait. The conversion, he said, would not be done by controversy, but might take place through the grace of God, and light would then be restored to England. Among the listeners to this discourse was the Rev. Dr. Campbell, the well-known Dissenting minister.

The New Chapel of King's College.—This new chapel, intended for the worship of the professors, students, and staff of the college, has just been completed, from designs by Mr. Gilbert Scott, the architect. It has been consecrated by the Bishop of London, and will be opened for divine worship on the first Sunday in October. There are seats to accommodate 600 persons. Some portion of the carved work and decorations yet remain to be done. The building, which is at the back of the great entrance-hall at Somerset House, has been entirely constructed by the voluntary contributions of the patrons and professors of the college, the collegians, and their friends.

Charge of Imprisoning a Wife.—At the Lambeth Police Court on Tuesday, Mr. Edward Hammond, a gentleman residing at Laurel House, Peckham, and Elizabeth Allen his servant, were brought up for the third time on remand on the charge of locking up and keeping in close confinement his wife, Rosalind Hammond, without just cause; and Emily Wakeman, a young woman who had formerly lived in the service of Mr. Hammond, but who, it was alleged, had been for the last two years his mistress, was charged jointly with them with assaulting Mrs. Hammond and conspiring together to imprison that lady, to the great injury of her health. Mrs. Hammond, a dejected but intellectual-looking woman, and who gave her evidence with perfect clearness and composure, deposed that when she married her husband she had an income of 600*l.* a year. He was then a widower, and had four children, the eldest of whom was a boy of about 10, the next 14, a girl, and there were two other girls, about 6 and 7. In 1862, after her confinement with her second child, she discovered that an improper intercourse was going on between her husband and Emily Wakeman. When she remonstrated with her husband, he laid the blame upon the two women. She then wrote a letter to the girl's father, apprising him that his daughter had been seduced by Mr. Hammond, but when this became known the housemaid compelled her by intimidation to write another letter to the girl's mother, declaring that the statements she had previously made were entirely false. Her husband afterwards severely beat her with his closed fists, and the women afterwards struck her on various occasions. She was then locked up in a room on the allegation of unsound mind. After remaining in this state for two years, she contrived to attract the attention of a neighbour, to whom she passed pieces of paper-hanging torn from the walls, describing her condition. Immiediate measures were taken for her release and a medcal man who examined her after she, recovered her liberty, deposed that there were no grounds whatever for asserting that she was of unsound mind. In cross-examination she admitted that she had herself had a child before marriage by a physician, the proprietor of a hydropathic establishment at which she was a patient, and that she took that child to the house of her husband, who knew all about it before he married her. Other witnesses deposed that Mr. Hammond and Emily Wakeman were constantly out together in a carriage, and that she had been seen wearing Mrs. Hammond's dresses. Mr. Norton said that the case was one for further inquiry. He should have preferred, himself, that some other course should have been taken, but when he heard from inquiries he personally directed to be made, that this unfortunate lady was confined in this way, he determined not to lose an hour in bringing the case to light. The case has now been investigated, and the result was such as to leave him no other course than to send the case to the sessions. In the case of assault there would be separate indictments, so that the one prisoner might be able to give evidence for the other. The prisoners were then committed both for conspiracy and assault, but liberated on heavy bail.

The Late Sir George Cornewall Lewis.—A memorial bust of the late Sir G. Lewis, modelled by Mr. Weeks, the sculptor, under the direction of Mr. Lowe, M.P., has just been placed in Westminster Abbey by a few of Sir George's private friends. It is a fine work of art, and the entire cost, exclusive of the fees to the dean of Westminster, which are stated to be very considerable, is 215 guineas. It has been erected in the western porch of the abbey, near the monuments of Sir William Follett, John Kemble, and Sir Eyre Coote. At the bottom of the bust is a square piece of polished marble, on which the following inscription is engraved:—

"In memory of the Right Hon. Sir George Cornewall Lewis, Bart., of Harpton Court, in the county of Radnor, successively Chancellor of the Exchequer and Secretary of State for the Home and War Departments. In him eminence as a scholar and as an author, large stores of varied knowledge, employed in the advantage and instruction of mankind, and an earnest devotion to literature, unsullied by intolerance or envy, were combined with a gentle and beneficent character, steadfast pursuit of the public good, and the comprehensive wisdom of a statesman. This bust is erected by many friends to mark their affectionate esteem and admiration, and to record his honoured name among the lasting dead who lie buried beneath these walls. Born April 21, 1806; died April 13, 1863."

Adulteration of Beer, Pepper, and Snuff.—The report of Mr. Phillips, the principal of the laboratory of the Inland Revenue Department, for the present year, has just been published. It states that during the last financial year 26 samples of beer and of materials found in the possession of licensed brewers have been analysed, and of these 20 were found to be illicit; the prohibited ingredients being, in 14 samples, grains of Paradise, one of these samples containing, in addition, tobacco; in two others Cocculus indicus was present in large and dangerous quantities; two samples contained capsicum; and the remaining two proto-sulphate of iron. Generally the prohibited materials employed in the adulteration of beer are not injurious to health, the object of the fraudulent brewers or retailers of beer being more to increase the bulk of their goods than to render the beer stupefying by the addition of noxious materials. Still, he says, there can be little doubt that the practice of adulterating beer with poisonous matters, such as tobacco and Cocculus indicus, is more prevalent than might be inferred from the small number of detections made, as the fraud is difficult to discover unless the offender be caught in the act of committing it. Considering therefore this circumstance, and the abominable character of the offence, Mr. Phillips is of opinion that it would be only just to the community to make public the names of those persons convicted of adding Cocculus indicus or other deleterious substances to beer brewed for sale; and he feels no hesitation in stating that the two instances of the use of the dangerous drug in question occurred in the neighbourhood of Wirksworth, in Derbyshire, and that many of the detections of the use of grains of Paradise were also made in the same district. He states also that the experience of many years has led him to the conclusion that the adulteration of beer with drugs, as distinguished from the mere dilution or increasing of the bulk of the article, is more prevalent in the Midland Counties and the West Riding of Yorkshire than in any other parts of the kingdom. With regard to pepper, Mr. Phillips says that there is reason to believe that it is still adulterated extensively either by the grinders or the wholesale dealers. Within the past year he analysed 30 samples, of which he reports to the Board that only 12 were genuine and 18 adulterated, the adulterants being the starch and husks of rice, wheat starch, linseed meal, and in one instance ground pine wood. A country seizure of adulterated pepper led to the examination of the stocks of pepper in possession of two firms in London largely engaged in the trade, and the result was that it was felt right to seize about a ton and a half of ground pepper heavily adulterated with rice husks, the whole of which was destroyed. In both instances it appeared that the dealers were innocent of the fraud, and that the grinder alone was the offender; but still they cannot be exculpated from blame, for, while they insist upon the return of an unreasonable percentage of ground produce from the public grinders, they must expect that the loss of weight which unavoidably occurs in grinding will be made up by illicit materials. The adulteration varied in these two cases from 10 to 15 per cent. In respect to snuff Mr. Phillips states that while few articles of consumption are now sold in so genuine a state as tobacco, and the use of prohibited materials in the manufacture of snuff is seldom attempted, there is a form of adulteration of the latter article far more injurious than the comparatively mild sophistications sometimes discovered. The law permits the use of lime water in the manufacture of high-dried snuffs, such as Irish and Welsh, but it does not state what proportion of lime shall be present in the water, although there can be little doubt that a perfectly clear solution of lime in water was meant. Many manufacturers, however, assert that such a solution is useless, and persist in the use of what may be termed "lime-wash," or a thick mixture of undissolved lime and water. Several unsuccessful attempts have been made within the last two years to suppress the practice, which is still growing, of using such a mixture; and probably until the use of lime in the manufacture of snuff is absolutely prohibited the fraud can never be crushed. It has been generally understood that lime was essential in the preparation of high-dried snuff; but a fine specimen of such snuff, made by an eminent firm in Ireland, has recently been analysed, the result being that no more lime was present than what may be found in normal American tobacco; and it is believed that the same firm strenuously opposed the legalising the use of lime-water, and still maintain that lime, even in small quantity, deteriorates the quality of snuff. The vicious form of adulteration referred to is almost entirely confined to the north of Ireland, where it appears the habit is very prevalent among the women employed in the linen and other factories of taking snuff highly charged with lime, and which is known as "white snuff;" and the manufacturers allege, in extenuation of their dishonest practices, that no other description of snuff is acceptable to their customers, apparently forgetting that they themselves have, by their long-continued illicit practices, engendered the habit which they now seek to bring forward as a plea for their fraudulent transactions. There have lately been submitted to Mr. Phillips several samples of snuff obtained from manufacturers in Belfast, in which it was impossible to say from a mere inspection whether lime or tobacco predominated; and he has received information from respectable members in the trade that some manufacturers do not even care to use a mixture of lime and water, but actually grind up dry lime with the tobacco in the process of manufacture. The evil in question appears to demand, both upon social and fiscal considerations, an immediate remedy. It can never be suppressed under the existing law, and the only effectual course to be adopted is the entire prohibition of the use of lime in the manufacture of snuff. Mr. Phillips has reason to believe that the obnoxious practice is distasteful to many manufacturers, who, however, feel compelled in self defence to adopt it, and that its continuance is mainly due to the unscrupulous operations of one or two members of the trade.

The late Case of Cruelty to a Child.—At the weekly meeting of the Greenwich Board of Guardians on Friday the case of a girl, aged 11 years, who was found a few days since in Greenwich Market with an iron chain fastened round her neck with a padlock, and in a state of absolute starvation, was brought under investigation. The girl stated that she left her home about a fortnight since, because her father, who resided in Moore Street, Deptford, and was employed on the railway, constantly ill-treated her. He fastened a chain round her neck and attached a log of wood to the other end of the chain, and often compelled her to sleep behind the door without clothing. He had also stripped her and beaten her with a rod until her back was torn. The father, who was in attendance, stated that he was employed at the New Cross station. He admitted that he placed the chain on the girl's neck, and that he compelled her to sleep with it so attached. The chain had been on her neck about 10 days when the girl was found, and he punished her in this way to "shame" her and keep her from begging. After some discussion, it was unanimously resolved to take proceedings against the father at the Greenwich Police Court.

The Jeffreys Family.—The police authorities have made public a statement respecting the relatives of the late Lucretia Jeffreys, the young woman who died from overwork and want of necessaries, at Mile End, a short time since. It appears that the police have received a number of letters and documents with reference to the different members of the family, which conclusively prove they are not deserving objects of public sympathy. These documents show that the father was a journeyman paper-stainer, at Maidstone, where he used to hang about the courts as a sort of amateur attorney, to get up defences for criminals, with the assistance of a disreputable solicitor, long ago dead. Then he worked in a brick-field, very poor and ill-dressed. For some time afterwards he haunted dirty lodging-houses in Maidstone without visible means of livelihood. Two years and a half ago he migrated to Mile End Road, and about six months afterwards his sons, his daughters, a girl living with them, and another woman, were apprehended on a charge of burglary in a silversmith's shop at Lewes, some of the stolen property being found in their house. They were tried and sentenced, two to ten years' penal servitude, and two to twelve months' imprisonment with hard labour. The father never committed himself so far as to perpetrate an indictable offence, though he has been arrested on civil process; but the police assert that from his roof in London his sons and daughters and their confederates sallied forth to commit the burglaries and robberies which so recently kept a large district of Kent, familiarly known to them, in terror. These atrocities have considerably diminished since the autumn of 1862, when the girls came out of gaol after undergoing their punishment, and from that time the household sank rapidly towards complete destitution. The daughters were unable, without male accomplices, to carry on the practice of housebreaking; their father was unable or unwilling to obtain work; and thus was caused the catastrophe which recently caused so much painful excitement. There is no doubt of the fact that the daughter really died of destitution, and that the whole family has been in a dreadfully destitute condition for a very long period, but it has been mainly brought about by their own misconduct. Inspector Hill of Maidstone, goes so far as to intimate that the father himself had speculated on the catastrophe as a means of raising money, for he says: "Jeffreys was always an artful dodger; but I think this affair of the inquest is his masterpiece." It is unnecessary to add that the magistrates, after hearing these facts, at once declined to receive any more contributions for the family, and that the public subscription for their relief has also been stopped.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths registered in London in the week that ended Saturday, Sept. 17, were 1236. The average number in the corresponding week of the 10 years, 1854-63, excluding deaths fro epidemic cholera in 1854, and corrected for increase of population, was 1192. The present return is therefore 44 above the average. During the week the births of 957 boys and 911 girls, in all 1868 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63 the average number was 1848.

BATH.—The members of the British Association on Saturday, after the meeting of the sections, made excursions to Frome, Holwell, and the Vallis; Stanton Drew and Radstock. Those who chose the former excursion were entertained at luncheon by the Earl of Cork; those who chose the latter by Lady Waldegrave and Mr. Chichester Fortescue. But the rain rendered the trips less enjoyable than they would otherwise have been. In the evening the Mayor gave a dinner to the leading members in the Guildhall. On Monday a meeting of the General Committee was held for the purpose of receiving invitations from different towns for the future meetings of the Association. Mr. Galton, one of the general secretaries, read an application from Dundee for 1867. Sir R. Murchison said the inhabitants of Dundee expected to finish the erection of the Albert Institution by 1867, which would accommodate all the sections of the Association. Mr. Galton next read an application from Nottingham for 1865, another from Birmingham, each supported by about 14 bodies in those towns. An application was also read from Southampton. Dr. Daubeny said he had to repeat, on behalf of Mr. Bateman, an application on the part of the Potteries. Mr. Galton also read an application from Norwich. Mr. Spencer Ball said he had a letter from Plymouth, the Town Council of which were desirous that the Association should visit that town in a few years. Sir R. Murchison moved that the next meeting of the Association be held at Birmingham. Mr. Fairbairn seconded the motion. Professor Miller moved as an amendment that the next meeting be held at Nottingham. Dr. Hicks seconded it. After some discussion Dr. Robertson withdrew the claims of Nottingham, but said he trusted that Nottingham would be chosen for the following year. The original motion was then put, and unanimously agreed to. Sir R. Murchison then moved that Professor Phillips be president for next year. Lord Wrottesley seconded the motion, which passed with acclamation. Lord Leigh, Lord Lichfield, Lord Wrottesley, the Bishop of Worcester, Mr. Adderley, Mr. Scholefield, M.P., and Mr. Chance were appointed vice-presidents. In the evening Dr. Livingstone delivered his promised address on his African explorations, and the interest excited was so great that it was necessary to divide the company and get one of the officers of the Association to read a copy of the address in one room while Dr. Livingstone delivered it in the other. On Tuesday there was a Microscopical Soirée in the Assembly Rooms. On Wednesday the members were entertained at a banquet in the Guildhall, given by Mr. Tite, M.P. On Thursday, excursions were made to Bristol and Clifton, to Salisbury, Old Sarum, and Stonehenge.

BIRMINGHAM.—The strike of the South Staffordshire colliers has deprived the manufacturers of this town of the usual supply of coal, and the result is that several works are partially stopped in consequence. A public meeting was held on Thursday, at which a committee was appointed to confer with the coalmasters and the men, and earnestly request them to accept the arbitration of Lord Lichfield, Lord Lyttelton, and the Mayor of Birmingham.

BRISTOL.—The arrangements for the Church congress which is about to take place in this city, have been completed. On the first day there will be Divine service in the Cathedral, with a sermon by the Dean of Ely. In the afternoon papers will be read on the Increase of the Episcopate; Home Missions and Lay Agency; Synods of the Church; Rural Deans and Decanal Chapters; Foreign Missions and Supply of Missionary Candidates. On the second day papers will be read on Parochial Subdivision, Organisation, and Action; Collegiate Churches in Great Towns; Church Architecture and Decoration; Mutual Relations of the Church in England and Ireland; Free and Open Churches; Augmentation of Small Livings, and Queen Anne's Bounty; Social Hindrances to the Spread of Christianity; Dwellings; Employments; Intemperate Habits; Ignorance; Injurious Publications. On the third day papers will be read on the Education of the Clergy; Systematic Cultivation of English Composition; Public Reading and Speaking; Associations for Aiding Poor, Enfeebled, and Disabled Clergymen, and the Widows and Children of the Clergy; Church Finance; Middle-class Education; Adult Education and Night Schools; the Revised Code and Church Training Colleges; Church in the Workhouses; Church Music.

HALIFAX. — An equestrian statue of the Prince Consort, cast in bronze by Messrs. Elkington, of Birmingham, from a model by Mr. Thornicroft, of London, at a cost of 1300*l.*, raised by a general subscription in this town, was on Saturday publicly unveiled, on its Aberdeen granite pedestal, at Ward's-end. The volunteers, the corporation, and subscribers, walked in procession from the Town Hall, accompanied by Sir Charles Wood, as one of the members for the Borough, and Sir F. Crossley as one of the members for the Riding. Archdeacon Musgrave having offered up a prayer, Sir F. Crossley, presented the statue, in the name of the subscribers, to the Mayor for the corporation. The Mayor having accepted the statue, Sir C. Wood pronounced an eulogium on the character of his Royal Highness. The assemblage then gave three cheers for the Queen and three for the Prince and Princess of Wales.

LEEDS.—The suspension of the Leeds Banking Company was announced on Monday. The cause is attributed to the London agents, Messrs. Smith, Payne, & Co., having returned their drafts unpaid on Saturday. It is stated that the deposits and balances due by the bank represent about 500,000*l.*, and that there are bills for about 2,000,000*l.* under discount, bearing the company's endorsement, of which a very considerable proportion will come back upon them. Under these circumstances there is reason to apprehend that the liquidation will be a long and expensive one, and that heavy calls will have to be made on the shareholders. As there are 230 shareholders, it is believed the creditors will not lose anything, while an endeavour is to be made to reconstruct the establishment. It is understood that the difficulties of the bank have been brought about by advances on mills, and the extension of its discount business in channels scarcely possessing the proper facilities. The paid-up capital of 110,100*l.* was insufficient to properly support these enlarged operations.

NEWPORT.—Mr. John Frost, the well-known Chartist leader of Monmouthshire, has lately reappeared in public. Since his return to this country through the Queen's clemency he has lived in retirement at Stapleton, near Bristol. In his 84th year, a hale and hearty man, he is now engaged in writing a series of letters to a local paper, the Star of Gwent: in which he shows that his opinions have been toned down by time and circumstances, as well as by the gradual and satisfactory progress of our political system. In one of his letters he gives details of his life after he was convicted. On his way to Van Diemen's Land in the Mandarin convict ship, he was asked to join in a mutiny. "When we were within a few days' sail of the Cape of Good Hope a prisoner brought me a letter. The writer was a prisoner, a smart little man. He had been a mate of a ship, and was pretty well educated. It was handed over to me with great caution, as if it contained something to be known to me only. I read it. In this letter I was informed 'that it was the determination of the far greater part of the prisoners to take possession of the ship; that having great confidence in me, they begged me to join in the plan; and the writer assured me that my orders should be obeyed.' This letter put me into an awkward position. To conceal it from the superintendent, should the fact come to his knowledge, would have been deemed a crime, and of the worst sort. On the other hand I did not like to betray the writer. I showed the letter to Mr. Williams. He seemed to favour the experiment. 'Let us look at the matter carefully,' said I. 'Suppose this should be a trap. We have made one mistake; do not let us make another. Suppose we should attempt and be killed; it would not be a very honourable death? Suppose we should succeed; do you think that we should exercise authority over the prisoners? I will have nothing to do with it.' I destroyed the letter." On arriving at their destination the superintendent interceded with the governor, but without success:—"When the superintendent returned on board he repeated to us the conversation which he had had with the governor, and he assured us—and I believe sincerely—that he was sorry he had not succeeded. 'Frost,' said he, 'we are about to part in all probability for ever. I am happy to tell you that since you have been under my command you have acted the part of a gentleman; and mark,' said he, looking at me very significantly, 'nothing that you said, nothing that you did, was unknown to me; and with this knowledge I again repeat that you have acted the part of a gentleman. I address the same language to you, Williams.' This language set me thinking, and it confirmed suspicions which I had previously formed. 'Nothing that you said, nothing that you did, was unknown to me.' Then he must have been acquainted with the affair of the letter. No doubt of it.'"

NOTTINGHAM.—A young woman called Elizabeth Wragg, aged 19, was brought before the local bench of magistrates a few days since, charged with the murder of her son Arthur, a child only a fortnight old. It appeared from the evidence that some boys, while gathering blackberries near Mapperley Hills, a short distance from the town, found the naked body of a child, cold but warm. There was a piece of narrow web tightly round its neck, which had caused strangulation. The boys immediately gave information to the police, who on the same night captured the prisoner, who, with the infant, had just been discharged from the Nottingham Union. At first she denied all knowledge of the affair, but ultimately confessed that the child was hers, and that she had caused its death by strangulation, as she feared to take it home on account of her mother. She was remanded to Monday last, when she was again remanded by the magistrates. On the same day a verdict of Wilful Murder was returned against her by the coroner's jury.

STOCKPORT.—The municipality of Stockport are about to memorialise Government in favour of the removal of the Cheshire assizes from the ancient capital of the county to their own town. In support of the proposal it is alleged that Stockport is the largest town in the county, and that it would be a more convenient place for the inhabitants of Cheshire generally.

TAUNTON.—On Saturday a very severe thunderstorm burst over this town, accompanied by torrents of hail and rain. Whilst the storm was at its height the pinnacles and parapet of St. Mary's tower were struck by lightning, and large quantities of the ornamental stonework were thrown to the ground, and a quantity of lead roofing melted. This tower, which is considered the handsomest in Somerset, and is regarded with great pride by the inhabitants of Taunton, has just been completed a year or so, having been just rebuilt at a cost of 9000*l.* or 10,000*l.*—On Saturday week a shocking suicide was committed by Mrs. Spooner, aged 35, the mother of three children. She and her husband, a London accountant, have been staying in this town; and on Saturday morning they left home together to go to market, on nearing which Mrs. Spooner told her husband that she wished to call upon her aunt, who lived near the railway, and left him for that purpose. She was afterwards seen upon a footbridge which crosses the line, where she stood for 10 minutes until the train from Exeter was seen coming up. She then descended to the line, took off her bonnet and other articles of dress, stepped deliberately on the line, and stood bowing her head against the approaching train. She was struck to the ground dead, and terribly mutilated. The train, which was going almost at full speed, was stopped as soon as possible, and the guard ran back to where the lady was, but assistance was of no avail. At the inquest it appeared that after the birth of each of her children Mrs. Spooner had been subject to extraordinary fits of nervous excitement, and the jury returned a verdict of Temporary Insanity.

WAKEFIELD.—Five men are in custody in this town for alleged participation in a poaching affray that took place in Methley Park, the seat of Mr. Titus Salt, on the night of the 30th ult. It appears that between 10 and 11 o'clock on that night, John Kemp, a gamekeeper watcher for Mr. Salt, saw two men ranging on the grounds. He went towards them, but they made off, and to raise an alarm, it is said, he fired his gun. As soon as he had done so he saw four men coming towards him from the edge of a "planting," and two or three others coming from another direction. When he saw that there might probably be a disturbance, he put down his gun, and on the men coming up they struck him with bludgeons, tied his legs and arms together, and demanded to know where his gun was. On threatening that if he did not tell them they would take his life; but they were at last dissuaded from further violence by one of their number. After they left him Kemp bit through the cord that fastened his arms, and then cut the cord that held his legs. The prisoners have been remanded.

WILTON.—Lord Palmerston, at the request of Lord Herbert of Lea, delivered on Wednesday to the successful competitors the prizes won at the annual meeting of the Wilts Rifle Association. In his speech his lordship made the following remarks on the Volunteer system:—

"I must say that a nobler display of national feeling, sagacious patriotism, and of persevering courage was never exhibited by any nation. Its original cause was temporary, but I trust that its effects will be permanent, and that this institution, so valuable and so important to the best interests of the country, will continue for all ages to come to be a great national institution. We differ in many things from the great Powers of the Continent. We live on an island open to any invader who might chance to land on our shores at almost every point of our large maritime circumference. We therefore cannot pretend to defend ourselves as a continental States may do, which, being accessible in only one direction, by one valley or by one pass, may strengthen the attack, by one vulnerable points, and by stationing their fortify their vulnerable points, and by stationing their a military force may think themselves secure from invasion until they can collect a large army to resist the invading enemy. We have not thought it possible, and it would be idle to colish to attempt to fortify the whole of the extensive shores which begirt these islands. We have done that which is within our means and which is sufficient for our purpose. We have begun and carried out to a great extent those works which are necessary to protect from sudden attack those naval dockyards and arsenals which are the cradles of our maritime power and the defenders of the best interests of the country; for it is needless for me to point out that if we lost the command of the seas which surround our shores and a hostile squadron was allowed to blockade our ports, our commerce, our industry, and our independence would be seriously endangered. This work was begun by the late noble occupant of these estates, who devoted his best energies to commence these operations. His plans have been followed out, and I trust that they will soon be successfully completed. Well, although the defence of England, if she is ever attacked, must be by armies on the field, it is not our habit, it does not suit our constitution nor our interest to assemble permanently under arms those hundred of thousands of soldiers who may be found in every country of Europe. We think that it would be an unnecessary pressure upon our own resources to keep and maintain such a force in time of peace. We think that it would draw away a valuable portion of the people from the pursuits of industry, and be a drain on the wealth and resources of the country for a time of emergency. We have, however, the Militia—an admirable force, well disciplined, ably officered, and animated with the best spirit. We have thus a force of some 112,000 men ready, if the occasion be required, to take its place in line beside the regular army. Well, then, the Volunteers of England came forward to make up the deficiency. You came forward with courage, patriotism, and a devotion to the public service beyond all praise, which has excited the admiration of all the world, and which has entitled you to the warmest thanks of the country. I believe that I am not overstating the case when I say that at the present moment there are from 150,000 to 160,000 Volunteers organised, equipped, trained and disciplined with officers who have made themselves acquainted with their duties, and we know that when these corps have assembled in considerable numbers, and joined in the movements which do not belong simply to battalions, but also to divisional operations, they have excited the admiration of military men, and the astonishment of the strangers who have visited this country. You know, gentlemen Volunteers of England, you well know that numbers alone do not constitute strength; that large assemblies of men, although in uniform and with the best of weapons, are not by their numbers alone competent to meet with success an enemy disciplined and trained; and, therefore you have, at a great sacrifice of private occupation, at a great devotion of time, which in this country is money, you have made these sacrifices in order to become thoroughly acquainted with the duties of your profession—your honourable profession, for so I will call it. You have by your perseverance, by your constant attention to your duties, made yourselves masters of all those movements which belong to separate battalions, and also to collections of battalions in brigades and divisions. You have have also well thought that it is one thing to meet and another to kill an enemy. To move to meet an enemy without being able to bring him down is only getting nearer to danger yourselves. There is, however, no fear that those who have so well exhibited their skill to-day and yesterday will neglect a practice as necessary almost as your drill, and even your battalion and divisional exercises. The people of this island have in all times been famous as marksmen, and in the days of old when war was carried on, I will not say with less deadly, but with more clumsy weapons, such as bows and arrows, the British archer was celebrated in every battle-field of Europe in which he was engaged, and his skill was shown from the slaughter which he made of his opponents. Well, gentlemen, that keen eye, that strong arm which so distinguished your ancestors is not wanting to you. This day you have given ample proofs of your skill in the weapon which is placed in your hands. You have proved yourselves worthy descendants of worthy ancestors, equally ready to defend your shores from attack, and, if need be, to vindicate the honour of your country wherever your services may be required."

THE BELFAST RIOTS.—The Belfast Whig states that the special commission of assize will be held in Belfast in the last week of the present month or the first week in October for the trial of those charged with offences arising out of the recent riots. It has been stated that Chief Justice Lefroy and Chief Justice Monahan would be the presiding judges, but it now appears that the judges will be Baron Deasy and Judge Christian. The ship carpenters last week struck work because their employers would not dismiss some Roman Catholic fellow-workmen, who were alleged to have played the part of spies. On Monday, however, they returned to their labour, as they were assured that their suspicions were unfounded.

THE FORTHCOMING PRIZE FIGHT.—The fight between Mace and Coburn for 500*l.* a side, is now adjusted. The last deposit of 50*l.* a-side was on Tuesday subscribed by the backers of the men, and has since been handed over to the final stakeholder. The fight is to take place on Tuesday, October 4, and the articles of agreement state that it is to take place in Ireland. The men, who have been in training under the surveillance of professionals, have recently shifted their quarters, to prevent police interference prior to the day of fighting. Mace is to hand 100*l.* over to Coburn towards his expenses in coming from America to fight. In betting, Coburn is now the favourite

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT: The Hatton Garden Murder.—Henry Wilkinson, mason, 30, was charged with the murder of his wife. It will be remembered that the prisoner and his wife lived in the neighbourhood of Hatton Garden, and that some quarrel having arisen between them, the prisoner when in a state of drunkenness went into the room where his wife was sleeping, dragged her out of bed and inflicted upon her such injuries that she died very shortly afterwards. The jury returned a verdict of manslaughter, and the prisoner was sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment. Attempted Murder in Leicester Square.—John Williams, a saddler, was charged with wounding his wife with intent to murder her, and in a second count with intent to do her grievous bodily harm. The act was committed on the 25th August, in Leicester Square, where the prisoner found her walking with a man. The prosecutrix, according to her own admission, had for some time been living a very profligate life, and had given the prisoner great provocation. The jury found him guilty of unlawfully wounding, and he was sentenced to three months' imprisonment. Infringement of the Lunacy Act.—Mr. Henry Wilkins, a surgeon, residing at Ealing, surrendered to take his trial on the charge of having undertaken, without a licence from the Commissioners of Lunacy, the care of a female lunatic. It was shown that his treatment had been perfectly proper and humane, the only point being as to his infringement of the law. The jury found him guilty, and he was ordered to enter into his recognisances to appear next session to receive judgment.

Obituary.

VISCOUNTESS HARDINGE died on the 15th inst. at South Park, Penshurst, having been confined on the 1st inst. She was the second and youngest daughter of the Earl of Lucan, by Lady Anne Brudenell, sixth daughter of the late Earl of Cardigan. She married the second Lord Hardinge in 1856, and leaves a numerous family.

THE COUNTESS DOWAGER OF EFFINGHAM died at Brighton on the 17th inst., in her 89th year. She was the eldest daughter of the third Earl of Rosebery by his second wife, the only daughter of Sir Francis Vincent. She was born in 1776, and married in 1800 the first Earl of Effingham, who died in 1845. Her ladyship was married a second time, in 1858, to Mr. Thomas Holmes.

MAJOR-GENERAL CRAWFORD died at Jersey on the 17th inst. He entered the Royal Artillery in 1803, and served in the lines in front of Sobral, in Portugal, in 1809, at the capture of Genoa in 1814, and subsequently in the American war, including the taking of Washington and the engagements before New Orleans. He attained the rank of Major-General in 1851.

CAPTAIN SPEKE, whose death cast such a gloom over the meeting of the British Association at Bath last week, was the second son of Mr. William Speke, of Jordans, in Somersetshire. He was born in 1827, and was educated in one of the county grammar schools. Having entered the Indian army he was present at most of the engagements under Lord Gough in the Punjaub, and served subsequently under Lord Clyde in the suppression of the Indian mutiny. His adventures as a hunter and scientific explorer in Somali land and other parts of Africa in 1854-5, in company with Captain Burton, are familiar to the readers of "Blackwood." From Africa he went to the Crimea as a volunteer in the Turkish Contingent. He had a desire to explore the fauna of the Caucasus, but abandoned the idea on receiving an invitation to rejoin Captain Burton in another African expedition. In 1858, when Captain Burton was sick at Kazeh, Captain Speke having heard of the lake Victoria N'yanza from some Arab merchants, determined to reach it. Finding that its southern extremity was on the high plateau land between 3000 and 4000 feet above the sea, and that the waters of this lake were fresh, he was convinced that this body of water must be the great southernmost reservoir out of which the White or Main Nile flowed at its northern end. Accompanied by Captain Grant—one of the heroes of the Indian mutiny—he explored the country in the summer of 1858. In the spring of 1859, Captains Speke and Grant went out again and traced the Nile to the Victoria N'yanza lake, thus solving a problem which had puzzled the world for 3000 years. Homer spoke of the Nile whose sources were unknown; Herodotus confessed himself unable to solve the mystery; Alexander the Great, and Nero, both were baffled in the search. It is hardly necessary to mention the enthusiastic reception given to Captain Speke on his return to this country. He was the lion of the season. He was received by the Royal Geographical Society at one of their most crowded meetings, held out of their regular session, with the heartiest welcome. "Even the sills of the windows facing the courtyard," said the reports of the day, "had their clusters of visitors, straining eye and ear to see the men who had solved the great geographical problem of past ages," and Sir Roderick Murchison, in presenting Captains Speke and Grant to the assembly, spoke of their enterprise and its important results in terms which drew hearty cheers from those who heard him. For this discovery Captain Speke obtained the medal of the Royal Geographical Society. The Queen congratulated Sir Roderick Murchison on the success of the expedition, towards which the Government contributed the necessary funds, and the Prince of Wales attended Captain Speke's narrative of his travels at the Royal Institution. The King of Italy ordered gold medals to be forwarded to the explorers, on which the motto was "Honor a Nilo," and the letter of the Italian Minister accompanying the gift was couched in such graceful terms that Sir Roderick Murchison designated it as "worthy of the country which reared a Columbus." Captain Speke's county was not slow to recognise his merits; and Sir William Miles, the senior member for the county, brought forward the subject in the House of Commons, and drew forth from Lord Palmerston a hearty tribute of respect.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Sept. 19.

There are a few more Beasts than on Monday last. The trade is brisk, and late prices are fully maintained. The number of Sheep is about the same as last week. The demand is good, and prices have advanced quite 2d. per 8 lbs. Choicest Calves are also rather dearer. From Germany and Holland there are 3190 Beasts, 7830 Sheep, 390 Calves, and 200 Pigs; from Scotland, 54 Beasts; from Ireland, 480; and 2610 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, Sept. 22.

The number of Beasts is rather smaller than on Thursday last, yet it is large. Choicest kinds are not very plentiful, and some of these make nearly as much as on Monday, but on the average trade is not so good. The supply of Sheep is larger and the demand limited. Prices generally are lower, and a clearance cannot be effected. Calves are selling nearly the same as on Monday. Our foreign supply consists of 990 Beasts, 3460 Sheep, 482 Calves, and 85 Pigs.

HOPS.—BOROUGH MARKET, FRIDAY, Sept. 23.

Messrs. Pattenden & Smith report a very active trade in all descriptions of the new growth, at the late advance in prices; fine samples are already becoming very scarce, and no doubt will shortly go much dearer.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Sept. 19.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was moderate, nevertheless sales could only be proceeded with at a decline of 1s. to 2s. per qr. upon the prices of this day se'nnight. The demand for foreign Wheat was quite of a retail character, and a reduction of 1s. per qr. was generally submitted to on the business transacted. Of new English Barley there was a large supply, the quality generally inferior to the first samples shown; the demand was very limited, and we reduce our quotations 1s. to 2s. per qr. Beans and Peas bring late rates. The Oat trade was heavy, and to effect sales it was necessary to submit to a slight reduction. Flour was 6d. per barrel lower.

FRIDAY, Sept. 23.

The weather since the 16th cannot be termed otherwise than fine, although unsettled, with showers almost daily. During the past week the Wheat trade has continued to be much depressed, and a further decline in prices of 1s. to 2s. per qr. has been quoted throughout the kingdom, the demand being quite inadequate to the supplies. The value of Barley has also declined 1s. per qr., whilst Oats, Beans, and Peas were each purchaseable at a slight reduction in the majority of markets. Flour has been unsaleable excepting at a reduction of 6d. per barrel and 6d. to 1s. per sack. Since Friday last 174 vessels have been reported off the coast. In consequence of the very numerous arrivals buyers held back, and the floating trade was nearly at a standstill for a few days; yesterday and the day before several transactions have taken place at 1s. per qr. reduction on Wheat and Maize. Barley must be quoted 6d. per qr. lower. Paris, Sept. 22.—Flour: Business has been very limited at declining prices. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 32s. per 280 lbs. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 26,800 cwts. Wheat is very slow of sale, even at 6d. per qr. under last week's rates. The arrivals of English and foreign Wheat and English Oats this week have been good, of English Barley small, and of foreign Barley and Oats large. There was scarcely any attendance of buyers at this day's market; a few samples of the best English Wheat were taken at Monday's prices, but all other qualities were quite neglected, and the late value, both of English and foreign, was entirely nominal. Of Spring Corn the few sales made were at rather lower rates.

LIVERPOOL, Sept. 20.—We have had only a poor attendance at to-day's market, and the entire business has just been from "hand to mouth," at nominally previous rates for Wheat and Flour, and 3d. per qr. reduction on Indian Corn. Oats and Oatmeal are also dull. Beans, Peas, and Barley steady in value, but not much inquired for. Market closes exceedingly tame.

FRIDAY, Sept. 23.—There was a thin attendance at market. Wheat met a slow sale and was 2d. per cental lower. Flour offered at 6d. decline. Indian Corn 6d. lower; mixed 27s. 6d. Beans, Oats, and Oatmeal unchanged.
